Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 have appealed to this Court and the Appeal was admitted on the 5th September 1911. On the same date the same Defendants obtained a Rule from this Court on the Plaintiff and Defendant No. 1 to show cause why the operation of the injunction should not be suspended or stayed during the hearing of the Appeal. This Rule came on for hearing before us on 26th February last and as it was then represented to us that the period for which the election of the Commissioners would hold good would expire on the 1st April last we directed that the Appeal and Rule should be brought on for hearing before us as soon as possible. We have now heard the Appeal.

The substance of the arguments which have been advanced before us on the Appeal is that Rule 8 of the Rules for election passed by the Government is ultra-vires, having regard to sec. 15 of the Municipal Act; that a person authorised to vote for a corporation under Rule 8 need not necessarily be a voter qualified in his personal capacity under Rule 2, and that Mr. Stalkart, as he entered in his nomination roll that his qualification was that he was authorised to vote under Rule 8, could not be regarded as a qualified voter. On the facts as found by both the lower Courts the argument is in our opinion futile. Obviously Rules 2 and 8 must be read together and we see no ground to accept as reasonable the hypothesis suggested by the Chairman of the Municipality in his order that under Rule 8 a corporation might authorise a female or a minor to vote for it. The Munsif has dealt with this argument very properly in his judgment and we do not think it necessary to add anything to what he has recorded.

It was the duty of the returning officer and of the Chairman to apply the Rules to the facts before them and it was no part of their duty to criticise the Rules.

The facts as disclosed by the Munsif's judgment are perfectly clear that Mr. Stalkart fulfilled all the conditions required by Rule 2 and we agree with the Munsif that it is at least surprising that the Vice-Chairman and Chairman should have disregarded information that was before them to identify Mr J. C. Stalkart with Mr. C. Stalkart, the registered ratepayer.

Rule 2 is in our opinion perfectly clear. Any one possessing the qualifications set out in that Rule which in fact embodies the provisions of sec. 15 of the Act and having been duly registered as provided by Rules 4 to 12 is a qualified voter and as such eligible under Rule 13 for election as a Municipal Commissioner. It is idle to argue that registration under Rule 8 in fact amounted to a disqualification.

We agree, therefore, in the findings and decree of the lower Appellate Court and confirm them and dismiss the appeal with special costs, including 5 gold mohurs hearing-fee and interest at 6 per cent. up to date of realization. The Rule will also stand discharged with costs, 2 gold mohurs. At the same time we feel bound to express our regret that it should have been necessary to waste so much time and money over a matter which was perfectly simple on the facts.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE
No. 1652 OF 1909.

JENKINS, C. J.	HEM CHANDRA
N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.	SARKAR, Plaintiff,
1912,	Appellant,
Heard, 7, February.	v.
Judgment, 3, April.	LALIT MOHON KAR and anr., Defendants, Respondents.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), secs. 29, 30 - Mortgage by guardian without Judge's authority - Ward benefited - Suit to enforce mort-

HEM CHANDRA SARKAR v. LALIT MOHON KAR.

A mortgage of a minor's property executed by a certificated guardian without permission taken from the District Judge is voidable only.

But it is not necessary that the person affected should sue to set aside the transaction, it is sufficient if he declares his will to rescind by way of defence in an action to enforce the mortgage against him.

Where it was found that the money raised by the mortgage was for the benefit of the minor the latter cannot avoid the mortgage without restoring the benefit which he had received under it, this equitable doctrine being applicable as well to a Defendant in an action on the mortgage as to a Plaintiff seeking to avoid the mortgage.

THE EASTERN MORTGAGE AND AGENCY CO. v. REBATI KUMAR RAY (1) followed.

This was an appeal preferred on the 7th of August 1909 against the decree of Babu Bidhu Bhusan Banerjee, Subordinate Judge of Hughly, dated the 8th of May 1909, reversing that of Babu Heendra Lal Sinha, Munsif of Hughly, dated the 17th of July 1908.

The Plaintiff in the suit out of which this appeal arose sued on a mortgage-bond executed by Radha Rani, the deceased mother of the Defendants. Plaintiff alleged that Radha Rani who was the certificated guardian of the minor Defendants took a loan of Rs. 200 for satisfaction of debts owed by the Defendants' father and for Defendants' maintenance, that the bond was executed by Radha Rani as such guardian and the Plaintiff prayed for the usual mortgage decree for sale of the properties mortgaged.

The defence set up was that there was no legal necessity for the alleged loan, that Radha Rani had not obtained the sanction of the District Judge for executing this mortgage, that Radha Rani purported to bind herself only by the deed, and that the minors' properties would not be affected by the mortgage.

The Munsif decreed the suit holding that the mortgage was executed by Radha Rani for the benefit of the minors and on their behalf.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge found that the loan had been contracted by Radha Rani for legal necessity, but that in the bond Radha Rani purported to deal with the property as her own so that she was personally bound by the mortgage which did not in any way affect properties belonging to the minors, that under the circumstances the Defendants were not bound to restore any benefits received by them under the mortgage.

In this view he dismissed the suit.

The Plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Babu Dwarka Nath Mitter for the Appellant.

Babus Ram Chandra Majumdar and Chunder Sekhor Banerjee for the Respondents.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit upon a mortgage-bond executed by the mother of the Defendants while they were minors in favour of the Plaintiff. The Defendants' mother was their guardian appointed under Act VIII of 1890, but she did not obtain permission of the District Judge for the mortgage.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the mortgage bond was executed by the mother in her personal capacity. We are of opinion, however, upon a consideration of the bond as a whole that the mother executed the bond on behalf of her minor sons though it is not so mentioned in it. The statement in the bond that she would make over the permission granted by the District Judge to the mortgagee makes the point clear.

A mortgage executed by a guardian appointed under Act VIII of 1890 without the permission of the Court is not absolutely void, but as laid down in sec. 30 (read with sec. 29) it is only voidable. It has been held in the case of The Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co. v. Rebati Kumar Ray (1), that it is not necessary for a person in the position of the Defendants to bring an action to set aside the transaction and that it is sufficient if he declares his will to rescind by way of defence when an action is brought to enforce the mortgage against him. It has been found in the present case by both the Courts below that the money raised on the mortgage by the mother was for the benefit of her minor sons. It was held in the case cited above that under such circumstances a person in the position of the Defendants cannot avoid the mortgage without restoring the benefit which he had received under the mortgage and that the said equitable doctrine applies not only when he as a Plaintiff seeks a declaration that the mortgage is not binding but also when he is a Defendant in an action upon the mortgage. We are bound by that decision.

We accordingly hold that the Plaintiff is entitled to enforce the mortgage against the Defendants, and set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Munsif with costs in both Courts. We extend the period of redemption to six months from this date.

Appeal allowed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 1471 OF 1909.

D. CHATTERJEE, J.	}	ABDUL KADER,
N. R. CHATTERJEE, J.		Plaintiff, Appellant,
1912,		v.
Heard, 29, February.		ALI MIA and ors.,
Judgment, 22, April.		Defendants,
		Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs 278, 283—Suit by defeated claimant who had purchased property attached pending creditor's suit—Plea in defence that transfer fraudulent, if competent—Creditor if may act for himself—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 53—Property of greater value than debt—Relief, form of.

Where in a proceeding under sec. 278, C. P. C., the Court held that the judgment-debtor and not the claimant was in possession, Held—That a suit by the claimant under sec. 283, C. P. C., should be decreed if it is found in that suit that the claimant was in possession after a purchase for valuable consideration—unless there is anything in the pleadings outside the scope of sec. 283, C. P. C., to restrain or restrict such a result.

It is competent to the Defendant in such a suit to set up the defence that the transfer to the Plaintiff was with intent to defraud him and so in effect was not binding as against him.

(9) 3 C. L. J. 260 (1906).

(1) 8 C. L. J. 260 (1906).

ABDUL KADER v. ALI MIA.

A creditor who has already recovered judgment on his debt is entitled to show that a transfer by the debtor was void as against his own claim; he is not bound to act on behalf of all the creditors.

SMITH v. HURST (2), SPIRETT v. WILLOWS (3), BLENKINSOPP v. BLENKINSOPP (4) referred to.

When the property transferred is larger than what would satisfy the creditor's demand, the latter cannot complain if his right to avoid the transfer is confined to that part of the property or if the transferee be made to satisfy his demand.

The title of the Plaintiff in the property purchased by him was declared subject to a direction that he should pay the amount of the Defendant's decree within a period specified, failing which the property was to be sold and the surplus left after paying off the Defendants paid to the Plaintiff.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 20th of July 1909 against the decree of Babu Nikunja Behari Roy, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Chittagong, dated the 24th of May 1909, reversing that of Babu Susil Chandra Mitra, Munsif of Sadar, dated the 11th of July 1908.

The facts of the case were briefly as follows :—

The Defendant No. 1, Ali Meah, got a decree against Defendant No. 2, Fateh Ali, on a note-of-hand on 6th May 1907. In execution of that decree he attached the homestead of Fateh Ali with a tank and a dwelling-house thereon. The Plaintiff, Abdul Kader, put in a claim on the allegation that the attached property was sold to him by Fateh Ali for Rs. 700 on 18th April 1907, by a kobala which was registered. The claim was disallowed. Abdul Kader then brought the suit which gave rise to this appeal for confirmation of his possession of the attached land and for a declaration that the property was not liable to be sold for the debts of Fateh Ali. Pending the suit, the property was sold and purchased by the Defendant for Rs. 40 only.

The defence in substance was that the kobala was without consideration and was a collusive transaction intended to defeat the claim of Ali Meah.

The first Court decreed the suit. On appeal the decree was reversed and Plaintiff's suit was dismissed. Plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Babu D. L. Kastgi for the Appellant.

Moulvi Syed Shamsul Huda and Babu Khitish Chandra Sen for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

During the pendency of a suit on a handnote by the Defendant No. 1 against Defendant No. 2, the latter sold his homestead with a tank to the Plaintiff for a consideration of 700 rupees. The Defendant No. 1 subsequently obtained a decree on the handnote and attached the said land. The Plaintiff put in a claim under sec. 278 of the Civil Procedure Code and it was disallowed and the property was sold and purchased by Defendant No. 1 for 40 rupees only, his decree being for 348 rupees odd. The Plaintiff brings this suit under sec. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code for declaration of title and confirmation of possession. The Defendant pleaded that the purchase of the Plaintiff was benami for the debtor and fraudulent.

The first Court held that the purchase

(4) 1 DeG. M. & G. 495 (1852).

ABDUL KADER v. ALI MIA.

was not benami, and that there was no evidence that the Plaintiff knew of the decree or the suit and decreed the Plaintiff's suit.

The learned Subordinate Judge has set aside the decree of the first Court holding that although consideration had been paid and Plaintiff was in possession, the Defendant No. 2 living on some other land, the Defendant No. 2 made the sale with the object of defeating the claim made by Defendant No. 1, that the Plaintiff was aware of the fraudulent motive of Defendant No. 2 in selling the property to him and helped him in carrying out the fraudulent object.

It is contended in second appeal before us (1) that the case has been decided on a point not raised by the pleadings, (2) that the purchase of the Defendant No. 1 was made after the present suit of the Plaintiff and is therefore subject to the result of the present suit, (3) that upon the findings the suit should have been decreed, (4) that the Defendant No. 1 cannot as a Defendant acting for himself and not for the whole body of creditors avoid a transfer that was only voidable under sec. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, (5) that the Defendant's claim being only for 348 rupees odd under his decree his purchase could be impeached only to the extent of 348 rupees and he was ready to pay the same.

As regards the first ground, there can be no doubt that the written statement of Defendant No. 1 does raise the point although not precisely in the words of sec. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. The section was relied upon by the Munsif in the claim case and must have been in the contemplation of the Defendant although his main case was that the kobala was a benami transaction. It is clear however that the only issue framed in this connection was the issue of benami and the evidence was directed almost entirely to the question of benami. The ostensible object of the creation of the benami however being the defeating of the prospective execution of a prospective decree the issue actually raised in the case may be taken to have been comprehensive enough.

The execution purchase of Defendant No. 1 was after the institution of the present suit and must be subject to the result of the suit. This disposes of the second ground.

In order to decide on the third ground we must consider the scope of the suit and the effect of the findings.

The suit was one under sec. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code. The scope of such a suit was the subject of discussion in the Privy Council in the case of Phul Kumari v. Ghansyham Misser (1) and the Judicial Committee held that a suit under sec. 283 was essentially a suit for the review of a summary decision. The summary decision in a claim case is confined to a consideration of the possession of the judgment-debtor at the time of the attachment: any other discussion in such a decision is material only so far as it is relevant to the determination of that essential matter.

In this case the summary decision was that the judgment-debtor was in possession and not the claimant (Plaintiff) and the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is that the Plaintiff was and has been in possession after a purchase for valuable consideration and not the judgment-debtor, Defendant No. 2. Upon this finding the suit under sec.

(1) I. L. R. 35 Cal 202; s. c. 12 C. W. N. 169 (1907).

ABDUL KADER v. ALI MIA.

283 should have been decreed unless there was anything in the pleadings outside the scope of sec. 283, Civil Procedure Code, to restrain or restrict such a result.

The fourth ground resolves itself into two parts (i) whether one creditor can take action for himself or must he act on behalf of the whole body of creditors, (ii) whether he can take action by way of defence to a suit brought against him or must he proceed by an independent suit. The first part of the question does not arise in this case for two reasons: the first is that upon the findings there was but one creditor in this case: and the second is that the Defendant No. 1 having already obtained a decree for his deb. is entitled to act for himself—he may have a declaration that the conveyance was void as against his own claim. See Smith v. Hurst (2), Spirett v. Willows (3), Blenkinsopp v. Blenkinsopp (4). The reason is that he is more than a creditor, he is a judgment-creditor. As regards the second part of the ground there is some apparent difficulty in coming to a satisfactory answer that would meet all cases. If there are more creditors and the particular creditor impleaded as a Defendant stands on the same footing as other creditors, he must plead for all and may perhaps be allowed to do so even as a Defendant, if the Court has jurisdiction to entertain a claim for the claims of all the creditors. That however is a larger question that does not arise in this case. Here the Defendant No. 1 is the only creditor and he has already obtained judgment and taken out execution. He could bring an independent suit for himself; but can he do as Defendant what he could have done as a Plaintiff? There are two reported cases which have a bearing on this point. Ishan Chandra Sarkar v. Bishu Sardar (5), Maclean, C. J., and Banerjee, J., and Rajani Kumar Das v. Gour Kishore Shaha (6), Mitra and Caspersz, JJ. In both these cases the plea under sec. 53 was raised by a Defendant and no objection was made to the competency of the plea by way of defence although the parties were ably represented. It is true the question was not raised and discussed and these cases would not stand in the way of our overruling the plea as incompetent: but is there any reason why we should do so? The section says the transfer would be voidable at the option of the party delayed etc, it is not ipso facto void and is therefore valid until it is avoided. If he does not care to avoid the transfer but waits until his debt or decree is barred by limitation, he loses the right. See Re Maddever Three Towns: Banking Co. v. Maddever (7). If he takes advantage of his legal right to avoid, he may do so by way of suit which is the most unequivocal way of doing it or he may express his determination by way of defence to a suit brought against him. See Clough v. London and North Western Railway Co (8). See also The Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co. v. Rebati Kumar Ray (9) and Hem Chandra Sarkar v. Lalit Mohon Kar (10). In this case the election was made for the first time when the Plaintiff made a claim in the execution taken out by Defendant No. 1 and Defendant No. 1 insisted on his determination in his defence in this case. He

REPORTS (See Index.)

WHENEVER A QUESTION ARISES AS TO WHETHER a stipulation in a contract fixing the amount of damages to be paid on breach is to be treated as a penalty or as liquidated damages, Courts are invariably invited to consider an array of decisions which are supposed to furnish the true test for the proper solution of such a question. But the question is and must always be a question of fact, and the solution in each case must depend upon the special circumstances of that case. That being so, precedents more often than not tend to cloud the real issues in the case instead of helping towards their solution, and the result is a growing crop of precedents often in conflict with their predecessors and not always consonant with either justice or common sense.

In Rowland Valentine Webster v. William David Bosanquet, 16 C. W. N. 697, Lord Mersey in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council noticed that "the cases on this question are innumerable and perhaps difficult to reconcile." If this can be said of cases in English Courts, the condition of things in India where the equitable principle upon which the so-called distinction between penalty, and liquidated damages is based is less clearly apprehended, is obviously very much worse. His Lordship cites the case of Clydebank Engineering Co., Ltd. v. Don Jose Castaneda, [1905] App. Cas. 6, as laying down the true principle with sufficient clearness and precision. That principle is, shortly, that the distinction is not capable of arbitrary definition. The question must always be whether the construction contended for in any case renders the agreement unconscionable and extravagant when made and one which the Court ought to allow to be enforced.

THE DIFFICULTY NOT MERELY OF ASSESSING BUT of proving damages actually incurred upon a breach, may induce the parties to agree from beforehand to fix a certain amount as furnishing a measure of prospective damages, and it would be obviously unfair, if the amount is not exorbitant, to drive the parties to adopt the very course which from motives of prudence they had sought to avoid by the stipulation. The case under notice furnishes a very instructive application of the principle to the facts of the case and it is sincerely to be hoped that it will help materially to lay at rest the innumerable puzzles which lie embedded in the decisions of the Courts in this country concerning the supposed distinction between liquidated damages and penalty.

IN THE CASE OF Dunzev v. Metropolitan Bank, a short note of which is published in this number, the Court had to consider the validity of an agreement between a solicitor and a client which made the solicitor's costs dependant on the success of the litigation. There seems to be little doubt that under the older English decisions agreements like these would be void as champertous; for the law of champerty and maintenance as laid down in the older cases was a great deal more stringent than under recent decisions which have to a certain extent mitigated the rigour of the statutes on champerty and maintenance by regarding them as merely affirming the Common Law. The tendency of modern decisions is practically to make a champertous agreement legal in all cases where it does not run counter to public policy and does not in the words of Knight Bruce, L. J., constitute a "traffic or merchandising in quarrels, of huckstering in litigious discord" which is the business of "breed-bates barretors, counsel whom no Inn will own and solicitors estranged from every roll." [Reynell v. Sprye, 1 D.C. M. and G. at pp. 686, 680]. There is really a tendency to approximate English law to a sound rule of public policy such as was laid down by the Privy Council for India in a series of cases beginning with Ram Coomarr Coondoo's case [L. R. 4 I. A. 23] and ending with Rai Bhagwat Dyals' case in 10 C. W. N. 564.

EVEN IN MODERN CASES HOWEVER THE AGREEMENT of solicitor with client for a consideration of a share in the profits of the litigation has been held to be void. The leading modern case is that of Stanley v. Jones, 7 Bing. 369, where the solicitor was to have advanced funds and supplied evidence; but even without such services a mere agreement to supply professional services for a share of the profits of litigation in case of success was held to be void by Jessel M. R. in Re Attorney and Solicitors Act, 1870. In Earle v. Hopwood [30 L. J., C. P. 217] an agreement by which a Solicitor was to have advanced funds for the expenses and to be remunerated in the event of success "according to the interest and profit" acquired by the client was held to be void as champertous; this would be so even if he was not himself the solicitor in the suit. Strange v. Brennan [15 L. J. Ch. 389]. It is perfectly allowable for a Solicitor to charge nothing for a case [Jennings v. Johns, L. R. 8 C. P. 425] but if this agreement is in any way made dependant on the result of the suit it would seem to be bad on the authorities.

IT MAY BE SAID THAT THERE IS NOTHING CLEARLY against public policy in a solicitor making his costs depend on success in the litigation and laymen may possibly look upon such an agreement as a perfectly innocuous commercial arrangement which is calculated to promote zeal and efficiency in the law agent. Possibly the Courts have in the case of solicitors exacted a more rigorous avoidance of "huckstering of litigation" than in the case of the layman and while the law has been relaxed to a certain extent in the case of laymen it continues to press with all its weight against solicitors alone. But it would seem that there are good grounds of public policy in keeping persons whose profession it is to deal with litigation from going shares with their clients in the proceeds of litigation and otherwise speculating in law suits.

WHILE THE LAW PREVENTS SOLICITORS FROM PROFITING litigation with a view to profiting out of it it does not altogether prevent their starting speculative actions. In Sadd v. London Road Car Co., [Times March 24, 1900], Lord Russell, C. J., observed "It is perfectly consistent with the highest honour to take up a speculative action in this sense—viz., that if a solicitor heard of an injury to a client and honestly took pains to inform himself whether there was a bona fide cause of action, it was consistent with the honour of the profession that the solicitor should take up the action." What the law both in the Statute and the Common Law seeks to prevent is the solicitor agreeing to participate in the profits of the litigation. It may not be very much against public policy for the solicitor to be remunerated in the event of his client succeeding in such honest though speculative suits. But that might open the door to a vigorous campaign on the part of solicitors to bolster up cases not quite so honest and to trade in litigation in their own interest.

IT IS NOT QUITE CLEAR HOW FAR THE LAW LAID down in these cases would be applicable to India. So far as legal practitioners subject to the Legal Practitioners Act are concerned it seems that any agreement with their clients making their remuneration depend on the result of the litigation would be void [1907, Punj. Rec. No. 1]. But in the case of others there is some difficulty. The illegality of these contracts is expressly laid on the ground of their being champertous but it has been held by the Privy Council that the English law of champerty does not apply to India. But where the contract is against public policy it may be avoided on that ground even without applying the English law. As the latest cases on the action of solicitors were based largely on grounds of public policy it may be presumed that the same rules of public policy will prevail to prevent such contracts being legal even in India.

LOCAL INSPECTION BY MAGISTRATES.

Our judicial system gives to the Court only power to adjudge the existence of facts according as they are deposed to on the evidence before it (Babban Sheikh v. King-Emperor, 14 C. W. N. 422, per Woodroffe, J.). But in some cases it may be difficult to appreciate the evidence without a complete model showing the property in dispute and its surroundings or without local inspection.

The law makes no provision for such an inspection by a Magistrate in a case which is being tried by himself (Queen-Empress v. Mani Ram, I. L. R. 19 Mad. 263; Hari Kishore Mitter, I. L. R. 21 Cal. 920), and the only sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure which allow of local inspections and investigations of any kind are secs. 148, 202 and 293, which last provides for jurors or assessors in a Sessions trial viewing the place of occurrence or any other place in which any other transaction material to the trial is alleged to have occurred (Hari Kishore Mitter, I. L. R. 21 Cal. 920, per Rampini, J.; Babban Sheikh, 14 C. W. N. 422, per D. Chatterjee, J.).

Though there is no express statutory provision in that respect the case-law and the practice of the Courts appear to establish that a Magistrate may take a view of the locus in quo in order to enable him to understand the evidence that is laid before him.

In the case of Nidani Mandal v. Alabona Sirkar, 9 C. W. N. 222n, Woodroffe, J., observed that "local investigation except where expressly provided by law is not advisable," but in the above-mentioned case of Babban Sheikh v. King-Emperor, 14 C. W. N. 422, the learned Judge is reported to have said that his language in the former case was not sufficiently guarded and must be taken in connection with the particular facts of that case. In the aforesaid case of Babban Sheikh v. King-Emperor, D. Chatterjee, J., was of opinion that the Legislature in the Code of 1898, in amending the explanation to sec. 556 and enacting that a Magistrate shall not be disqualified from trying a case "by reason only that he has viewed the place in which an occurrence is alleged to have been committed or any other place in which any other transaction material to the case is alleged to have occurred and made an enquiry in the case" overruled those cases (Girish Chandra Ghosh, I. L. R. 20 Cal. 857; Hari Kishore Mitter, I. L. R. 21 Cal. 920; Queen-Empress v. Mani Ram, I. L. R. 19 Mad. 263; Sudhama Upadhyay, I. L. R. 23 Cal. 328), which had held that by viewing the locus in quo the Magistrate made himself a witness in the case and could not try it. In the same case Stephen, J., held that the Code of Criminal Procedure is not exhaustive and it cannot by omitting to justify a certain course of action on his part deprive the Magistrate of powers which he otherwise possesses.

In English law the only provision for a local inspection is one which corresponds to sec. 293 of our Code of Criminal Procedure. The jury in a criminal trial may have a view of the locus in quo if it is within the same country as that in which the trial takes place and if the Court thinks that a view would be of service to them (Halsbury's Laws of England, verse 9, p. 369). It is competent for the Judge to permit the jury to view the locus in quo at any time during the trial even without the consent of the prosecutor and even after his summing up but he should take precautions not to allow improper communications being made to them at the view (Archbold's Criminal Pleading, 23rd Edition, p. 212).

Local inspections, however, must be strictly subject to the limitations that have been laid down. In the first place the enquiry should be strictly an inspection of the locus in quo with a view to understand the evidence on the record (Babban Sheikh, 14 C. W. N. 422, per Woodroffe, and D. Chatterjee, JJ.; Hari Kishore Mitter, I. L. R. 21 Cal. 920; Queen-Empress v. Mani Ram, I. L. R. 19 Mad 263; see also Satra Dulali, 3 C. W. N. 607). It is highly improper for a Magistrate to take evidence on the spot without observing all the safeguards by which evidence on which a Judge may act is protected by law. "Such a proceeding" to quote the words of Petheram, C. J., in Hari Kishore Mitter, I. L. R. 21 Cal. 920, "is not contemplated by any provision to be found in the written law of this country and is one which must have a tendency to shake the confidence of the people in the administration of justice."

Secondly, an immediate report of what is seen should be placed on the record and laid open to the scrutiny of the parties (Babban Sheikh, 14 C. W. N. 422, per D. Chatterjee, J.; see also Nidani Mandal, 9 C. W. N. 222n; Lal Behari Saha, 10 C. W. N. 181; Kundro Mohan Punigrabi, 12 C. W. N. 153n.).

Thirdly, the Magistrate should invariably be accompanied by both the parties or their representatives (Queen-Empress v. Mani Ram, I. L. R. 19 Mad. 263; Queen-Empress v. Chaudasapa Madiapa, Ratanlal's Unreported Bombay Cases, p. 854).

The question arises, can the Magistrate test the sworn testimony on the record by the light of his own observations? In the aforesaid case of Babban Sheikh, 14 C. W. N. 422, Stephen and D. Chatterjee, JJ., take the view that he can and D. Chatterjee, J., relies on In re Lalji, I. L. R. 19 All. 302, and Lal Behari, 10 C. W. N. 181.

As laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Harprowsad, 3 Indian Appeals 259, a "Judge cannot without giving evidence as a witness import into a case his own knowledge of particular facts."

"There is no authority for holding," says Woodroffe, J., in Babban Sheikh v. King-Emperor, 14 C. W. N. 422, "that a Court may take a view of the locality for any purpose other than that of understanding the evidence" for example, to see whether the complainant or the accused is speaking the truth on a certain point. If it were permissible, his Lordship adds, there would appear to be in such a case "no necessity for evidence at all as regards this particular fact."

It goes without saying, however, that if the Magistrate has seen a certain state of things and if witnesses examined before him testify to the contrary it is natural that he should believe the testimony of his own senses and disbelieve the sworn testimony. It seems to be a psychological impossibility that he should do otherwise and in spite of all possible safeguards the fact of local inspection by the Magistrate, particularly when the idea of such inspection emanates from the Magistrate himself, may very often give rise to a not unreasonable apprehension in the mind of either of the parties concerned. In the famous words of Lush, J. (Sergeant v. Dale, 2 Q. B. D. 558), the law in laying down the strict rule regarding the disqualification of Judges "has regard not so much perhaps to the motives which might be supposed to bias the Judge as to the susceptibility of the litigant parties. One important object at all events is to clear away everything which might engender suspicion and distrust of the tribunal and so to promote the feeling of confidence in the administration of justice which is so essential to social order and security."

Two recent decisions of the Calcutta High Court require more than a passing notice. In Radha Madhab Paikra v. King-Emperor, 15 C. W. N. 414, where in the course of the trial a Sub-Deputy Magistrate was deputed by the trying Magistrate to hold a local investigation and was examined as a witness after he had made the investigation the learned Judges held that it was at most an irregularity.

In Abar Rai v. Jhingur Tewari, 16 C. W. N. 426, it is laid down that besides those authorised or directed by the Code of Criminal Procedure there is a class of local inspection under which very many cases fall and for which there is express provision in the Code of Civil Procedure, and reliance is placed on Joy Coommar v. Bandhu Lal a decision in a civil case. In that case no doubt reference was made to the definition of the word "proved" in the Evidence Act, but their Lordships clearly laid it down that the Code of Civil Procedure expressly provided for local inspections and this was the main ground on which their Lordships held that the Court was justified in acting on the result of such local inspection. In the case under review (Abar Rai v. Jhingur Tewari), the learned Judges practically extend the provision of the Code of Civil Procedure to criminal trials and justify local inspections by Magistrates though in doing so they also rely on the circumstance that the Magistrate in this country has to perform the functions of both Judge and jury and as Judge of facts he ought to have the same liberty of viewing the locus in quo as the jury. In this view they are supported by the definition of the word "proved" in the Evidence Act which indicates that a Court may rely not only on evidence given on oath but also on its personal observation of matters brought before it in evidence. "The judicial system in this country," their Lordships conclude, "of which the Evidence Act is a most important factor gives the Court power to adjudge the existence of facts on matters before it as well as according as they are deposed to in the evidence."

THE TRANSFER OF OCCUPANCY HOLDING.

III

dra Sen (22 W. R. 22) and Bhiramali v. Gopinath (I. L. R. 24 Cal. 355) are often referred to as authorities on the present law relating to the transfer of occupancy holding, and they may no doubt be cited as being opposed to the view I have ventured to put forward, namely, that the transfer of occupancy holdings is regulated by custom alone and that there is no presumption either in favour of transferability or of its non-transferability.

In the case Bhiram Ali v. Gopinath (I. L. R. 24 Cal. 355), which was decided after the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, Mr. Justice Banerjee raised the question "whether a raiyati-holding in which the raiyat has only a right of occupancy is transferable in the absence of any custom or local usage in favour of its transferability" and gave his answer in the negative implying thereby that there is a strong presumption in favour of its non-transferability. His Lordship after discussing the significance of the silence of the Bengal Tenancy Act on the point, observed as follows: "Of course, if occupancy-holdings were transferable under the law as it stood before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act they would continue to be transferable as there is nothing in the Act to the contrary. If on the other hand they were not transferable before the Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation, then as the result of an examination of the Bengal Tenancy Act shows they have not been rendered transferable by that enactment, the old law in that respect continues unaltered. This brings us to the consideration of the old law on the subject and that need not detain us long as the old law on the subject is clearly and conclusively laid down by a Full Bench of this Court in the case Narendra Narain Roy v. Ishan Chandra Sen (22 W. R. 22). In that case it has been held that the right of occupancy is a right personal to the raiyat and cannot be transferred by sale."

Does this decision then mean to lay down the proposition that inasmuch as the Bengal Tenancy Act is silent on the point, the old Rent Law which has expressly been repealed, would still govern the subject? The question hardly concerns important vested rights. Nor is the Bengal Tenancy Act a mere amendment on the old Rent Law. There has been a most substantial if not through change in the law relating to landlord and tenant made by the Act VIII of 1885.

Nor can the applicability of the Full Bench case, Narendra Narain Roy v. Ishan Chander Sen, at the present time be supported on the ground that it was decided on general principle, for it was not; nor was this decision intended to be one of universal application. The question that was referred to the Full Bench was whether the right of occupancy which was a mere creation of Act VIII of 1869 was transferable and it was answered in the negative "solely with reference to the words of sec. 6 of Act VIII (B. C.) of 1869." "This is a law which imposes a restriction upon the proprietary rights of the zemindar or landlord and the ryot cannot claim under it anything more than the words clearly give to him." Thus putting the most strict interpretation on the words of sec. 6, their Lordships came to the conclusion that the occupancy right which was a mere creation of the law was not transferable. But this answer did not in any way affect the right of occupancy which was based on custom. "In answering it," remarked the learned Chief Justice, "I wish particularly to be understood as not giving any opinion respecting rights of occupancy where there is a custom to transfer them." The decision of the Full Bench case was more clearly explained in the case Kripa Nath Chakree v. Dayal Chander Pal (22 W. R. 169) in which Sir Richard Couch, C. J., said "we have held recently in a Full Bench that in the absence of any custom a right of occupancy is not transferable—i.e., that a right of occupancy which is a mere creature of the Act and does not depend upon custom cannot be transferred."

Thus it is clear that the case of Narendra Narain Roy v. Ishan Chander Sen (22 W. R. 22) drew a distinction between an occupancy right which was a mere creation of statute law and a similar right based on custom and declared that the former was non-transferable in law. But as to the incidents of the latter the decision kept perfect silence. (It is to be noted in this connection that in the case of a transfer of the former kind of right no evidence of custom would be admissible inasmuch as no custom can ever override the law.) The distinction above referred to was not altogether a novel one. For in the Great Kent case (3 W. R. 29 at 70, Act X, Campbell, J., in the concluding part of his judgment said "all occupancy ryots are not necessarily of one class. While some have high customary rights, others may possibly be mere tenants-at-will recently converted into occupancy ryots."

If this be the true exposition of the case law one may reasonably doubt the applicability of the cases of Narendra Narain Roy v. Ishan Chander Sen (22 W. R. 22) and Bhiram Ali v. Gopinath, I. L. R. 14 Cal. 353, at the present day, and their applicability in any case in all circumstances.

N. CHANDRA.

RIGHT OF PARTY TO IMPEACH WITNESS CALLED BY HIMSELF.

The rule that one cannot impeach his own witness undoubtedly originated in the duties of the early Anglo-Saxon compurgators who were chosen by each litigant to vouch for his cause (Wigmore, Evidence, sec. 896; 1 Pollock and Maitland, Hist. of English Law, 139, 140). The success of his case thus depended upon their credibility and their impeachment would have meant his defeat. But under the modern theory of evidence as a method of bringing facts to the knowledge of the Court or jury, the idea that a party guarantees the trustworthiness of his witnesses, though often advanced even now as a reason for the continuance of the rule, (Pollock v. Pollock [1877] 71 N. Y. 137; Comm v. Hudson [Mass. 1858] 11 Gray 64) is contrary to the fact. A litigant nowadays has no limited choice of witnesses. On the contrary, he must take those who know the facts upon which he intends to rely, whatever their character, and the summoning of persons known to be unreliable, or who are likely to give testimony to some extent adverse, may therefore often be necessary and entirely consistent with good faith. (Brooks v. Weeks [1877] 121 Mass. 433). It is widely established, indeed, that in cases where a party is under a legal duty to summon certain witnesses, he may impeach them, since he had no choice; (Denneth v. Dow [1840] 17 Me. 19; Wigmore, Evidence, sec. 917; Greenleaf, Evidence, [16th ed.] sec. 443. At one time a party was not allowed to introduce evidence even on a material point for the purpose of contradicting other evidence given by one of his witnesses, but this is universally allowed now even though the effect is to impeach his own witness. Wigmore, Evidence, sec. 897; Bradley v. Ricarda [1831] 8 Bing 57; Starkie, Evidence [10th Am. ed.] 244, but, as just suggested, necessity may equally restrict his choice and should lead, to the same result.

This historical reason having thus long since lost its force, it remains to enquire if the rule can find support to day. It is clear, at least, that its abrogation could afford no greater opportunities for collusion than now exist, (Wright v. Beckett [1838] 1 M. & Rob. 414) but it has been urged that if an attack upon one's own witness were allowed, they might be coerced into giving any testimony desired. (Wigmore, Evidence, sec. 899). It would seem, however, that to give to one party an unlimited right of impeachment while denying it to the other, as in the recent New York case of Power v. Brooklyn Heights Ry. (1912) 40 N. Y. L. J. No. 126, (The rule that in case of surprise a party may cross-examine his own witness as to prior contradictory statements, but may not prove them by them other evidence, obtains in some jurisdiction, while other jurisdictions allow such to be proved by extrinsic testimony. Chase's Stephen's Digest, 330, 2nd footnote), might well induce a witness to favour the former, from whom alone he had anything to fear. Such inequity would then actually open the way to coercion by an adversary, whereas if both sides might impeach, neither would be at a disadvantage in this regard. Accordingly, there seems to be little danger of coercion unless a litigant be at liberty

But a consideration of the true aim of our modern trial by jury will lead, it is submitted, to the formulation of a rule which escapes this difficulty. Formalism is no longer an object in itself, but the purpose of evidence is to discover the truth and merits of the case; and everything should therefore be submitted to the jury which will aid them in determining the actual facts. (Bradely v. Ricardo, supra). Evidently an indiscriminate vilification of the general character of a witness could only confuse the jury in weighing his testimony, and accordingly impeachment of this broad type, which apparently presents the only possible opportunity for coercion, should be forbidden. (U. S. v. Vansickle [1840] 2 McL. C. C. 219; Atwood v. Impson [1869] 20 N. J. Eq. 150; Wigmore, Evidence, secs. 922, 923; contra, Bakeman v. Rose [N. Y. 1837] 18 Wend. 146).

But it is of the greatest importance that a jury should measure as accurately as possible the credibility of the witness; and it is hardly consistent with the search for the merits of cases that the truth should be welcomed if brought to light by one side of a controversy, but forbidden if sought to be shown by other. (If both parties had to use an unscrupulous witness, both would be at his absolute mercy under the rule as applied. (Coulter v. Am. Merchant's Express Co. [874] 56 N. Y. 585; and see Comm v. Hudson, supra; Story v. Saunders [Tenn. 1848] 8 Humph. 663). Indeed, the unduly damaging force of adverse testimony given by one's own witness would constitute an additional penalty in such a case. Only some grave offence, it would seem, could justify this discrimination, but the party calling a witness, as pointed out over, can be guilty of nothing reprehensible in so doing. It follows, then, that it should be open to both parties alike, as it now admittedly is to an adversary, (Sarkie, Evidence, [10th Am. ed.] 246.) to show lack of veracity in witness. There could be but little cause for fear to an honest witness in such a rule, and surely justice requires that any deception on the stand should be exposed. Similarly any facts tending to disprove or weaken particular testimony, such as prior contradictory statements, (Wright v. Beckett, supra; Selover v. Bryant [1839] 54 Minn. 434; Hurlburt v. Bellows [1870] 50 N. H. 105, argument for Plaintiff) or interest and bias, (Dunn v. Aslet [1838] 2 M. & Robb 122) or fraud or subornation, (see Wigmore, Evidence, sec. 901; Wright v. Beckett, supra) should be brought to the attention of the jury. It must be borne in mind, however, that this evidence should be admissible only to counteract adverse testimony actually given, and for the sake of impeachment alone. To permit such facts to be shown where a witness simply failed to testify as expected, would be indirectly to bring in, because of its inherent force, evidence not properly admissible as such. (Peyle v. Mitchell [1892] 94 Cal. 550).

The view that the rule forbidding impeachment of one's own witness is an arbitrary and needless obstruction of justice is borne out by the marked tendency to modify it either by decision (Hurlburt v. Bellows, supra; Selover v. Bryant, supra) or by legislation. [(Mass) Rev. Laws, c. 175, sec. 24; [Eng.] 17 & 18 Vict., cl. 125, sec. 22; [V.] [1886]; Pub. Stat. 1906, sec. 1597 [Ind.] Burns Anno. Stat. sec. 531; [Cal.] Cod Civ. Pro. secs. 2049, 2052; [Ore.] Lord's Ore Laws, sec. 861). The Massachusetts statute, which permits such impeachments either by cross-examination or by extrinsic testimony, irrespective of surprise, but forbids general attacks upon character, is typical of the better view.—Columbia Law Review.

Where an application for amendment of a decree has been heard and disposed of on the merits a subsequent application in respect of the same matter may not be barred under sec. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 but it may be barred upon general principles of law upon which an interlocutory order may be as binding on the parties on a final judgment. But where such an application is dismissed for default or because the Court considered amendment unnecessary there is nothing to prevent the Court entertaining another application on the same matter. Apart from statute every Court has inherent power to correct a mistake of its ministerial officers and to amend the decree so as to correctly express its judgment, at any time.

THE INDIAN LIMITATION ACT. Act IX of 1908, with notes. By the late H. T. Rivaz. 6th Edition. By H. G. Pearson and B. K. Acharyya, B. A., L. B. Calcutta: Thacker, Spink & Co. 1912. Price Rs. 12.

Rivaz's Limitation Act has been a standard work on the subject. Standing midway between the classical treatise of Mr. U. N. Mitter and other annotated editions of the Act it has furnished legal practitioners with a handy and reliable guide and a book of reference. The case-notes are arranged and classified with reference to principles, and in this way the book is more a commentary than a digest. The present volume has been carefully edited and brought up-to-date. But although on the whole we find ourselves in a position to commend this edition whole-heartedly to the profession, we feel bound to notice one or two omissions which are merely due to inadvertence. For instance, the important Privy Council decision, Thakur Tirbhuwan v. Raja Rameshar, 10 C. W. J. 1065, has not been cited at all.

LEGAL LATIN FOR INDIA. Compiled by F. J. Farley, Esq., M. A., (Oxon) I. C. S. Thacker, Spink & Co., Ltd., Bombay. Price Re. 1.

This is small book of 37 pages, neatly bound, which one may carry in one's coat pocket. It consists of two parts. The first part purports to give all the common Latin words and phrases that occur in judgments or law books within the compass of 8 pages. Glancing through them we find that only very ordinary words and expressions have been given and for these hardly any Indian lawyer requires any reference to any work of this kind. The author might have left out such expressions as Ibidum, e. g., N. B., Viz, which are not strictly speaking legal terms and are commonly understood by persons who are familiar with the English language and he might with profit to his readers have inserted some important expressions which, although of common occurrence, we miss in his work. For instance under the heading Res we find only two expressions Res Judicata and Res Integra and note that the expression Res Gestæ finds no place. The maxim portion of this work which extends from page 9 to page 37 is of much greater importance. The author has followed a system in collecting the maxims which is very commendable. He has culled them mostly from the Indian judgments. They have all been briefly and sufficiently explained and the references given in their connection to the Indian statutes and the Indian Law Reports would prove very useful.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.—Rex v. Newton. Before JUSTICES DARLING, CHANNELL AND COLERIDGE. 3rd April 1912.

Jury's verdict of "guilty" set aside because it was not based upon a strict consideration of the evidence, but upon suspicion of his antecedents.

This was an appeal from conviction. The Appellant together with another prisoner was charged with receiving stolen property, and was tried before a Judge and Jury.

During the trial one of the Jurors said to counsel for the Appellant, "Your client has not called any evidence as to his previous character, and he has not gone into the box to say whether he knew the other prisoner." The Judge thereupon said "He is not bound to." That having taken place the trial proceeded, and on the next day the jury returned into Court and in answer to the clerk the foreman said they found the prisoners Guilty." After the Foreman had said that the following conversation took place:—

A Juror.—My Lord, the jury wish, if it is possible, for you to deal with the prisoners under the First Offenders' Act. They will appreciate it.

Judge.—One of your number was anxious yesterday, I think it was yourself, Mr. Foreman, to know the character of John Newton as a first offender.

The Foreman of the jury.—Quite true.

Judge.—He has been convicted 18 times. You, of course, were not allowed to know that at all.

The Foreman.—My Lord, I might tell you I have only made use of this remark on purpose to get the jury to agree. I had my own suspicion, as I asked the counsel yesterday if he would bring any witnesses as to his previous behaviour."

The appeal was allowed. In the course of his Judgment Mr. Justice Darling said—

In the opinion of the Court what that came to was this: that the foreman, who suspected the Appellant to be an old offender, put the question he did without, so far as the Court could see, letting his fellow-jurymen know his object, in order to elicit whether his suspicion was correct, so that he might get the jurors who did not think the Appellant an old offender to come round to his opinion. It seemed as if what then occurred was this: that the jury should find the Appellant guilty, not upon the evidence, and then asked the Judge to treat him as a first offender; if the Judge yielded to that the Appellant would not be punished but would simply be bound over, and therefore the fact that some of the jurors had yielded their opinion would not matter. If, however, the Appellant was an old offender he would be punished.

In these circumstances, where the evidence against the Appellant was very slight, the verdict having been arrived at not upon a strict consideration of evidence but upon a consideration of other matters which ought to have been taken into account, the trial was in the opinion of the Court so unsatisfactory that the conviction could not be allowed to stand.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—Danzey v. Metropolitan Bank of England and Wales. Before MR. JUSTICE DARLING. 19th March, 1912.

Solicitor's agreement with his client to share a proportionate amount of the claim in the event of success—Held it was misconduct.

This was an application by the Defendants against a solicitor praying that he should be ordered to pay the costs of an action in which he appeared for the Plaintiff.

The applicant's claim was based on three grounds. First, that knowing from the first that the claim was bad the Respondent, with a client who could not pay costs, had gone on with the action. Secondly, that this was his action; he was a partner; and, thirdly, that the agreement was champertous, and within 3 Edw. I, c. 25, which was specially directed against champerty by officers of the King. He referred to In re Solicitor 1 ([1912] K. B., 302, 312); In re Attorneys and Solicitors Act, 1870 (1 Ch. D., 573, 575); and Hutley v. Hutley (L. R., 8 Q. B., 112); and to the Attorneys and Solicitors Act, 1870, sec. 11. It was submitted that the action was brought, in the hope that the Defendants would rather settle than fight, and that the Court had jurisdiction to make the order under its summary disciplinary powers. Young v. Tynbee (1910) 1 K. B., 215, 235).

Re your claim against the Metropolitan Bank of England and Wales. Inasmuch as you have agreed to pay me 25 per cent. of whatever you may succeed in recovering . . . I agree that such percentage shall cover all my costs and expenses in any action . . . taken in respect of your claim, and in the event of your failing to recover anything I undertake to make no claim against you for my costs or charges.

The Defendants contested the claim, but the Plaintiff withdrew it subsequently, and judgment for the Defendants with costs was entered against the Plaintiff who was unable to pay any part of it. Hence this petition which was allowed. In the course of his judgment MR. JUSTICE DARLING said:—

That was an absolutely illegal agreement; it was the very thing called champerty and forbidden by 3 Ed. I, c. 25, which specially prohibited officers of the King from maintaining suits in order to have a part of the proceeds themselves, which was a monstrous public wrong. It was to say nothing against that statute to say that it dated from the reign of Edward I., for that only showed how necessary it was. It could be wished that all modern statutes were expressed as clearly and were as beneficent in their operation. But the matter had been dealt with recently. In the Attorneys and Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1870 (33 and 34 Vict., c. 28), sec. 11, it was provided that:—"Nothing in this act shall be construed to give validity . . . to any agreement by which an attorney or solicitor retained or employed to prosecute any suit or action, stipulates for payment only in the event of success in such suit, action or proceeding." That section governed the status of the Respondent, and he must have known of it.

In his judgment the agreement was illegal at Common Law and under the Statute of Edward I. It was illegal by whomsoever made, but doubly so if made by a solicitor. The Respondent knew from a very early period that there was no substance in the case as appeared from the letter of December 1, 1911. That meant that even after he had been advised that there was no claim he held on. He briefed counsel and allowed him to see Mr. Duke with a view to a settlement. The Respondent wanted to see if the Defendants would give something in preference to fighting, of which something he would get his share.

He (the learned Judge) himself knew that many actions were brought on the assumption that, rather than fight, the Defendant would settle. Was champerty of this kind illegal? In In re Attorneys and Solicitors Act (supra), Sir George Jessel said:—"I may, however, say, for the guidance of the parties, that the agreement is in my opinion, pure champerty, as it gives to the solicitor, in the event of success, what is equivalent to a tenth part of the property to be recovered." That was the case here, except that the Respondent was to have a fourth part. The agreement was champertous, illegal, and entered upon with knowledge of the law and of the Act of 1870. In his opinion, therefore, the Respondent had been guilty of misconduct as a solicitor.

had every right to say that the title upon which the Plaintiff relied was in fraud of his claim and therefore ineffectual as against him.

The fifth and last ground is also good. The only interest which the creditor has in the property of his debtor is his right to satisfy himself out of that property. If the property is larger than what would satisfy his demand he cannot complain if his right to avoid the transfer is confined to that part of the property which is taken out of his reach by the transfer or if the transferee be made to satisfy his demand. In the case of Ideal Bedding Co. v. Holland (11), the transferee was directed to join and concur in all acts and things necessary for making the property comprised in the transfer available for satisfying the claims of the creditor. In the case of Cornish v. Clark (12), Lord Romilly said in respect of a settlement in fraud of creditors, "I think the whole bad as against creditors, but merely as against them, and that the donees must rateably contribute to pay the debt and the costs of the suit."

We therefore set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and order and decree that the title of the Plaintiff be declared subject to the satisfaction of the decree of Defendant No. 1. If the amount of the decree with interest as decreed be not paid within one month from the arrival of the record in the Court below, of which arrival due notice will be given, the property in suit will be sold and any surplus remaining after the satisfaction of the decree will be received by the Plaintiff. Each party will bear its own costs in all Courts.

AHAD BAKSI MOLLA v. SHEIKH BAHAR ALI.

April 1910 against a decree of Mr. Justice D. Chatterjee, dated the 10th of January 1910, passed in Second Appeal No. 1418 of 1908, which had been preferred against the decree of Babu Pran Krishna Biswas, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Dacca, dated the 20th of May 1908, reversing that of Babu Ramesh Chandra Sen, Munsif of Naraingunge, dated the 30th of May 1907.

The Plaintiffs-Respondents presented a kobala for registration, but the Defendant having denied execution, the Sub-Registrar refused to register it. This order was affirmed on appeal by the District Registrar on the 29th November 1906.

The Civil Court being closed on the 29th December 1906, (the thirteenth day) and the following days, the Plaintiffs instituted a suit under sec. 77 of the Registration Act on the 2nd January 1907, the day on which the Courts re-opened. In defence it was urged that the suit was instituted out of time and should be dismissed.

The suit had been dismissed by the Munsif but the Subordinate Judge on appeal reversed his decision and decreed the suit and on second appeal the decision of the Subordinate Judge was affirmed by D. Chatterjee, J.

The JUDGMENT OF HIS LORDSHIP was as follows :—

D. CHATTERJEE, J.—The Plaintiffs presented a kobala for registration, the Defendant denied execution and the Sub-Registrar refused registration. On appeal the Registrar confirmed the order of the Sub-Registrar on the 29th November 1906. The Civil Courts being closed on the 29th December on account of the Christmas holidays the Plaintiffs presented their plaint on the 2nd of January 1907, the next open day. The Defendant pleads that the suit is barred by limitation. The Court of first instance gave effect to this plea and dismissed the suit. The Appellate Court has decreed the suit. The Defendant appeals and on his behalf it is contended that the Appellate Court was wrong in law.

It is contended that sec. 77 of the Registration Act provides 30 days as the period within which such a suit must be brought and sec. 5 of the Limitation Act has no application. In the case of Nijabutoolla v. Wazir Ali (5), it was held that sec. 5 does apply to such suits. In the case of Khettra Mohan v. Dinabashy (6), it was held that sec. 14 of the Limitation Act was applicable to similar suit. In the case of Nogendra Nath v. Mathura Mohan (7), it was held that sec. 14 of the Limitation Act was not applicable to a suit for arrears of rent under Act X of 1859. The case of Khettra Mohan v. Dinabashy (6) was referred to in the referring order as supporting the applicability of sec. 14 of the Limitation Act to control limitation rules under special Acts but the Full Bench held that the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Unnsda Pershad v. Kristo Coomar (8) disposed of the case as arising under Act X of 1859 which is a complete Code in itself. No reference was made to the case of Nijabutoolla v. Wazir Ali (5). In the case of Abdul Hakim v. Latifunessa (9), the question of the applicability of sec. 14 of the Limitation Act to a suit under sec. 77 of the Registration Act was considered to have been settled by the decision of the full Bench in the case of Nogendra Nath v. Mathura Mohan (7) and the case of Khettra Mohan v. Dinabashy (6) was considered as overruled by the Full Bench. These are all the cases referred to on behalf of the Appellant who contends that it must now be taken as settled law that the provisions of the Limitation Act do not control the special rule of limitation in sec. 77 of the Registration Act. Although the case of Nijabutoolla v. Wazir Ali (5) stands singly in favour of the Respondent and has not been expressly overruled or dissented from in any case, the ratio decidendi of some at least of the above cases must be taken as barring the application of sec. 5 of the Limitation Act to the present suit. It is contended on behalf of the Respondent however that on general principles this case must be held to be within time. He contends that the Respondent had up to the 29th December to file his plaint but the Courts were then closed and it was not through his default that the plaint was not filed on the 29th December; there being no body to receive the same from the 29th December to the 2nd of January these days must be considered as dies non and in filing his plaint on the 2nd of January next he was within time. This principle the Respondent contends has been followed in a number of cases both in this Court and in some of the other High Courts. In the case of Shosee Bhusan v. Gobinda Chandra (3), it was held that the deposit under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for setting aside a sale could be made on the re-opening day if the 30th day fell on a close holiday. Referring to the case of Waterton v. Baker (10), the Court said "The broad principle there laid down is that although the parties themselves cannot extend the time for doing an act in Court, yet if the delay is caused not by any act of their own but by some act of the Court itself—such as the fact of the Court being closed—they are entitled to do the act on the first opening day. The same principle was followed in the case of Pearry Mohun v. Ananda Charan (4), Sir Comer Petheram, C. J., who was a party to the Full Bench case of Nogendra Nath v. Mathura Mohan (7) being one of the Judges. In the case of Surendra Narayan v. Sauravini (11), the same principle was followed in respect of a deposit under a compromise within a certain date when that date happened to be a close holiday. In the cases of Aravamadu v. Samiyappa (12), Simbasiva v. Ramasami (13), Haji Ismail v. The Trustees of the Harbour, Madras (14), a similar view was taken in respect of other matters although it has been laid down by the Madras High Court that neither sec. 7 nor sec. 5 of the Limitation Act controlled proceedings under sec. 77 of the Registration Act. See Veeramma v. Abbiah (15), Nallappa v. Ramalinga (16). The Legislature has adopted this general principle in sec. 7 of Act I of 1887 and sec. 10 of Act X of 1897 as applying to all Acts passed after 1887 to which the Limitation Act does not apply. This I think is a legislative recognition of the broad equitable principle acted upon by the Courts in certain cases while ignoring it in others. Although the Registration Act was passed 10 years before the Act of 1887, I do not feel at all embarrassed in following this principle and I hold that the suit was

JENKINS, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought under the provisions of sec. 77 of the Indian Registration Act of 1877. The cause of action is the refusal by the Registrar to order a document to be registered. This refusal was on the 29th of November 1906. The present suit was instituted on the 2nd of January 1907. Now sec. 77 in authorising a suit as the result of such a refusal imposes as a condition that it should be instituted within thirty days after the making of the order of refusal. The institution here was after more than thirty days. Therefore it is urged on the part of the Defendant that the suit is barred. This view found favour with the Munsif. But the learned Subordinate Judge considered that the suit was brought within time, inasmuch as the 29th of December, the thirtieth day, was a holiday, and it was not until the 2nd of January that the Court was reopened. The decree of the Subordinate Judge was affirmed on appeal by Mr. Justice Digamber Chatterjee, and from his judgment the present appeal is preferred under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. When the Legislature imposes a condition the only escape from its operation, if escape there can be, is by an appeal to the maxim lex non cogit ad impossi- bilis. It is on this ground that in Mayer v. Harding (1) an Appellant was permitted to transmit his appeal after the prescribed period, where during the whole of that period, the transmission of his appeal was impossible, because the Courts were closed. Mr. Justice Mellor in that case says "where a statute requires a thing to be done within three days, or six months, or within any particular period, the time may no doubt be circumscribed by the fact of its being impossible to comply with the Statute on the last day of the period so fixed. But this is not the present case. Here it was impossible for the Appellant to lodge his case within three days after he received it." Had the case been uncovered by authority, I should therefore have come to the conclusion that the plea of the Defendant in this case was sound. There are, however, three cases in this Court by which we are bound. The first of them to which I need refer is Hossein Ally v. Douzelle (2), which professes to be in conformity with the decision in Mayer v. Harding (1), although it would appear that on all the days of the prescribed period the Court was not closed: it was open on two of those days. It may be that the Court considered that those two days were, in the circumstances of the case, not practically possible days for the doing of that which was prescribed. But the judgment is not clear as to that, nor does it discuss the case from that point of view. Then there are two decisions in Shosee Bhusan v. Gobinda Chandra (3) and Peary Mohun v. Ananda Charan (4).

AHAD BAKSH MOLLA v. SHEIKH BAHAR ALI.

The earlier professes to follow and is based upon Mayer v. Harding (1), although the circumstances were not similar to those in the English case, inasmuch as the period indicated was not wholly incapable of being utilised by the Appellant. The case of Peary Mohun v. Ananda Charan (4) does not expressly mention Mayer v. Harding (1), but it purports to follow, amongst other cases, those two which I have just mentioned. These cases appear to me to go further than is sanctioned either by Mayer v. Harding (1) or by the maxim on which the whole doctrine rests but they are decisions which are binding on us and from which we cannot, in conformity with the established practice of the Courts, dissent, without referring the matter to a Full Bench. Now should we refer this matter to a Full Bench? In the circumstances, I think not. It is of paramount importance that the law should not be unsettled, especially in a matter of this kind. The rule adopted by these decisions is one to which legislative sanction has been given ever since 1887 by the General Clauses Act of that year and by that which took its place in 1897; and, although the words of the Acts may furnish a somewhat potent argument for attacking the conclusion in the cases of Hossein Ally v. Douzelle (2), Shosee Bhusan v. Gobinda Chandra (3) and Peary Mohun v. Ananda Charan (4), I think there is no reason why we should not be content to be bound by those decisions. For these reasons and out of deference to the decisions that I have cited in Hossein Ally v. Douzelle (2), Shosee Bhusan v. Gobinda Chandra (3) and Peary Mohun v. Ananda Charan (4). I think we must support the judgment of Mr. Justice

Permanent tenure held at fixed rent—Enhancement of rent by compromise, if makes rent enhancible under the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 6 and 7.

A permanent tenure, the origin of which could be traced back to 1818 was held under a lease in which it was stipulated that "there shall be no increase or diminution of the rent of Rs. 17 sicca." In 1863, there being litigation, the tenant for the time being entered into a compromise with the zemindar by which he agreed to pay an enhanced rent of Rs. 108-13-12 gds.:

Held—That from the mere fact that the rent had been once enhanced it did not follow that it could be enhanced again.

That although by mutual agreement the rent was enhanced from Rs. 17 to Rs. 108-13-12 the tenancy which was identical with that which had been traced to 1818, continued to be subject to the provision against increase in the original lease.

Where the lower Appellate Court held that the presumption under sec. 5, cl. (5) of the Bengal Tenancy Act that a holding comprising an area of more than 100 bighas of land was a tenure and not a raiyati holding, had not been displaced by the contrary being shown ;

Held—That it was not open to the High Court in second appeal to interfere with the finding of the lower Appellate Court that the holding was a tenure.

SULATU DASS v. JADUNATH DASS (4) referred to.

This was an Appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent preferred on the 6th of April 1911 against the decrees of Mr. Justice Coxe, dated the 20th of March 1911, passed in Second Appeals Nos. 418 and 585 of 1908, preferred against the decree of E. E. Forrester, Esq., District Judge of Midnapur, dated the 27th of November 1907, which modified on appeal the decree of Babu Jogendra Nath Mitter, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of that district, dated the 10th of June 1907.

The material facts will appear from the judgment of COXE, J., which was as follows :—

COXE, J.—These appeals arise out of two applications by the Midnapur Zemindary Company for determination of the incidents of the Defendants' tenancies. The Court was invited to determine whether the tenants were tenure-holders or raiyats and, secondly, whether their rents were liable to enhancement. The Court below has held that the Defendants are tenure-holders and that their rents are liable to enhancement.

The tenants Defendants appeal. It appears that certain lands were leased as long ago as 1818 to one Hara Santal. Hara Santal subsequently transferred these lands to one Nitai Singh and Nitai transferred them in his turn to the present Appellants. After the transfer to the present Defendants the predecessor in interest of the Midnapur Zemindary Company leased the land to one Behary Singh who is said to have been the illegitimate son of Nitai Singh. This appears to have led to suits by the tenants Defendants for the establishment of their rights. These suits terminated in compromises in the year 1863.

The question whether or not the rents of the Defendants are liable to enhancement turns almost entirely on the proper interpretation of the terms of these compromises. They recite that the Defendants shall continue to hold possession of the lands and shall pay rent for the previous years, thereby implying the continuity of the tenancy. It was agreed that the rent of the whole land should be assessed at the rate of as. 4 a bigha, the total being Rs. 108 odd. This the Defendants agreed to pay ; and a stipulation followed that the parties should not conduct themselves contrary to this sole-namah. It is argued by the learned Counsel for the Appellant that the effect of this compromise was to engraft on the former existing tenancy a further stipulation that the rent in future should be Rs. 108 odd and that otherwise the terms of the original tenancy continued in force. These terms may be ascertained by a reference to the sanad which was granted in 1848 to the Defendants. According to that sanad the rent was about Rs. 18. But there was an express stipulation that there should be no increase or decrease in the said rent. I do not think that this condition continued to attach to the tenancy. The mere fact that the rent was altered from about Rs. 18 to Rs. 108 odd shows that the express stipulation that there should be no increase or decrease in the said jama was deliberately and purposely set aside, and if it was intended that this sum of Rs. 108 odd should be fixed in perpetuity, it is strange that the stipulation which appears in the former sanad was not repeated in the subsequent compromise. Nor do I think the stipulation that the parties should conduct themselves in accordance with the compromise justifies the conclusion that they intended to fix the rent in perpetuity. When land is leased to a tenant at a certain rate of rent there is no breach of the contract if the landlord subsequently sues to have the rent enhanced according to law. In my opinion the decision of the learned District Judge that the rent was not fixed in perpetuity is correct. Reliance has been placed on the two cases of Robert Watson & Co., Ltd. v. Radha Nath Singh (2), Ramdayal Giri v. Midnapore Zemindary Co., Ltd. (3). But these cases seem to me quite distinguishable. In the first there was the important fact, that the rent fixed for the land had never been altered. This makes the case entirely different from the one now before me. In the second case also the same rate of rent had prevailed for over 60 years and there had been several assessments on additional areas at the rate that had been fixed originally. But here there was a second assessment and in that the original rate of rent was not adhered to.

As regards the second question whether the Defendants are tenure-holders or raiyats, that depends principally on the question for what purpose the tenancy was created. I have been much impressed by the argument of the learned Counsel for the Appellants, drawn from various documents showing how the parties concerned have dealt with these lands, that it was created for the purpose of cultivation. The sanad of 1848 to which I have already referred recites, that Hara Santal reclaimed the land. The lease granted to Behari Singh by the Plaintiffs' predecessor also stipulates that he should cultivate the land as jote. There are also road-cess returns filed by the Plaintiffs' predecessors in interest which describe the Defendants as raiyats, although it was against his pecuniary interest so to describe them. If I were sitting here to dispose of this case as a Court of first instance I think I should find considerable difficulty in holding, as the learned District Judge has held, that the Defendants are tenure-holders. But it is not open to me to interfere in second appeal with the decision of the learned District Judge on this point. He refers to the presumption arising from the extent of the land and says that in his opinion the Respondents have entirely failed to rebut that presumption. This is a conclusion, based on the evidence before him, which does not depend on the proper interpretation of any document or on anything of that kind. It is an inference of fact drawn from facts proved before him.

It has been stated in the case of Ramdayal Giri v. Midnapore Zemindary Co., Ltd. (3) to which I have already referred that it was laid down by the Full Bench in the case of Sulatu Dass v. Jadunath Dass (4) that a question as to the nature of a tenancy is a question of law. But I do not think that it was the intention of the Full Bench in that case to lay down that when a question arises as to the nature of a tenancy all questions of fact which are necessary for the decision of that point can be dealt with in second appeal. In that case the parties apparently went to trial on the footing that the Defendants were tenants-at-will and the case was referred to the Full Bench on that assumption.

But on looking at the pleadings of the Plaintiff it was found that the Plaintiff's case was that the Defendants were not tenants-at-will but yearly tenants. No doubt this Court in second appeal can go into a question of that kind when the findings of fact in favour of the Plaintiff are entirely opposed to his own allegations in the Plaint. But I do not think that that case is an authority for holding that sec. 100 of the Civil Procedure Code has no application where the question for decision is the nature of the tenancy.

I do not think that I can interfere with the learned District Judge's finding that the Defendants have failed to show that the tenancy in its origin had been for the purpose of cultivation and have also failed to rebut the presumption arising from the extent of the land.

The appeals are dismissed with costs.

JENKINS, C. J.—These appeals arise out of a proceeding under sec. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the only point, as the appeals have been presented to us by the learned advocates on both sides, is whether the Appellant before us is a tenure-holder or a raiyat holding at fixed rates, and if a tenure-holder whether he is a permanent tenure-holder or not, and whether his rent is liable to enhancement during the continuance of his tenure. The case came in the first instance before a Subordinate Judge who decided that the present Appellant was a raiyat holding at fixed rates. On appeal to the District Judge it was held that he was a tenure-holder and his rent was liable to enhancement. On Second Appeal it was held by Mr. Justice Coxe that he was not in a position to interfere with the decision of the lower Appellate Court, though the inclination of his mind obviously was in favour of holding that the present Appellant was not a tenure-holder but a raiyat. From his judgment the present appeals have been preferred.

We agree with Mr. Justice Coxe that the Appellant before us must be taken to be a tenure-holder. He is one to whom the presumption for which provision is made in sub-sec. (5) of sec. 5 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies, and we think there is no sufficient ground for us in Second Appeal to interfere with the conclusion of the lower Appellate Court that the presumption in favour of the present Appellant being a tenure-holder has not been displaced by the contrary being shown. The only question then that remains is whether he is a permanent tenure-holder or not and whether his rent is liable to enhancement. It has not been suggested before us that he is not a permanent tenure-holder, and it is therefore unnecessary to discuss that point any further. The only contest is whether his rent is liable to enhancement. Now, the tenure is traced back at least to 1818 and it is possible that the benefit of sec. 6 of the Bengal Tenancy Act might have been claimed in view of the decision in Ananda Chandra v. Kunjo Behari (1). But that point has not been made before us, so all we have to consider is whether the original tenure was not one in which the rent was not enhanceable. Our attention has been drawn to Ex. D which is admitted to embody the terms under which the tenure was held from 1848 and possibly before, and there is here a distinct provision, though it is omitted from the translation to the effect that "there shall be no increase or diminution of the above rent," that is the rent of Rs. 17 sicca. Though that was the rent then fixed, and there was that provision in it, still as a result of litigation, and possibly to buy peace, the Mohant entered into an arrangement with the zemindars that if they restored him to the right to which he was entitled, he was quite willing to pay the rent of Rs. 108-13-12. Apparently that was the arrangement, and the question is whether this increased rent disturbed the provision against increase, to which I have referred—whether the tenancy was thenceforth a new one. Dr. Rash Behary Ghosh felt, and I think rightly felt, that he must contend that the holding was not on the old terms, that after that solenamah decree there was a fresh start in all respects, and it is on that basis that he has addressed us. But there is a finding of the District Judge that the tenancy is identical with that granted to Hara Santal. But he thought it a sufficient answer to the contention that there should be no enhancement, to say that Hara Santal's rent was Rs. 18, and that by compromise of 1863 the rent was raised to Rs. 108; and that a rental which had been once enhanced could be enhanced again.

Dr. Ghosh candidly told us that he could not present to Court that line of argument, and obviously he was well advised in that. If it be that the present tenancy is identical with that granted to Hara Santal, it was subject to that provision against increase, to which I have referred: and, the effect of the whole arrangement merely is that in place of Rs. 17 sicca Rs. 108 is the rental, but subject to the same provisions as were contained in the original tenancy. This seems to have been recognised by the parties themselves, because there has been a long tenure from 1818 down to 1907 with this one single enhancement by mutual agreement and as the price of peace.

In our opinion, therefore, the judgments of Mr. Justice Coxe must be modified, and we determine that the Appellant before us is a permanent tenure-holder of the 435 bighas odd and that his rent of Rs. 108-13-12 gds. payable in respect thereof is not liable to enhancement during the continuance of his tenure. In respect of the other lands we don't interfere with the judgments under appeal.

Each party will bear his own costs in the first Court and in the lower Appellate Court. The Appellant is entitled to his costs in the High Court (one set of costs).

Decree modified.

SARKAR, Plaintiff,

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885)—Landlord and tenant, relationship of, denial of—Suit for rent, dismissal of—Appeal by the landlord, withdrawal—Suit for ejectment, if maintainable.

Mere denial of the relationship of landlord and tenant does not, in cases to which the Bengal Tenancy Act applies, work any forfeiture unless the denial has been given effect to by a decree of the Court.

Where the landlord, after the dismissal of his suit for rent upon the tenant's denial of the relationship of landlord and tenant, appealed, and pending the appeal withdrew the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit and then brought an action to eject the tenant on the ground of such denial by the tenant,

Held—That the only decree that could be relied on here was a decree which ceased to exist owing to the withdrawal of the suit by the landlord and so the denial of the relationship of landlord and tenant by the tenant would not work any forfeiture as it was not given effect to by a decree of the Court.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 11th of October 1909 against a decree of Babu Bidhu Bhusan Banerjee, Subordinate Judge of Hughly, dated the 17th of August 1909, affirming that of Babu Hemendra Lal Sinha, Munsif of Hughly, dated the 14th of December 1908.

The facts of this case material to this report are as follows :—

Plaintiff alleged that he had let out certain lands to Defendant at a yearly rent of Rs. 7-12; as Defendant failed to pay rent to Plaintiff, he brought a rent suit against Defendant for the arrears due from 1310 to Pous kist of 1313, B. S.; Defendant denied relationship of landlord and tenant with Plaintiff and Plaintiff's rent suit was dismissed. Plaintiff preferred an appeal, but on the 17th March 1908 withdrew the suit with permission to bring a fresh suit. Then Plaintiff brought the present suit on the 15th April 1908 for declaration of title and khas possession. Defendant by his written statement denied that Plaintiff ever had jamai right in the lands in suit or that Plaintiff had any possession in them or that Defendant took settlement of these lands from Plaintiff. The first Court found that Plaintiff had jamai right in the lands in suit and the suit was not barred by limitation and that Plaintiff was entitled to get khas possession of these lands as Defendant had denied relationship of landlord and tenant with Plaintiff in the rent suit which had been dismissed in consequence of that denial. Defendant preferred an appeal which was dismissed by the lower Appellate Court.

Against this decision, Defendant preferred this second appeal.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen for the Appellant.

Babu Dwarka Nath Mitter for the Respondent.

This appeal raises a very short, and, we think, a very simple question.

The Plaintiff sued the Defendant for the rent of a holding. The Defendant denied that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed. This defence prevailed, and the suit was dismissed. The Plaintiff then appealed and in the appellate stage was allowed to withdraw his suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. He then brought the present action to eject the Defendant on the ground that in the former suit he had denied the relationship of landlord and tenant.

We think it may be said to be settled by the current of decisions in this Court that the mere denial of the relationship of landlord and tenant does not, in cases to which the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 applies, work any forfeiture unless the denial was given effect to by a decree of the Court. The only decree that here can be relied on is a decree which has ceased to exist owing to the withdrawal to which we have referred above. The result seems to us to be that there is no decree whatever, and that all that we have is the mere denial to which effect has not been given by any decree of Court.

The question whether the Defendant can be evicted is one which depends upon his status, and the Plaintiff must be left to take such further steps as he may be advised to take in the matter.

The appeal must, we think, succeed and it is allowed with costs throughout.

NO. 247 OF 1911.

JENKINS, C. J.	{	MOHANYA OJHA and
CHAPMAN, J.		others, Appellants,
1912,		v.
23, April.	}	RAM BAHADUR SINGH,
		Respondent.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 90—Mortgage decree—Decree for costs, if a personal decree.

A decree had been passed on appeal in a mortgage suit upholding the mortgage and ordering that the appellant who was a transferee of a portion of the mortgaged property from the mortgagor do pay costs to the respondents, the mortgagee. The mortgaged property having been sold in execution of the decree, the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree for costs against the transferee personally :

Held—On a construction of the decree, that there was a personal liability imposed by the decree.

In such cases regard should be had to what decree was passed rather than to what decree ought to have been passed.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 26th of May 1911 against an order of W. H. Vincent, Esq., District Judge of Mozufferpore, dated the 19th of December 1910, reversing an order of Babu Lal Behari Bhaduri, 1st Munsif of Mozufferpore, dated the 15th of August 1910.

The facts of the case were briefly as follows :—

The appeal arose out of an application for execution of a decree for costs in a mortgage suit. The decree was passed on appeal upholding the mortgage and ordering that "the Respondent do pay the costs of this appeal to the Appellants." The mortgage decree was executed and the mortgaged property sold. The decree-holder now sought to execute the decree for costs against the other property of the judgment-debtor who was a transferee from the original mortgagor. The judgment-debtor objected to the execution on the grounds that the decree being a mortgage decree, the unsatisfied portion of it could not be executed without a previous order under sec. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The first Court gave effect to the objection of the judgment-debtor and dismissed

the application for execution. In dealing with the suggestion on behalf of the decree-holder that the portion of the decree awarding costs was a personal decree the learned Munsif observed as follows :—

I think this contention is futile and groundless. The decree is one passed in appeal in a case instituted on a mortgage. The decree is one and indivisible, and should not be considered to be a decree made in sections, vis, two sections, one relating to the mortgage and the other to the costs of the litigation. Learned pleader for the decree-holder contends that the decree should be considered as made in the two sections aforesaid. If his method of interpretation of the decree is accepted as correct, in that case there should be two proceedings to be followed in execution, one according to the procedure applicable to sales in mortgage cases, and the other according to the procedure applicable to the case of an ordinary money decree. From the above views, however, I dissent. The decree is one and indivisible, and should be executed as a whole and not piecemeal. The mortgaged lands having already been sold out in execution, it now behoves the decree-holder to arm himself with an order under sec. 90 of Act IV of 1892 before coming to apply for execution of the unsatisfied balance of the decretal dues. Judgment-debtor relies on a ruling Raj Kumar Singh v. Sheo Narain Sahu (1) in support of his contention that decree-holder should not be permitted to take out execution of the unsatisfied balance by bringing to sale other than the mortgaged properties. The decree does not direct that a separate procedure should be resorted to for recovery of the costs. The costs are a part and parcel of the mortgage money, which includes the principal and interest as well as costs of the suit and appeal.

On appeal the District Judge set aside the Munsif's order holding that the decree so far as it related to costs was a personal decree and restored the execution case. The material portion of the judgment of the learned Judge was as follows :—

He relies on the case of Raj Kumar Singh v. Sheo Narain Sahu (1) in support of his decision but that case follows Magbul Fatima v. Lalta Prosad (2) in which case it was not apparently disputed but that costs of an appeal could be recovered without an order under sec. 90. The order of the appellate decree is that the Respondent do pay the costs of the appeal to the Appellants and in my opinion this indicates not merely that the money is to be recovered from the mortgaged property but is a personal decree.

It might in many cases be very hard to make the mortgagee recover in the first instance only from the mortgaged property. If the case of a transferee of a portion of the property be taken the transferee might go on fighting the case up to the Privy Council in spite of the desire of the mortgagor to allow the decree to stand and this would mean that all dues would, whether the mortgagor or the successful mortgagee liked it or not, be recovered from the mortgaged property.

Following the words used in the appellate decree that the Respondents were to pay the costs of the appeal, I think that this was a personal liability under the decree.

Against this decision the judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court.

Babu Atul Krishna Ray for the Appellants.

Babus Dwarka Nath Mitter, Baikant Nath Mitter and Manindra Nath Banerjee for the Respondent.

JENKINS, C. J.—The only point on this appeal is whether the decree-holder can realise his decree for costs otherwise than by proceeding under sec. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act. In cases of this kind what we have to see is not what decree the Court ought to have passed but what decree the Court has passed. If the Court passed a personal decree for costs, then there is no necessity of having recourse to the procedure indicated in sec. 90. The learned District

MOHANYA OJHA v. RAM BANADUR SINGH.

Judge has held that there was a personal liability for these costs imposed by the decree. I see no reason to differ from this, more particularly when it is borne in mind that these were costs not of the suit but of the appeal. Therefore I think the decree of the District Judge must be confirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs, hearing-fee one gold mohur.

JURISDICTION.

No. 3 OF 1912.

JENKINS, C. J. WOODROFFE, J. 1912, 7, March.	}	HARISH CHANDRA MUKHERJEE, Debtor-Appellant, v. THE EAST INDIA COAL Co., LD, Creditors- Respondents.
-------------------------------------------------------	---	-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), secs. 9 (e), 10—Partnership debt—Attachment of property in execution of a joint decree against partners—Property claimed on behalf of an endowment—Enquiry as to whether property attached was really judgment-debtor's if essential—General Clauses Act (X of 1897), sec. 13—Act or default, if to be personal of person sought to be adjudicated—Delay in applying for annulment.

Sec. 9 (e) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act requires that the act or default which amounts to an act of insolvency must be a personal act or default of the particular individual or in certain circumstances of his agent.

Where properties alleged to belong to three judgment-debtors remained under attachment in execution of a joint decree against them for more than 21 days :

Held—That this alone could not be relied on as an act of insolvency on the part of H., one of the co-judgment-debtors when, in the execution proceeding, claim was laid to what was alleged to be his share of the property on behalf of an endowment, and that claim was pending when the adjudicating order was made against him and the other co-judgment-debtors.

On an application by H. for annulment of the adjudication,

Held—That the above act of insolvency on the part of his co-judgment-debtors could not be regarded as an act of insolvency on the part of H.

Held—That it was necessary to inquire whether the property attached was in fact the applicant's.

An objection that the application for annulment was not made till after the lapse of a considerable time, having been raised for the first time on appeal :

Held—That there being no bar of limitation in the matter, this objection taken at this late stage should not be entertained.

This was an application by Harish Chandra Mukherjee to set aside an adjudication order in insolvency made against him along with two other persons on the 14th of June 1911. Harish Chandra Mukherjee, Krishna Kishore Adhikary and Sasti Kinkar Bannerjee were three partners of the firm of Laik and Bannerjee and the petition to adjudicate was presented against those persons by the East India Coal Co., Ltd., and the act of insolvency alleged against them in the petition was that the property of all the three insolvents was under attachment in execution of a decree passed by this Court in its appellate jurisdiction for a period of more than 21 days, which would be an act of insolvency under sec. 9 (e) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. Harish Chandra applied to set aside the adjudication order so far as it related to himself on the ground that at the date of the adjudication order and for a considerable time previous to that, namely, since the 24th of July 1909, he had no interest in the property which the East India Coal Co., Ltd., had attached and his petition set out a deed of the 29th of July 1909 more fully described below. The facts in connection with this attachment were as follows:—The adjudicating creditor in execution of a decree which they obtained against the partnership attached a valuable colliery belonging to the insolvents called Bhulanbarari. Within two years previous to the attachment Harish Chandra's share and interest in Bhulanbarari was made the subject of a trust under the deed of the 29th of July. Thereupon the shebait or the trustee under the deed filed in the local Court at Purulia a claim and prayed for the removal of the attachment, alleging that Harish Chandra had no interest in the property and that it was trust property. During the pendency of the claim proceedings, the adjudicating creditors the East India Coal Co., Ltd., obtained an order of adjudication against all the three judgment-debtors. Having got the adjudication order they made an application to the Purulia Court for leave to withdraw the attachment. Leave was granted and the attachment was withdrawn. On the application the following order was passed, "as the attachment has been withdrawn there is no need of enquiry into the merits of the claim case. Case disposed of without enquiry."

Mr. Justice Fletcher in rejecting the application observed that "whether the deed is real or colourable is not material to the enquiry, for if the order of adjudication stands then that deed under the provision of sec. 55, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act III of 1909, is void as coming within 2 years of the date of the adjudication order and that deed will therefore be void as against the Official Assignee." His Lordship further observed that sec. 9 (e) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act "has got to be read along with sec. 13 of the General Clauses Act which says that in all Acts of the Governor-General and Regulations, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context, the words in singular shall include the plural and vice versa, so reading sec. 9 (e) along with that section of the General Clauses Act, it seems to me that you have a joint debt in this case. It is not necessary to attach or sell in execution of the joint debt property that belongs to the debtors jointly. It is sufficient, if in regard to that joint debt property belonging to one of the joint-debtors be sold or attached." In his Lordship's opinion Harish Chandra committed an act of insolvency. The application therefore failed and was dismissed with costs.

Against this order the Petitioner appealed.

Mr. Garth (with him Mr. A. K. Ghose) for the Appellant.

Mr. S. P. Sinha (with him Mr. Avetoom) for the Respondents.

JENKINS, C. J.—This is an appeal from an order of Mr. Justice Fletcher, who dismissed an application made to him by one Harish Chandra Mukherjee for the purpose of obtaining an annulment of an adjudication against him under sec. 10 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act of 1909. This adjudication order was made by Mr. Justice Harington on the

HARISH CHANDRA MUKHERJEE v. THE EAST INDIA COAL CO., LD.

15th June 1911, and the act of insolvency on which it was made is set out in the order:—It is that “the properties of the said Krishna Kishore Adhikary, Sasti Kinkar Banerjee and Harish Chandra Mukherjee have been attached in execution of a decree of this Court in its ordinary appellate jurisdiction for a period of more than 21 days.” The Petitioner sought for an adjudication against these three debtors and the order was in accordance with the terms of the petition. The present Appellant, one of these adjudged insolvents, that is to say, Harish Chandra Mukherjee, seeks to have the adjudication annulled on the ground that his property had not been attached in execution of a decree of this Court. His reason for so contending is that although property had been attached as his, it was in fact not his and was claimed in the execution proceedings on behalf of an endowment as not being the property of Harish Chandra Mukherjee. When the petition for adjudication was presented, that claim was still pending and had not been decided. In the circumstances it is urged that there has been no act of insolvency within the meaning of sec. 9 (e) of the Insolvency Act. Mr. Justice Fletcher did not deal with this point, as it appeared to him that inasmuch as there had been an attachment of the property of the other judgment-debtors and that attachment had continued for a period of not less than 21 days in execution of the decree of the Court for the payment of money, that operated as an act of insolvency not only by these judgment-debtors, but by Harish Chandra Mukherjee. That view the learned Judge sought to base on a joint reading of sec. 9 (e) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and sec. 13 of the General Clauses Act.

Though this view was presented to us by Mr. Sinha, he did not seriously press it, and in that I think he exercised a wise discretion. It appears to me not to be in accordance with the true construction of sec. 9 (e) alone or in conjunction with sec. 13 of the General Clauses Act to give the sec. 9 (e) the operation attributed to it by Mr. Justice Fletcher.

Mr. Sinha suggests that his case is strengthened by the fact that the debt was a joint judgment-debt, that the judgment-debtors were three of the members of a partnership and that the debt was in respect of partnership matters. But I do not think those considerations are sufficient to displace what appears to me to be the fair meaning of sec. 9 (e) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, and of the underlying principle which requires that the act or default which amounts to an act of insolvency, must be the personal act or default of the particular individual or in certain circumstances of his agent. In my opinion the mere fact that there may have been an act or default on the part of the co-judgment-debtors, which might be regarded as against them as an act of insolvency does not amount to an act of insolvency by Harish Chandra Mukherjee. But we cannot dispose of the case on that ground alone, for there still remains the question whether or not the property which is alleged to be that of Harish Chandra was in fact his, and so came within the description of his property attached for a period of not less than 21 days in execution of the decree of a Court for the payment of money. That is a point into which, as I have already indicated, Mr. Justice Fletcher did not go. In the view we take, that point is one that he should have determined, and we must therefore send back the case for the Commissioner in Insolvency to determine, whether or not there has been an act of insolvency by Harish Chandra Mukherjee. It is true that the petition on which the original adjudication was made may have referred to other possible acts of insolvency, but Mr. Sinha who appeared before us on behalf of the petitioning creditor has abandoned any desire to support the adjudication on any other ground than that on which it purports to have been made by Mr. Justice Harington, that is to say, the ground coming within the description of sec. 9 (e) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and, therefore, it will be for the learned Commissioner, when the case comes before him, to determine not in reference to other possible acts of insolvency but on this and on this alone. I pause here for a moment to say that this election was made by Mr. Sinha deliberately and for a particular and, in his point of view, very good reason.

The only question then that remains is how the Commissioner should dispose of the question that will come before him. It will be open to him either to determine it himself if he thinks fit, or should he think it necessary to direct that it should be determined in some other proceeding appropriate for that purpose. On that I think it would not be right for us to express any definite opinion. It must be a matter to be determined by him when the matter comes before him. All we say is that we do not think that it is a question that can properly be determined merely on affidavit evidence.

The only other matter to which I need allude is the point made by Mr. Sinha that the application for annulment was made after lapse of what he describes as a considerable time. But why there was that delay we do not know, nor is counsel in a position to clear up the matter in any way, inasmuch as the point is taken before us for the first time. It is not suggested that there is any bar of limitation, and we cannot, therefore, on that ground at this stage say that the application for annulment should fail by reason of the date on which it was presented to the Court.

The result of the appeal, therefore, is that we set aside the order of Mr. Justice Fletcher and send back the case for further determination by the Commissioner in the light of the observations we have made.

The costs of the application before Mr. Justice Fletcher and of this appeal will follow the result.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1882), sec. 174—Time for depositing money, if may be extended by Court—Order under, if appealable—Inconsistent positions, bar against taking up—Party if may treat the same order as a decree and as not a decree at different stages—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 47, Or. 43, r. 1, cl. money—Execution petition, copy of decree and vakalatnama if necessary for—Poundage-fee, if must be deposited with purchase-money.

An order under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is an order within sec. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and a second appeal lies against such order.

The Court has no authority to extend the time within which deposit of purchase-money has to be made under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

AMIR HOSSAIN v. NANAK CHAND (1), GULAB CHAND v. BAHURIA (8) distinguished.

BIBI SHARIFAN v. MD. HABIBUDDIN (2), KABILASO v. RAGHUNATH (9), AKBAR v. SUKHDEO (10), MOTHURA v. BANGSIDHARI (11) referred to.

If therefore an amount shorter than the amount payable was deposited within the prescribed period and the balance paid out of time under an order of the Court the sale could not be set aside.

In calculating the amount which the judgment-debtor must deposit, 5 per cent. on the purchase-money (even where the purchaser is the decree-holder himself) and costs must be included, but the judgment-debtor is not liable to deposit the costs of taking a copy of the decree or of the stamp on the vakalatnama or the poundage-fee.

The amount deposited within the prescribed time in this case being sufficient to cover the amount payable after excluding the cost of taking a copy of the decree, of the stamp on the vakalatnama and the poundage-fee, the order of the first Court rejecting an application to have the sale set aside was reversed.

A copy of the decree of which execution is sought is not necessary for an application for execution.

The authority of a pleader in a case does not terminate with the decree but extends to execution proceedings. A fresh vakalatnama is not therefore necessary for the purposes of execution proceedings.

Where the judgment-debtors appealed against an order in execution, treating it as one under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, read with sec. 47, C. P. C., it was not open to them on second appeal by the decree-holders to urge that such appeal did not lie.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 21st of November 1910 against an order of Mr. A. Mellor, District Judge of Zillah Darbhanga, dated the 28th of July 1910, reversing that of Moulvi S. M. Zarif, Munsif at Samastipur, dated the 15th of January 1910.

This Appeal is directed against an order by which the Court of Appeal below in reversal of the order of the Court of first instance has set aside an execution sale. It appears that the Appellants obtained a decree for rent on the 12th August 1909. They applied for execution on the 14th September following and themselves purchased the properties at the execution sale on the 13th December 1909 for

Rs. 99-11 as. The purchase-money was not brought into Court but was set off against the judgment-debt. On the 10th January 1910, the judgment-debtor applied to have the sale set aside under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and on the next day deposited Rs. 100-3 as. On the day following, the Court directed the judgment-debtors to deposit an additional sum of Rs. 4-8 as, inasmuch as the office had reported that the amount deposited was insufficient. Thereupon the judgment-debtor paid into Court Rs. 5 on the 13th January 1910. Two days later, upon the objection of the decree-holders auction-purchasers the Court dismissed the application as the judgment-debtors had failed to deposit the decretal amount with compensation in full within 30 days of the sale as required by sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The judgment-debtors appealed against this order. The District Judge, upon this appeal, has held, on the authority of the decision in Amir Hossain Khan v. Nanak Chand (1), that the Court had authority to extend the time within which the deposit was to be made and that it was consequently unfair to refuse to set aside the sale after the judgment-debtors had carried out the order of the Court for payment of the balance of the sum due. In this view the District Judge has allowed the appeal and reversed the sale.

The decree-holders purchasers have now appealed to this Court and on their behalf the decision of the District Judge has been assailed on the ground that it was not competent either to the original Court or to the Court of Appeal below to extend the time within which the judgment-debtors were required by law to make the necessary deposit. In support of this proposition reliance has been placed upon the case of Bibi Sharifan v. Md. Habibuddin (2). On behalf of the judgment-debtors it has been suggested that the appeal is incompetent because the order of the original Court could not rightly be treated as an order under sec. 47 of the Code of 1908. It has also been argued that the judgment-debtors had deposited within the time allowed by law whatever sum was justly payable by them and the decree-holders were consequently not entitled to resist the application for reversal of the sale. Before we deal with the case on the merits, it is necessary to examine briefly the objection to the competency of the appeal taken on behalf of the Respondent.

The preliminary objection ought to be overruled, in our opinion, on two grounds. In the first place, the judgment-debtors appealed to the District Judge on the assumption that the adverse order of the Court of first instance had been made under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, read with sec. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908. It is therefore not competent to them to urge before this Court that the order in their favour by the District Judge was as a matter of fact made without jurisdiction, and that although the appeal preferred by them was incompetent, it is not open to the decree-holders to assail that order by way of appeal. It was pointed out by this Court in the case of Bindeswari Charan Singh v. Lakpat Nath Singh (3), that it is not open to a party litigant to assume inconsistent positions of this character. As we have just explained the Respondents have succeeded in the Court of the

RAGHUBAR DOYAL SUKUL v. JADUNANDAN MISSEK.

District Judge on the assumption that the order of the original Court was of a particular description: they cannot now be permitted to turn round and assume an entirely different and inconsistent position. In the second place, we are of opinion that the order of the original Court must be treated as one within the scope of sec. 47 of the Code of 1908, and in the nature of a decree against which a first appeal and a second appeal lie under the law. It was pointed out by this Court in the case of Foytara v. Prankrishen (4), that the answer to the question, whether an order in execution proceedings is within the scope of sec. 47 of the Code of 1908, must depend upon its nature and contents. If it decides a question relating to the execution, satisfaction or discharge of the decree and if the decision has been given between parties to the suit or their representatives in interest, the order of the Court falls within the scope of sec. 47 and is a decree within the meaning of sec. 2. Tested in the light of this principle, there can be no room for serious controversy that the order of the original Court in the case before us was a decree, and in support of this position it is sufficient to refer to the cases of Chandi Churn v. Banku Behari (5) and Sital Ray v. Nanda Lal (6). In both these cases the decree-holder was the auction-purchaser. The sale had been held in execution of a decree for arrears of rent and the order of which the propriety was called in question had been made under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In both instances, it was held that the order was appealable as a decree. The recent decision of this Court in Asimuddi v. Sundari (7) does not militate against that view. That decision merely points out that in cases under r. 89 of Or. 21 of the Code of 1908 which corresponds to sec. 310A of the Code of 1882, only a first appeal is allowed under the new Code. That is so, because the order is made appealable under r. 1, cl. (j) of Or. 43 of the Code, and consequently a second appeal is barred under the provisions of sub-sec. 2 of sec. 104. But an order under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not appealable under Or. 43 of the Code of 1908 and sub-sec. 2 of sec. 104 does not therefore bar a second appeal. The result is that the preliminary objection must be overruled and the propriety of the order of the District Judge examined on the merits.

It cannot be seriously disputed that the view adopted by the District Judge is erroneous. He has held upon the authority of the decision in Amir Hossain v. Nanak Chand (1), that it is open to the Court to extend the time within which the judgment-debtor is required to make a deposit under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The case mentioned, however, is clearly distinguishable. It was ruled in that case as also in the case of Gulab Chand v. Bahuria (8) that when full Court-fees have not been paid upon a plaint or memorandum of appeal, it is competent to the Court to extend the time for payment. That principle has plainly no application to cases under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. As was explained in Bibi Sharifan v. Md. Habibuddin (2), the Court has no authority to extend the time within which the deposit has to be made under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, or r. 89 of Or. 21 of the Code of 1908. A similar view has in substance been taken in Kabilaso v. Raghunath (9) and Akbar Zaman v. Sukhdeo (10). No doubt the position may be different if the party has been prevented from making the deposit by reason of the action of the Court, because, as observed in Akbar Zaman v. Sukhdeo (10) and Mothura Koer v. Bangsilhari Singh (11) in such a contingency the Court is guided by the principle that an act of the Court prejudices no man. The case before us, however, does not fall within the scope of this doctrine. It has not been suggested that if there has been any default on the part of the judgment-debtors that it can be rightly attributed to any act of the Court. We must consequently hold that the ground upon which the order of the District Judge is based cannot be supported.

The learned Vakil for the Repondents judgment-debtors has however strenuously endeavoured to support the order of the District Judge on other grounds, and has contended that the amount deposited by the judgment-debtors was amply sufficient under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act : it has been urged in substance that the amount claimed by the decree-holders was excessive and could not be legally claimed from the judgment-debtors.

It has been argued in the first place, that as the decree-holders themselves were purchasers at the execution sale, they were not entitled to receive 5 per cent. of the purchase-money under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The learned Vakil for the Respondents has sought to support this position by a reference to sub-sec. 2 which provides that in the case of a reversal of the sale, the provisions of r. 93 of Or. 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure shall apply. That Rule provides that when a sale is so set aside, the purchaser shall be entitled to an order for repayment of his purchase-money. The learned Vakil for the Respondents has contended that as in this case the purchase-money was less than the decretal amount and as no part of it was brought into Court by the decree-holders, the provisions of r. 93 cannot apply and consequently the decree-holders were not entitled to receive 5 per cent. of the purchase-money. In our opinion, this contention is not well-founded. It is sufficient to point out that sec. 174 is so framed as to apply to all purchasers, whether they are decree-holders or strangers to the execution proceedings. The question now argued before us was raised with reference to sec. 310A of the Code of 1882 and it was held by this Court as also by the High Courts of Bombay and Allahabad that the decree-holder auction-purchaser was entitled to get 5 per cent. upon the purchase-money just like any other auction-purchaser. Chandi Churn v. Banku Behari (5), Mendai Lal v. Bhujja Singh (12) and Tirumal v. Dushlaghiri (13). We are not prepared to question the correctness of these decisions and upon the plain language of sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act we cannot accept the contention of the Respondent as well-founded.

It has been argued on behalf of the Respondents, in the second place, that the decree-holders are not entitled to several items included by them in the statement of costs. It will be observed that sec. 173 makes it obligatory upon the judgment-debtors to deposit the amount recoverable under the decree with costs. The costs here referred to are obviously costs properly incurred by the decree-holders subsequent to the decree and in the course of execution proceedings.

One of the items claimed by the decree-holders is the costs incurred by them in obtaining a copy of the decree. It has been argued on behalf of the Respondent that a copy of the decree was not necessary for the purpose of the execution proceedings. In support of this position, reliance has been placed upon the cases of Gunga Gobind v. Makhun Lal (14), Ramdhun v. Panchanun (15), Khettur Mohun v. Ishur Chunder (16) and Modhoo v. Nobin (17). These cases were decided under the Code of 1889 and were repeatedly treated as good law under the Codes of 1877 and 1882 [Rajgir v. Iswardhari (18)]. Under the Code of 1908 the position is still clearer. R. 11 of Or. 21 specifies the contents of the written application for execution of decrees. Sub-r. (3) of that rule provides expressly that the Court to which an application is made under sub-r. (1) may require the applicant to produce a certified copy of the decree. It has not been suggested in the case before us, that the Court made any such order. In fact such order would be wholly needless, because the Court in which the application for execution was made, was the very Court which had made the decree and if any reference to the decree was needed, the original could easily have been examined. We must consequently hold that the decree-holders are not entitled to charge the amount spent by them in obtaining a copy of the decree as part of the costs mentioned in sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Another item claimed by the decree-holders is the amount of Court-fees paid by them upon the vakalatnama which they attached to their application for execution. It has been contended on behalf of the Respondent that the vakalatnama was wholly unnecessary and in support of this view reference has been made to the case of Sadasib v. Vithaldas (19) and Gopal v. Har Govinda (20). These cases affirm the doctrine that the authority of a pleader engaged in the suit does not terminate with the decree, but that it is competent to him to appear on behalf of his client in the course of execution proceedings without a fresh authority. This principle is supported by the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Thakur Prosad v. Jakisulla (21), where it was pointed out that an execution proceeding is essentially a continuation of the suit. We may further point out that as observed by this Court in the case of Mohini v. Ramnarain (22), the proposition cannot be maintained that the authority of a pleader necessarily terminates with the decree in the suit in which he has been engaged. This principle is also supported by the cases of Lady De La Pole v. Dick (23) and Bagley v. Maple (24). The contention of the Respondent that the vakalatnama was unnecessary must, therefore, prevail.

The third item claimed by the decree-holders is the poundage-fee paid by them in respect of the execution-sale at which they purchased. This poundage-fee is a percentage of the gross amount realised by the sale and is calculated at the rate of 2 per cent. upon sums not exceeding Rs. 1,000. The decree-holders urge that they were obliged by the Rules and Circular Orders of this Court to pay the amount at the time when they applied for permission to set off the purchase-money against the decretal amount and as they have actually paid that money, they are legitimately entitled to claim it from the judgment-debtors as part of the costs incurred by them. In our opinion, this contention is not well-founded. The Rules and Circular Orders of this Court (Vol. I, p. 129) provide that when a sale of immoveable property is set aside under Or. 21, rr. 89, 91 or 92, C. P. C., or under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the decree-holder becomes entitled to a refund of the fee. It is, therefore, not right to contend that the decree-holder is entitled, in spite of the reversal of the sale, to recover from the judgment-debtors the poundage-fee. But it has been urged that as the sale has not been reversed, the decree-holders are entitled to treat the poundage-fee as an integral part of the costs incurred by them. This contention is fallacious. If the contingency mentioned happens, namely, if the sale is reversed, the decree-holders will forthwith become entitled to a refund of this money. If, on the other-hand, the sale is not set aside, he will not be entitled to a refund. In either event, it is clear that he is not entitled to claim the money from the judgment-debtors.

There are other items also claimed by the decree-holders in respect of which objection has been taken by the judgment-debtors; they relate to the fees paid for the service of processes. It is not necessary, however, to examine this part of the case in detail, because it is clear that if the amount claimed for copy of the decree, for vakalatnama and for poundage-fee is disallowed, the amount paid by the judgment-debtors is amply sufficient for the reversal of the sale under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. But we may add that we are by no means satisfied that the amount claimed by the decree-holders in the shape of fees for service of processes is not excessive.

The conclusion follows that although the order of the District Judge cannot be supported on the ground assigned by him, the order is substantially right on the merits and must be affirmed. The appeal is therefore dismissed: but under the circumstances of the case, there will be no order for costs in any of the Courts.

parties was Plaintiff's benamdar and for that purpose examined Defendant's pleader in that suit, who deposed that Defendant had informed him that he was Plaintiff's benamdar :

Held—That the statement of the pleader, having been made without his client's consent, was inadmissible in evidence under sec. 126, Evidence Act.

The pleader acted improperly in disclosing without his client's consent communications made to him in confidence as pleader.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 24th of June 1909 against an order of E. Panton, Esq., District Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 23rd of April 1909, affirming that of Babu Ashutosh Ghosh, Munsif of Baruipur, dated the 23rd of December 1908.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Messrs. Morton, A. Sen and Babu Probodh Chandra Roy for the Appellants.

Moulvi Nuruddin Ahmed for Moulvi Syed Shamsul Huda and Babu Kumar Sankar Roy for the Respondent.

The case for the Plaintiff-Respondent was that he had previously purchased some land from one Jadu Nath Pramanik and that, hearing that Jadu Nath was inclined to sell the 17 bighas 9 cottahs of land which form the subject of the present suit and fearing that Jadu Nath would not consent to sell the land to him because, after the purchase of the other land, there had been a quarrel between them, he instructed one Umar Ali to purchase the 17 bighas 9 cottahs of land for him from Jadu Nath. The purchase was made in the name of Umar Ali by a conveyance, dated the 17th Jayt 1311, B. S., and the price paid is stated to have been Rs. 250. After the conveyance had been executed, it is stated that Jadu Nath discovered that the Plaintiff was the real purchaser and refused to have the document registered. It was, however, eventually registered at the instance of Umar Ali ; but Jadu Nath had in the meantime conveyed the land to the Defendants, Bakaullah and others, who were put in possession and refused to relinquish it. In consequence, a suit to establish his title and recover possession was brought by Umar Ali against the Defendants, and it was decreed. The Plaintiff's case is that Umar Ali was his benamdar throughout. It was he the Plaintiff who took the necessary steps through Umar Ali to have the kobala registered. And although, it may here be observed, it is extremely doubtful whether a benamdar can maintain a suit for the recovery of possession of land, Umar Ali merely lent his name for the purposes of the suit referred to and all the expenses connected with it were borne by the present Plaintiff. Afterwards, it is said, Umar Ali was won over by the Defendants, Bakaullah and others, who are his relations, and he sold the property in suit to them. When the Plaintiff went to take possession on the strength of the decree obtained by him in the name of Umar Ali, he was again resisted by the Defendants and the present suit was instituted by the Plaintiff against Umar Ali and the other Defendants for a declaration of his title and for recovery of possession of the land.

Umar Ali died after the institution of the suit, and his wives were substituted in his place. The Judge of the Court of first instance found that Umar Ali was the benamdar of the Plaintiff in the purchase of the land from Jadu Nath, that the Plaintiff was the real purchaser and that, therefore, he was entitled to the reliefs claimed in the suit. He accordingly granted a decree in the Plaintiff's favour. There was an appeal to the lower Appellate Court, but the judgment and decree of the Court of first instance were affirmed and the appeal was dismissed.

This appeal is preferred on behalf of Bakaulah and others, Defendants Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6 in the lower Courts, who claim to have purchased the land from Umar Ali after the decision of the title suit in which Umar Ali was the Plaintiff.

In support of this appeal, several points have been argued; but the one which appears to us at present to be of importance is that the learned Judge of the Court of Appeal below appears to have been influenced in arriving at his decision by the evidence of one Haran Chandra Chatterjee who was a pleader for Umar Ali in the title suit brought against Jadu Nath, such evidence being inadmissible under the provisions of sec. 126 of the Indian Evidence Act. The main point on which the Plaintiff-Respondent relied in support of his case, was that Umar Ali in purchasing the land from Jadu Nath was merely the benamdar of the Plaintiff. Umar Ali was a Defendant in the present suit up to the time of his death while Haran Chandra Chatterjee was a pleader engaged on behalf of the Plaintiff. This pleader was examined as a witness on behalf of the Plaintiff and he made statements in the witness-box disclosing communications made to him in the course and for the purpose of his employment as pleader in the case brought by Umar Ali. This was done without the consent of his client in that case, and it is contended that under the provisions of sec. 126 of the Evidence Act his evidence was inadmissible. In his evidence, the pleader said "Umar Ali told me he was a benamdar;" and this evidence is relied on by the Court of first instance as well as by the lower Appellate Court. In our opinion, the contention advanced on behalf of the Appellant is correct, and the evidence of the pleader, Haran Chandra Chatterjee, as to communications made to him in the course and for the purpose of his employment as pleader was inadmissible under sec. 126 of the Evidence Act. From the judgment of the lower Appellate Court it would appear that the learned Judge has to a considerable extent been influenced in arriving at his decision by that evidence and it is impossible for us to say how far that evidence may have affected the conclusion at which he has arrived in the appeal. We think, therefore, that the only course which we should adopt in the present case as to set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and direct that the appeal be sent back to that Court for rehearing after discarding from consideration all statements made by the pleader, Haran Chandra Chatterjee, as to communications made to him in the course and for the purpose of his employment as pleader in the case brought by Umar Ali against Jadu Nath. At the same time, we desire to express our astonishment at, and disapproval of, the conduct of the pleader who, while he was a pleader for the Plaintiff in the present case, consented to go into the witness-box to give evidence as to facts which had been communicated to him in confidence as pleader for one of the Defendants in another case. Costs will abide the result.

legal office in England. If he has done so well even in the Army one may naturally expect that he will do even better in law in the practice of which he spent the best part of his life and showed an amount of ability that distinguished him even amongst the high legal luminaries among whom he had taken his rank.

THE ELEVATION OF LORD HALDANE TO THE Woolsack which is now an accomplished fact has for a long time past been anticipated. In fact the matter was freely talked about at the time of his elevation to the Peerage. The announcement now made will therefore cause no surprise and will surely be welcome to the people not only in England but also in this country and elsewhere. Lord Haldane has long been one of those few lawyers of eminence whose reputation was not confined to the Bench and the Bar or to the volumes of the Law Reports. Before he joined the Cabinet he was known as one of the foremost of lawyers, an erudite scholar, a philosopher of acknowledged merit and a prominent figure in Parliament. He was one of the small band of Englishmen who have contributed very much to the proper understanding of the most difficult systems of modern German Philosophy and his contributions to the study of some of the vexed questions of philosophy in his Gifford Lectures are of considerable merit and originality. On being called upon to assist in the government of the Empire as a Cabinet minister he has had to perform important and some of the most difficult functions. It is no small merit in him that he has succeeded remarkably well in whatever function he was called upon to discharge. His appointment to the charge of the Army was looked upon with considerable diffidence and, judged in the abstract, it was undoubtedly a far cry from philosophy and law to war. But after his years of stewardship of the War Office there can no longer be any doubt that it has been a success which has not only silenced clamour at home but evoked admiration from foreigners qualified to express an opinion.

ONE REMARKABLE TRAIT OF LORD HALDANE'S character is his capacity for broad views and freedom from narrowness and hide-bound orthodoxy and aversion to change which is said to mark a lawyer. His conception of an Imperial Court of Appeal which is now going to be established and the spirit behind it showed that he had a grand imagination worthy of a true Imperialist. The Empire was in his view to be tied together by the strong bond of a common justice, and a common Court of final appeal was an indispensable requisite for realising the conception. The man who has made such a tremendous change in the legal system of England may surely be expected from his new position to initiate reforms in the law in England which are bound to have an indirect influence all over the Empire, India not excepted.

WE ENTERTAIN NO DOUBT THAT A MAN OF SUCH versatile talents and breadth of view would surely justify his appointment to the highest and historic

THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE HAS LATELY DECIDED a question of considerable importance not only to Canada but, in a certain sense, to all Colonies, on an appeal from a proceeding of a very extraordinary character instituted in Canada. It appears that under an Act of the Dominion Parliament the Governor in Council is authorised to put questions either of law or of fact to the Supreme Court and to require the Court to answer them. This Statute appears to have been acted upon for the last 35 years without question as also similar enactments made by Provincial legislatures imposing similar duties on the Provincial Courts. Recently however some questions arose relating to the respective legislative powers under the British North America Act of the Dominion and the Provinces of Canada on which there was some difference between the Dominion Government and the Provincial Governments. These questions the Governor-General in Council referred to the supreme Court before which the Attorney-General for the Dominion was arrayed against the Attorneys-General of Ontario, Quebec, Nova-Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba, Prince Edward Island and Alberta.

AGAINST THE DECISION OF THE SUPREME COURT on this reference the Provincial Attorneys-Generals appealed to His Majesties in Council, and before their Lordships of the Judicial Committee as well as before the Supreme Court their objections were aimed at the very root of the reference. They contended that the Canadian Act conferring the power on the Government and the duty on the Supreme Court was ultra vires. It could not be denied that the British North America Act had conferred the fullest measure of self-Government on Canada, the sovereign power being distributed between the Dominion Government and the Provinces. Nor was it contended that the power of making the reference lay constitutionally in the Provinces and not in the Dominion Government. The contention on behalf of the Provinces was that no Legislature in Canada had the power to authorise the asking of such questions at all; that under the British North America Act the Dominion Government was authorised to establish a Supreme Court for hearing appeals from the Provincial Courts; that such Court must be a judicial body "according to the conception of judicial character obtaining in civilised countries and specially obtaining in England" and that the duty of answering such questions was incompatible with such character of the Courts and therefore outside the scope of the power conferred by the British North America Act to establish a Supreme Court.

THEIR LORDSHIPS OF THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE held that there was no such incompatibility as was contended. The mere fact that a judicial body is called upon to give opinion at the request of the Government was not, in the opinion of their Lordships, "incompatible with the maintenance of such judicial character or public confidence in it or with the free access to an unbiassed tribunal of appeal to which litigant in the Provincial Courts are of right entitled." It could not therefore be said, as was contended, that a Court by having such duty imposed on it ceases to be such a Judiciary as the constitution in the British North America Act provided for. The Act of the Canadian Legislature could not therefore be regarded as ultra vires and no question of public policy or prejudice to the Provinces could be permitted to interfere with the validity of an Act of a Legislature strictly within its powers.

THE DECISION SETTLES A CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION of considerable importance touching the mutual relations of the Executive and Judiciary. The decision has been regarded by some as running "counter to the established British usage." There is no doubt that the usual course is for Courts to decide the law on particular facts and the Courts have often discountenanced academic discussions on points not based on the facts of the concrete case before them. The principle underlying this practice is that when the question arises on the facts of a particular case the parties may not find themselves tied down by the previous decision in which the parties interested were not heard. But it would be hard to say that the practice here in question is either wholly without support or entirely against public policy. Their Lordships themselves point out that the Judicial Committee which is a judicial body is undoubtedly under a duty to answer similar questions put to it by the Crown. The question of prejudice may be looked upon as not very well arising, for, as their Lordships point out, these opinions on academic questions even when given by the Supreme Court are not binding decisions on the law. That being so, one may well ask why the Government should not have power to take the opinion of the Judges on matters of general importance to guide their action from beforehand.

THERE IS ANOTHER ASPECT OF THE QUESTION AND that was urged with considerable weight on their Lordships. It may be said that if the judges of the highest Court were once constituted the legal advisers of the Executive they would lose their judicial character and people would cease to have that amount of faith in their independence which is deemed essential for the proper administration of justice. The consideration of this question tempts a discussion on the history of the relations of the Judiciary and the Executive and as to how from being the advisers of the Crown in matters of administration of justice the judiciary gradually attained to its present position of independence of the Executive, while in America the Judges are placed, in a sense, above the Executive. But without considering these questions it may be safely observed that the experience of ages has shown that the independence of the Judiciary is the best possible security for the proper administration of justice. Anything which tends to take away from that independence and make the Judiciary to any extent a hand-maiden of the Executive must be looked upon as contrary to public policy. Though in theory the opinions of the Judges may not be binding as law, if in practice the opinion to which they are thus committed in any way handicaps their free judgment on the particular facts of any case to the prejudice of the public, such laws are to be deprecated.

SIR ROBERT FULTON, WHO WILL BE REMEMBERED in India as Mr. Justice Rampini of the Calcutta High Court, is evidently a man who is very hard to please. Some time ago, he gave expression to opinions concerning Civilian Judges which were the very reverse of complimentary to that body. But Barrister Judges appear, from the speech which he delivered last week in London, to be his pet aversion at present. "Barrister Judges recruited in England are," says the ex-Judge, "usually unsuccessful men with whose selection interest and political services have a great deal to do." He is constrained to admit that Indian barristers and pleaders raised to the Bench are invariably men of great ability, industry and learning," but even they are not "expeditious." From the summary of the speech as transmitted by Reuter, the great defect of both Barrister and Pleader Judges, according to Sir Robert, is that they cannot control the Bar. His complaint against them is that they cannot stem or check the "prodigious prolixity of speech" of Indian lawyers with their "national aptitude for dialectics." But "prodigious prolixity of speech" on the part of Indian lawyers appears to us who also know something of the condition of things out here to be an absolute myth.

NOR CAN WE ACCEPT THE IMPLICATION CONVEYED in Sir Robert's speech that Civilian Judges whose want of training in Civil law he himself has on a previous occasion deplored (13 C. W. N. ccxiii) have made it their exclusive business, on taking their seats on the High Court Bench, to curb and control the forensic eccentricities of Indian pleaders and barristers. It is strange that Sir Robert should have failed to gather from his long experience as a Judge that judicial business can never go on smoothly and satisfactorily or even with a reasonable degree of expedition if the Judge habitually places himself in opposition to the members of the Bar and assumes towards them the attitude of a schoolmaster towards his pupils. No pleader or barrister, whether English or Indian really finds it worth his while to address lengthy arguments before a Judge who is himself a trained lawyer, and can appreciate a legal argument and value it at its proper worth. A legal argument on the part of a pleader or barrister if irrelevant or fallacious can only be met by counter-argument of the same kind from the Bench pointing out its fallacy or irrelevancy. Any mere heroic remedy habitually applied by a Judge would not only lead to loss of dignity on the part of the Court but would seriously affect public confidence in its judgments. If over and above this the Judge is not a sound lawyer, such action must often lead to positive failure of justice.

HOWEVER THAT MAY BE, WE WOULD CONSIDER IT highly invidious on the part of any one to suggest that Civilian Judges as such are prepared to accord a less patient hearing in determining cases before them than Judges drawn from the legal profession. Such a defect when it does occur is surely temperamental, and may quite as well be found in a Barrister or a Vakil Judge as in a Civilian.

WE HAVE NO DESIRE TO SPEAK UNKINDLY OF SIR Robert in his retirement. Possessed of great natural ability, he served on the bench with some distinction, though his success as a Judge was marred by his impatience of other people's opinion and excessive faith in his own. But Sir Robert is impulsive and notwithstanding his long judicial experience he would give expression to opinions without duly weighing them. In his last speech he has done justice neither to the Bar nor to his former colleagues whether of the Indian Civil Service or outside it. His remarks are specially unfortunate as they seem to be coloured by prejudice and personal dislike.

BABU SATYA KANTA BANDOPADHYAY, PLEADER, Faridpur, made a reference to the High Court, through the District Judge of Faridpur, enquiring "whether it is permissible for two or more pleaders of the mofussil Courts to start a joint office for the conduct of their professional business on the lines adopted by the Attorneys and Solicitors of the High Court in strict compliance with the provisions of the Legal Practitioners Act and the Rules made thereunder." We have received from Babu Satya Kanta Bandopadhyay a copy of the reply sent by the Registrar of the High Court, Appellate Side, and publish it below for general information. As might have been expected, the reply states, "the High Court have no objection to two or more pleaders of the mofussil Courts starting a joint office for the conduct of their professional business on the lines adopted by the Attorneys and Solicitors of the High Court."

A DIGEST OF THE LAW OF AGENCY. By William Bowstead, Bar-at-Law. Fifth Edition. Price 18s. Sweet & Maxwell Ltd., London.

The plan of this work resembles to a certain extent that of the Indian enactments. For instance under the heading of Liabilities of Agents to their Principal, the law is stated in the form of general propositions and the cases bearing on the question are given by way of illustration. In the present edition all the recent cases bearing on the subject have been inserted under appropriate headings. This has enhanced the usefulness of this already well-known work. But we think that there is yet a scope for adding a few notes dealing especially with unauthorised acts of agents and the circumstances under which a principal may repudiate agent's acts done in excess of his authority. It is necessary in this connection to set out the limitations of any implied authority. It is not unoften that implied authority is contended for by third parties in the face of the agent's power being well defined in writing by the principal. The question of onus or presumption in such cases is of considerable importance. We also think that questions relating especially to Limited Liability Companies and the unauthorised acts of their secretaries, managers and other agents deserve special treatment.

THE WESTERN ASSURANCE CO.

"Perils of the sea," meaning of, explained—Difference when the words are used in a policy on goods from that in a policy on ship.

This was an appeal from a judgment of His Majesty's Supreme Court for Shanghai, dismissing the Plaintiffs' claim.

The facts of the case are as follows:—The Plaintiffs were the owners of a wooden hulk moored in the river Whangpoo, which they used as a store. In this hulk they placed some opium on which they effected an insurance with the Defendants against marine risks. The policy was a time policy running from the 6th July to the 6th August 1908. On the 20th July the hulk sprang a leak and the opium was damaged by the percolating water. The leak was wholly due to the rotten condition of the hulk. The condition of the hulk was unknown to the Plaintiffs, the weak place being covered up by some copper sheathing. In these circumstances the Plaintiffs brought their action. The Defendants denied that the damage to the opium was by the perils insured against.

The risks covered by the policy were "perils of the sea and all other perils, losses, and misfortunes that have or shall come to the hurt, detriment, or damage of the said goods." It was contended on the Plaintiffs' behalf that the loss was due to a "peril of the sea." The learned Judge held that the damage was not due to a sea peril at all, but was solely due to the weakness of the hulk and he thereupon dismissed the action. On the present appeal their Lordships were of opinion that the learned Judge was right. In the course of their judgment which was delivered by LORD MERSEY they said:—"There was no weather, nor any other fortuitous circumstance, contributing to the incursion of the water; the water merely gravitated by its own weight through the opening in the decayed wood and so damaged the opium. It would be an abuse of language to describe this as a loss due to perils of the sea. Although sea water damaged the goods, no peril of the sea contributed either proximately or remotely to the loss. There is ample authority for so holding, but it is sufficient to cite the judgment of Lord Herschell, in The Xanthi reported in 12 App. cases where he says (at p. 509):—"I think it is clear that the term 'perils of the sea' does not cover every accident or casualty which may happen to the subject-matter of the insurance on the sea. It must be a peril 'of' the sea. Again it is well settled that it is not every loss or damage of which the sea is the immediate cause that is covered by these words. They do not protect, for example, against that natural and inevitable action of the winds and waves which results in what may be described as wear and tear."

An attempt was made during the argument to attribute a different meaning to the expression "perils of the sea" when used in a policy on goods from that which it bears when used in a policy on ship: but no authority was cited for the distinction nor would it be right in principle to make any such distinction. In the case above cited an attempt was made to draw a distinction between the meaning to be given to the words when used in a bill of lading and in a policy of insurance, but Lord Herschell said "It would in my opinion be very objectionable unless well settled authority compelled me to give a different meaning to the same words occurring in two maritime instruments."

"In this case the damage though doubtless proximately due to sea water was not in any sense due to sea peril. It does not therefore fall within the policy."

[APPEAL FROM THE JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER OF OUDH.]

LORD MACNAGHTEN.

LORD ATKINSON.

LORD SHAW.

SIR JOHN EDGE.

2, May.BRIJ LAL, since deceased (now represented by RAM BHAROSE) and ors., Appellants,
v.SURAJ BIKRAM
SINGH, Respondent.

Will—Construction—Hindu Law—Bequest of estate to daughter-in-law—Legatee to remain in occupation of the property "just like myself," and appoint an "heir"—Estate given if life estate or absolute interest.

A testator executed a Will which provided that after his death his widow, legatee No. 1, would remain in possession of his properties with all sorts of powers "just like myself," and on her death, his widowed daughter-in-law, R., legatee No. 2, would remain in possession and occupation of the entire property "just like myself and legatee No. 1," and the latter was invested with the power of appointing an "heir" either in her lifetime or by Will :

Held—That on the death of the testator's widow, the daughter-in-law did not take an absolute estate in the properties left by the testator.

The word "heir" meant "heir to the testator."

These were two Consolidated Appeals from two judgments and decrees of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which set aside two decrees of the Subordinate Judge of Tahsil Biswan, in the District of Sitapur in Oudh, passed in favour of the Appellants.

The question for decision in the appeal depended upon the construction of the last Will of one Narpat Singh, dated the 11th July 1893.

The appeal had arisen out of the following circumstances :—

The village in dispute, named Ingaon, belonged to Narpat Singh who died on the 2nd February 1894.

On the 11th July 1893, he had made a Will under which one Rani Brij Nath Kuar, the widow of a nephew of his, obtained possession of the village, and on her death the Respondent was placed in possession of it. The material provisions of the Will were the following :—

"After my demise my wife Musammat Sheolagan Kuar, the legatee No. 1, will remain in possession of the above-mentioned property with all sorts of powers like myself, that after the death of my wife, my daughter-in-law, Musammat Rani Brij Nath Kuar, wife of Rana Raghuraj Singh, deceased, the legatee No. 2, will remain in possession and occupation of the entire property mentioned above—just like myself and the legatee No. 1. . . . I do hereby execute an instrument of Will in her favour which I am going to have also registered, so that after my demise and that of my wife the estate and the names and vestiges of my ancestors may continue to endure, even as they have existed in times past and do exist at present, and so that she may perform my funeral ceremonies as well as those of my wife according to the Hindu religion and custom of the caste in the same way as Rana Raghuraj Singh, deceased, himself would have done ; that thereafter she will have power to nominate any one whom she thinks fit as an heir, so that the (good) name of the family may continue to flourish with fame, in the same way as in times past and up to the present day."

* After the death of Rani Brij Nath Kuar, the Appellants obtained two simple money decrees against her assets and, on the 25th

BRIJ LAL v. SURAJ BIKRAM SINGH.

July 1906, they instituted the present proceedings by filing two applications for execution of the two decrees in the Court of the Subordinate Judge.

In these applications the decree-holders prayed that the amounts of the two decrees with future interest and costs might be realized with costs of execution by attachment and sale of the village in dispute.

In reply to the applications, the judgment-debtor, the present Respondent, objected to the attachment on the ground that the possession of Rani Brij Nath Kuar was that of a Hindu widow only and that the property attached could not be sold to satisfy decrees for sums of money personally due from her.

The decree-holders filed a reply to the objections of the judgment-debtor, and with reference to the allegations of the parties, the Subordinate Judge framed the following issue for trial in both cases which were heard together: "Whether Rani Brij Nath had a full and absolute interest in the property in dispute?"

On the 12th February 1907, the Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment. He held, in effect, that the Will of Narpat Singh conferred an absolute estate in favour of Rani Brij Nath Kuar, and as such, the property in suit was liable to be seized in execution of the decrees of the decree-holders. The Subordinate Judge, therefore, recommended the sale of the property and on the 3rd April 1907 sanction for such sale was given by the Commissioner.

The judgment-debtors appealed, and the Judicial Commissioner allowed the appeals holding that she had only a life-estate. Mr. Chamier in the course of his judgment said:—

"The testator confers upon Brij Nath

Kuar a power to nominate an heir (waris). The passage cannot possibly mean that she should nominate an heir to herself, the word waris obviously means an heir to the testator. This power could not have been required if Brij Nath Kuar was to take a heritable estate and to have power to nominate an heir to herself.

"The words used with reference to both the women (qabiz-o-mutsarrif) (one who possesses and one who spends or enjoys) do not by any means indicate an intention to confer a transferable estate. The notion that a woman should have a transferable estate and be able to divert the estate to her own family is positively repugnant to the Hindu mind and the soundness of the decisions which lay stress upon this is to my mind beyond question.

"It is unnecessary to observe that the word dakhil used with reference to Brij Nath Kuar means no more than qabiz. It denotes possession only.

"Counsel for the Respondents laid stress upon the words mai jami ikhtiarat (with all power or authority). In the first place they are used with reference to Sheolagan Kuar so that if they denote a transferable estate there was nothing left for Brij Nath Kuar. Next full effect can be given to these words without construing them as importing a transferable estate, and lastly this must be read with the context.

"It is noticeable that the testator does not say that either of the ladies is the malik (proprietor). The whole Will seems to work up to the nomination of an heir obviously a male heir by Brij Nath Kuar who, he assumed, would survive both Sheolagan Kuar and himself.

"In my opinion there can be very little doubt that the testator did not intend to confer a heritable estate upon either of the ladies."

BRIJ LAL v. SURAJ BIKRAM SINGH.

Hence this appeal.

Mr. K. Brown for the Appellant submitted that the lady had an absolute estate under the Will. She had power to appoint any person as her heir. He relied on Shumsool Hooda v. Sheuwuk Ram (1) and Hoy v. Master (2).

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Ross for the Respondent were not called upon to reply.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—This is a simple case. The only question is whether the daughter (?) took an absolute estate or an estate for life?

In the first place, there is no estate at all given to the lady, in terms. The only direction is that she is to remain in possession and occupation of the property, and then she is invested with the power of appointing an heir either in her lifetime or by Will. It seems to their Lordships that the word "heir" in that clause means heir to the testator and that the judgment of the Judicial Commissioners is perfectly right.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal ought to be dismissed, and with costs.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

SUIT No. 118 OF 1911.

B. E. M. RODRICKS

v.

CHAUDHURI, J. |

2, April.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA
IN COUNCIL.

State Railway, suit for damages against, by servant, if may be brought against the Secretary of State for India in Council—Jurisdiction, High Court, Calcutta—Cl. 12, Letters Patent, Calcutta High Court (1865), leave to file plaint under, if Defendant may question propriety when once granted—Secretary of State for India in Council, if a Body Corporate and if represents Government of India in all suits maintainable against Government—Sec. 65 of 21 & 22 Vict., c. 106—Government carrying on business for State purposes, where may be sued—Railway Company, if a person carrying on business and where suit may be brought against it—Decision of a Bench of two Judges sitting on Original Side, if binding on a single Judge.

A servant of the Eastern Bengal State Railway was prosecuted at Rungpur on a charge of criminal breach of trust which resulted in his acquittal. He thereupon filed a plaint claiming damages for false and malicious prosecution against the Secretary of State for India in Council in the Calcutta High Court in which he craved leave under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent of the High Court (1865) for the institution of the suit in the said Court and the Court granted such leave:

Held—That as the cause of action had arisen wholly outside the jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court the leave was not properly granted and that the fact of the leave having been granted did not preclude the Defendant from questioning the jurisdiction of the Court at the trial.

Under sec. 65 of 21 & 22 Vict., c. 106, the Secretary of State in Council is a Body

B. E. M. RODRICKS v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

Corporate for purposes of a suit and as such represents the Government of India in such suits as may be maintained against the Government. By 21 & 22 Vict., c. 106, such right of suit as individuals had against the East India Company were continued as against the Secretary of State.

A Railway Company is a "person" "carrying on business" within the meaning of sec. 12 of the Letters Patent and it may be sued at the place of its principal office where the directors meet and the general business of the company is transacted or the brain power of the business is.

A Government may be presumed to dwell in its own capital and a Government engaged in trades, though it may be for purpose of the State, carry on business there.

DOYA NARAIN TEWARY v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA (1) dissented from. The judgment of Pigot, J., in BIPRO DAS DEY v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA (2) approved, Held—That the former being the decision of two Judges sitting on the Original Side presumably upon a reference by one of the Judges sitting singly on the Original Side the decision is binding on a single Judge so sitting.

The facts of the case stated in the judgment are sufficient for the purposes of this report and the argument of counsel is also sufficiently noticed therein.

Mr. N. Sirkar for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Kenrick, K. C., Advocate-General, for the Secretary of State.

CHAUDHURI, J.—The Plaintiff in this suit seeks to recover the sum of Rs. 10,000 by way of damages for a false and malicious prosecution, said to have been conducted against him in the District of Rungpur, in which he says he was falsely accused of criminal breach of trust in respect of certain articles belonging to the Eastern Bengal State Railway when he was employed as a servant of the Railway. He states that the criminal proceedings terminated in his acquittal, that such proceedings were taken maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause, and claims to be entitled to judgment against the Secretary of State for India in Council, for damages. It has not been argued before me, whether or not such a suit is maintainable against the Secretary of State for India in Council, the only point urged being that this Court has no jurisdiction under the Charter to entertain it. The argument on both sides has also proceeded upon the basis, that the whole of the cause of action in this suit arose outside the local jurisdiction of this Court. I find, however, from the 9th paragraph of the plaint that the Plaintiff asked for leave under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent "to safeguard himself against any contention" that part of the cause of action arose outside Calcutta. I find also from an endorsement on the plaint that such leave was granted by a learned Judge of this Court then sitting on the Original Side. I do not, however, find anything in the plaint upon which such leave could have been granted. It may be there are facts which have not been fully set out in the plaint upon which the Plaintiff could have legitimately asked for such leave, but as the matter now stands, I must hold that leave under cl. (12) was not rightly granted and the Secretary of State for India in Council cannot be bound by the leave so given. The order was made in his absence, and he can, undoubtedly, question it. As I have said before, the argument has proceeded on the basis that no part of the cause of action in this suit arose within the local limits of our jurisdiction. The learned Advocate-General contends that this Court has no jurisdiction to try an action of this character against the Secretary of State for India in Council, the cause of action having arisen wholly outside our local jurisdiction. He says that unless it can be shown in cases like this, that the Secretary of State for India in Council is a person who dwells, or carries on business, or personally works for gain within the local limits of Calcutta, this Court cannot try a suit instituted against him, and relies upon Doya Narain Tewary v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (1). That case was decided by two Judges sitting on the Original Side of this Court composing a Bench constituted by the then Chief Justice on the 10th August 1886. There were three other similar cases which were referred to the same Bench for disposal, in all of which the Secretary of State for India in Council was Defendant. The Bench was so constituted, I take it, upon a reference by one of the Judges who was then sitting on the Original Side of this Court under r. 54 (Original Side), although I have not been able to find the order of reference. There is no doubt that the case of Doya Narain Tewary (1) is direct authority for the proposition that no such suit is maintainable. The learned Judges there hold that the Secretary of State for India in Council does not dwell within the local jurisdiction of this Court, or carry on business, or personally work for gain. In so deciding the learned Judges discussed the decision of Mr. Justice Pigot in Bipro Das Dey v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (2). Pigot, J., had taken a directly opposite view. He held that such a suit was maintainable. He held further that if the Secretary of State for India in Council in this country was a legal person in any sense, he could not possibly hold that he did not carry on business in Calcutta. So far as I am concerned, I am bound by the decision of the two learned Judges, Mitter and Trevelyan, JJ., who constituted the Bench to whom the matter was referred, but as I am not convinced in my mind that the decision is correct, I state my reasons. However differently the word "business" may have been construed at different times, I do not think there is any question whatever that a carrier's business is "business" within the meaning of sec. 12 of the Letters Patent, nor is there any doubt that a Railway Company, or other Corporate Body, or even a body of individuals, whether incorporated or not, is a "person" within the meaning of that section. See the definition of the word "person" in the General Clauses Act, 1897. It cannot also be doubted that a Railroad Company, apart from the fact of having a Registered Office, "carries on business" at its principal office where the directors meet and the general business of the Company is transacted. Jessel M. R. in Erichsen v. Last (3) said that where the "Brain Power" is, there a trade or business is carried on. The question therefore is as to whether the Secretary of State for India in Council, is a "person" within the meaning of sec. 12 of the Letters Patent, and if so, does that "person" carry on business in Calcutta, which at the time of the institution of this suit was the capital of the Government of India.

I shall therefore first consider the position of the Secretary of State for India in Council as a Defendant in suits. In order to understand the position of the Government in this country, it is necessary to refer to certain old Acts. At the time that 21 Geo. iii, C. 70, and 37 Geo. iii, C. 142 were enacted the Governor-General, the Governors of Bombay and Madras and their Councillors were servants of the East India Company, and it was necessary to protect them by special enactments from suits on account of things done by them in the exercise of their quasi-political functions. By Statute 3 and 4 Wm. iv, C. 85, the trading capacity of the Company was abolished except as to such trade as was necessary for purposes of the State. By 21 and 22 Vic., c. 106, the Government was transferred from the East India Company to the Crown. Sec. 65 of that Statute provides as follows:—"The Secretary of State in Council shall and may sue, and be sued as well in India, as in England by the name of the Secretary of State in Council as a Body Corporate; and all persons, and Body Politic shall and may have and take the same suits, remedies and proceedings, legal and equitable against the Secretary of State in Council of India as they could have done against the said Company; and the property and effects hereby vested in Her Majesty for the purposes of the Government of India or acquired for the said purposes, shall be subject and liable to the same judgments and executions as they would while vested in the said Company have been liable to in respect of debts and liabilities lawfully contracted and incurred by the said Company." By the words of the Statute a clear right of suit is given against the Secretary of State for India in Council as a Body Corporate. Mitter and Trevelyan, JJ., however, hold that this section does not constitute the Secretary of State for India in Council a Body Corporate. Perhaps not so for all purposes, but it is quite clear that they were constituted a Body Corporate for purposes of suits, and as such represents the Government of India in such suits as may be maintained against the Government. Sir Richard Garth in Judah v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (4) says "it seems to me that since the Statute 21 and 22 Vic., c. 106, the Secretary of State for India in Council represents the Government here to all intents and purposes. He is the officer of the Crown authorized to sue and be sued in respect of all Crown debts and contracts." On p. 452, he says "sec. 1 of that Act deals only with the manner in which suits are to be brought and has nothing to do with substantive rights. The latter part of the section says nothing as to what rights may be acquired either by the Secretary of State or by the Crown through the Secretary of State, nor as to the nature or character of rights so acquired. It leaves that to be governed by the ordinary principles of law. But with regard to liabilities which may be enforced against the Secretary of State there are express words."

The East India Company was in its origin a Trading Company, which became vested with sovereign powers. There is no question that the Company was liable to suits in respect of acts done in their trading capacity.

(4) I. L. R. 12 Cal. 445 at p. 450 (1886).

B. E. M. RODRICKS v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

In Gibson v. The East India Company (5), Chief Justice Tindal distinctly points out that the powers of the East India Company was of a two-fold nature—one political and the other commercial. By 21 and 22 Vict., c. 106 such right of suits, as individuals had against the East India Company, was continued as against the Secretary of State. This was an exceptional enactment. Colonial Governments have been held not to be liable to such suits. They are not subject to any similar provision. See Sloman v. The Government of New Zealand (6).

The East India Company at the time that the Government was transferred from them, had power to carry on trade for purposes of the State. After the transfer such trade has been carried on by the Government of India in this country, and as pointed out by Pigot, J., in the case of Bipro Das Dey v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (2), the Government is a frequent ligant in the Indian Courts, in respect of matters arising out of such trade.

The Secretary of State for India in Council cannot in this country claim on behalf of the Crown the prerogative of immunity from suits. As is pointed out in the Secretary of State for India in Council v. Hari Bhanji (7) that two principles regulate the maintenance of proceedings at law by a subject against the Sovereign—the one, having a relation to the personal status of the Defendant—the other, to the character of that in respect of which relief is sought. In England the form of procedure permitted to a subject who considers himself aggrieved by an act of the Crown, is by petition of rights. In this country the Crown has consented to submit some of its acts to the jurisdiction of the Municipal Courts. It is not necessary in this case to discuss the nature of the acts for which Government can be sued in our Courts. The Defendant concedes for the present, that such a suit as this is maintainable against the Government. I am, therefore, of opinion that for purposes of such a suit the Secretary of State for India in Council is a Body Corporate and a person within the meaning of cl. 12 of the Letters Patent.

Just before the Letters Patent of 1862, the first Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859) had come into operation so far as the Mofussil Courts were concerned. Sec. 5 of that Act dealt with the jurisdiction of those Courts. In that Act there was no provision as to how the Government might sue or be sued. The Civil Procedure Act of 1877, Chap. 27, sec. 416, introduced the provision which we now find in sec. 79 of our present Code. It laid down that suits against the Government were to be instituted in the name of the Secretary of State for India in Council. The Secretary of State for India in Council, therefore, is more than a "mere name." He is for purposes of suits to be treated as a "person," and represents the Government. The learned Advocate-General referred me to Ilbert's Government of India (2nd edition), pages 176-177, which does not help to decide the point. I notice that on page 146 the learned author says this: "the office of the Secretary of State is constitutionally a unit, though there are five officers." Reference was made by the learned Judges in Doya Narain Tewary's case (1) to

B. E. M. RODRIGUES v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

Kinlock v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (8) in which the Plaintiff sued for an account and distribution of "booty of war" come to the hands of the Secretary of State under a Royal Warrant. It was argued that the Defendant thus became "trustee" and the "booty" was "trust fund." James, L. J., held it was not a trust, and that the Secretary of State for India in Council (the name by which the Government can be sued) was not a person capable of being trustee, because according to that learned Judge the Government of India was not capable of being the trustee of such a fund. The property in that case had vested in the Crown, and was to be distributed by the servants of the Crown according to the Crown's directions, and that therefore no Municipal Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The observations made in the course of the judgment refer to the matter which was before the Court of Appeal and cannot be considered of general application. To hold that where suits are actually maintainable against the Secretary of State for India in Council that he is a "mere name," I consider erroneous. He is a "Body Corporate" in such a suit according to the express words of the Statute. If, however, the Secretary of State for India in Council is a "mere name" it is quite clear that a name can never be said to "dwell" anywhere or "carry on business." It is also clear that a "mere name" can do nothing. The name cannot sue or be sued, nor can there ever be a cause of action against a mere name, but as I hold it is not, I shall consider whether the Secretary of State for India in Council who is "legal person" in such suits, can be said to dwell in Calcutta, or carry on business there. It seems to me difficult to say that the Government does not dwell in its own capital, and that a Government engaged in trades, though it may be for purpose of the State, does not "carry on business," if Sir George Jessel is right that where the "Brain Power" is, where a trade or business is carried on. That the Brain Power of the Government of India is at its seat of Government, is not an unjustifiable assumption. I would have had, therefore, no hesitation in holding that the Secretary of State for India in Council, namely, the Government, dwells at its capital and carries on business there, and is thus amenable to the jurisdiction of this Court, in cases where a suit can be maintained against the Government.

I have gone through the cases referred to by Mr. Justice Pigot in his judgment, and I may say I generally agree with the view expressed by him. In the case of the Peninsular & Oriental Steam Navigation Co. v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (9), the question has been elaborately discussed. The learned Judge points out that there are several cases decided in our Courts against the Secretary of State in spite of the ruling in Rundle v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (10). The observations in that case were made for the guidance of the profession and are obiter. About the same time the Madras Court in the case of Subbaraya Mudali v. The Government (11) took a different view, after which came the cases of Brito v. The Secretary of State for India (12), in which the question of jurisdiction does not appear to have been raised, Hari Bhanji v. The Secretary of State (13) and Secretary of State for India v. Hari Bhanji (7). Rundle v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (10) was cited during argument but was not commented upon in the judgment. It appears that in spite of the decision in Rundle v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (10) the other High Courts continued to exercise jurisdiction over the Secretary of State. This Court also did the same in the case of Ross Johnson v. The Secretary of State (14), although how it came to do so in direct conflict of the decision in Rundle v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (10) is not clear. See also Hukmchand's Civil Procedure Code, page 319, where the references are collected. I may also refer to Doss v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (15), see page 535, in which Sir R. Malins V. C. allowed the demurrer, one of the grounds being that the Plaintiff was a resident of India and the Secretary of State "was also in India." Reference was made, during the argument in that case, to Re Holmes (16) in which a demurrer was allowed on the ground that the Queen was as much "resident" in Canada as in England.

Having regard to what I have said before and with great respect to the learned Judges who decided the case of Doya Narain Tewary v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (1) I venture to dissent from the views therein expressed, but as I hold that I am bound by the decision of a Bench so constituted I must hold that this Court has no jurisdiction. The suit will accordingly be dismissed with costs, unless the Defendant will consent to waive costs.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE

NO. 232 OF 1909.

MOOKERJEE, J. CARNDUFF, J. 1911, Heard, 26 and 27, July. Judgment, 1, August.	}	KISHAN PRASAD SINGHA and others, Defendants, Appellants, v. PURNENDU NARAIN SINGHA and others, Plain- tiffs, Respondents.

Broker's commission—Authority "to raise loan" on security of immovable property—Broker, if entitled to commission on finding capitalist, when latter insists on a margin of security not proposed or agreed to by borrower—Construction of contract—Broker if must find funds or only capitalist—English rules of construction, artificial, if to be applied here—Time, when essence of contract—Quantum meruit for services, if may be claimed when no case established under contract as expressed.

The Defendants being urgently in need of money to save their property from sale executed the following letter of authority in favour of the Plaintiffs:

"We authorise you to raise a loan of 11 lakhs (or less, if so required) to clear all our present debts on mortgage of our entire estate at an interest of 7 per cent. per annum within the period of one month. We agree to pay you a commission of 5 per cent. on such amount as may be advanced by the capitalist to us"

The Defendants did not state what the value of the security was, but the Plaintiffs on their own responsibility represented to the capitalist whom they found that the value of the property would be not less than 20 lakhs, and the capitalist insisted upon satisfactory proof that there was that margin of security before he would agree to make the advance. The negotiation with the capitalist having for this reason fallen through, the Plaintiffs sued for recovery of the stipulated commission :

Held—That upon a construction of the contract that the stipulation was not merely to find a capitalist ready and willing to advance the money but also to procure funds for the satisfaction of the debts of the Defendants.

That even assuming that the Plaintiffs undertook only to find a person ready and willing to advance the money, they had not done so; as the capitalist whom they found imposed a condition as to the margin of security never proposed or accepted by the borrowers, and at no stage of the negotiations was he ready to accept the estate as it stood as security for the loan, i.e., to advance the funds on the terms prescribed by the principal.

Held also—That time was, in the circumstances, of the essence of the contract, and no case had been made out of an extension of time by continuation of bonâ fide negotiations for completion.

Quære—Whether an implied contract, to pay the agent a quantum meruit for his services could be presumed when there was an express contract upon which the Plaintiff's case failed.

Held, that no such case having been made by the Plaintiffs, and no evidence given to show upon what scale remuneration could be calculated quantum meruit no relief could be granted on that basis.

Quære—Whether the technical meaning ascribed to the expression "to raise a loan" in English cases, implying that the agent who is engaged "to raise a loan" discharges his duty as soon as he finds a creditor who is able and willing to advance money, should be imported in the interpretation of contracts in this country.

Held—That where the remuneration of an agent is payable upon the performance by him of a definite undertaking, he is entitled to be paid that remuneration as soon as he has substantially done all that he undertook to do, even if the principal acquires no benefit from his services, and, except where there is an express agreement or special custom to the contrary, even if the transaction in respect of which the remuneration is claimed falls through, provided it does not fall through in consequence of any act or default of the agent.

This was an appeal preferred on the 28th of May 1909 against the decree of Babu Umesh Chandra Sen, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah Patna, dated the 21st of January 1909.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Babus Umakali Mukherjee and Chandra Sekhar Prosad Singh for the Appellants.

Babu Nares Chandra Sinha for the Respondents.

This appeal is directed against a decree in a suit for recovery of money due on a brokerage contract. On the 17th April 1904, three persons, by name Kashi Prosad, Krishna Prosad and Ram Chandra

Prosad, executed a letter of authority in favour of two persons, Harendra Narain and Purnendu Narain, in the following terms :—

"We authorise you to raise a loan of eleven lakhs (or less, if so required) to clear all our present debts on mortgage of our entire estate at an interest of 7 per cent. per annum within the period of one month. We agree to pay you a commission of 5 per cent. on such amount as may be advanced by the capitalist to us. In case the loan succeeds we further agree to appoint Babu Harendra Narain Singh our Manager, on an initial pay of Rs. 200 a month rising to Rs. 400 as funds permit."

On the day following the agents authorised one Troilokhya Nath Chatterjee as their sub-agent to act for them in this transaction :—"We are authorised by the agreement of Rai Kashi Prosad Singh, Rai Krishna Prosad Singh and Rai Ram Chandra Prosad Singh, dated the 17th April 1904, in our favour to appoint you as a broker to raise a loan of eleven lakhs or less for the said Rai Shaheb, at an interest of 7 per cent. per annum. You are to raise the loan within one month, you will get a commission of 2 per cent. for yourself, and the balance you (we ?) may divide just as you (we ?) like. The Rais will soon hand you a statement showing that the annual income of the properties to be mortgaged is not less than a lakh of rupees. The valuation of the properties is not less than twenty lakhs."

Before we proceed further, it is desirable to observe that there is no evidence to shew that the terms of this agreement between the agents and their sub-agent were ever brought to the notice of the borrowers. On the other hand there is good reason to believe that although the borrowers were aware that a sub-agent had been employed they were not apprised of the terms on which his services had been engaged. It will further be noticed that, although the letter of authority to the sub-agent states that the writers were authorised to appoint a broker the original contract was silent upon this point. It may further be remarked that there is an assertion by the agents that the value of the properties to be given by way of security was not less than twenty lakhs of rupees and that the borrowers would soon furnish a statement of the income which was alleged to be not less than one lakh of rupees a year. There was, however, no statement upon these points in the original contract, and there is no evidence to shew that the borrowers had ever represented that their estate was worth twenty lakhs. The sub-agent, furnished with this authority, entered into negotiations with a firm of bankers of this City, and one of the officers of the borrowers as also Harendra Narain came down to Calcutta to assist in the completion of the transaction. The capitalists, as might have been anticipated, insisted upon satisfactory proof of the value of the security, and Harendra, as also the officer of the borrowers was for a considerable time engaged in the preparation of a statement of the assets of the estate. Meanwhile the period of one month specified in the letter of authority of the agents and of their letter to the sub-agent expired. The borrowers, however, were in a situation of considerable embarrassment as a portion of their estate was about to be sold in execution of a decree held by one of their creditors in the Monghyr Court to the extent of two and a half lakhs of rupees. To save the properties from the impending sale, was a matter of pressing and paramount necessity. This was fully realised by the agents, and they endeavoured to obtain from the capitalists the sum needed even before the negotiations with them had been brought to a completion. But the capitalists were inexorable and would not part with their money unless Purnendu Narain and Gajadhar Prosad, both leading members of the Patna Bar, consented to stand as surety. This they declined to do. Purnendu Narain about this time on the 19th May 1904 sent a letter to one of the borrowers in which it was stated that the capitalists were willing to deposit the whole of the decretal money in Court, and to take two months' time to complete the enquiry and the transaction. Purnendu Narain, however, realised that this could not be done, unless the Subordinate Judge in whose Court the execution proceedings were pending would agree to give time on such deposit. It is not clear, upon the evidence, whether any reply was sent to this letter, there is none in the record; but Ram Chandra Prosad who has been examined in this case states that he replied to the letter to the effect that the loan was not required. The transaction with the capitalists was not completed and on the 27th May 1904 Gajadhar Prosad, on behalf of the intending borrowers, telegraphed to Purnendu Narain who was apparently then in Calcutta that he had accepted the terms of the Maharaja of Darbhanga. It has been stated to us that, as a matter of fact, the transaction with the Maharaja of Darbhanga also fell through and that the borrowers were ultimately obliged to place their creditor in possession of their estate for a term of years, so as to enable him to satisfy his dues from the usufruct. The substance of the matter therefore was that nothing came of the negotiations with the Calcutta capitalist and they must be taken to have been discontinued after the 27th May 1904. On the 27th May 1907, that is on the last day for the institution of a suit for recovery of money due on the contract of agency, Purnendu Narain and the infant sons of Harendra Narain who had meanwhile died commenced the present action for recovery of Rs. 28,000 from Kishen Prosad, Ram Chandra Prosad and the infant son of Kashi Prosad who had also died in the interval. The infant sons of the second Defendant, Ram Chandra Prosad, were also joined as parties Defendants, but it is difficult to appreciate how any claim could be put forward against them even with the least show of plausibility. The plaint recites that the Plaintiffs were entitled to receive Rs. 55,000 as brokerage on the contract of the 17th April 1904, but that as the Defendants were in straitened circumstances the claim was limited to Rs. 28,000. The Defendants resisted the claim substantially on the ground that the Plaintiffs had not earned the remuneration and that they had not performed their part of the agreement within the time specifically prescribed. The Subordinate Judge laid down four issues of which the first and the fourth were of a fundamental character, namely, first, whether the agreement between the parties was that the Plaintiff should merely find out a capitalist within one month or raise the amount wanted, and, fourth, whether time was of the essence of the contract, and whether the Plaintiffs performed their part of the contract within the time fixed. The Subordinate Judge answered those questions in favour of the Plaintiffs and as Purnendu Narain stated that he did not want any money out of the amount claimed for his own sake, the Subordinate Judge made a decree for Rs. 14,000 in favour of the other two Plaintiffs, the sons of Harendra Narain. The Defendants have now appealed to this Court, and on their behalf the decision of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed on two grounds, namely, first, that upon a true construction of the agreement of the 17th April 1904 the agents undertook not merely to find a capitalist but the money itself, and, secondly, that time was of the essence of the contract. These positions have been strenuously controverted on behalf of the Plaintiffs-Respondents and the learned Vakil who has appeared for them has further argued in the alternative that if the Respondents cannot succeed in their contention, a decree should be made in their favour for compensation for the labour and expense they had undergone in the course of their negotiations with the capitalists.

In support of the first contention of the Appellants it has been argued that the plain meaning of the contract is that the agents should find the money and not merely a capitalist. It has been pointed out that the borrowers were deeply embarrassed, their creditors were pressing hard in all direction, and what was urgently needed, as was well-known to Purnendu Narain himself, was not merely a capitalist but actual money to save the Defendants from the peril of an execution sale which had been already proclaimed. In answer to this argument, it has been contended by the learned Vakil for the Respondents that the expression "to raise a loan" has a well-known technical meaning and that the agent who is engaged to raise a loan discharges his duty as soon as he finds a creditor who is able and willing to advance money. In support of this proposition reliance has been placed upon the cases of Green v. Lucas (1), Prickett v. Badger (2) and Fisher v. Drewett (3). These cases are authorities for the proposition that if the person proposing to negotiate a loan brings the principals together and if nothing remains for him to do, he is entitled to his commission. It must be remembered however that at least on one occasion dissatisfaction was expressed by a learned English Judge with this rule of construction. In Fuller v. Eames (4), Mr. Justice Smith observed that if he had construed the agreement without the authorities of the cases cited [Roberts v. Bernard (5), Green v. Read (6), Green v. Lucas (1) and Fisher v. Drewett (3)] he might have held that the commission was only to be recovered if the money was actually paid. It is undesirable that a rule of construction should be imported in the interpretation of contracts in this country which is obviously artificial and may very often defeat the true intention of the parties [See Stokes v. Soondermath (7)]. In the case before us there is the additional weighty circumstance that the agreement which the principals were made to sign was written in English, a language of which they had a very imperfect knowledge. In fact, the agreement had to be explained to them in their vernacular Hindi and Ram Chandra who has been examined, states definitely that he certainly understood that they should pay the commission if the money was actually advanced. He adds that he took the contract to be that the money should be advanced to them within one month and not merely that a capitalist should be found willing to advance the money. We must express our surprise, in view of the position of one of the agents, that he should have made the principals execute such a contract in a language of which they had a very imperfect knowledge. We are therefore not prepared to accept the interpretation put by the Plaintiffs upon this agreement. But it is not necessary to rest our decision upon this view of the matter, because even if it be conceded that the agents undertook to find a creditor able and willing to advance the money, they did not perform that agreement. It need not be disputed that where the remuneration of an agent is payable upon the performance by him of a definite undertaking he is entitled to be paid that remuneration as soon as he has substantially done all that he undertook to do, even if the principal acquires no benefit from his services, and except where there is an express agreement or special custom to the contrary, even if the transaction in respect of which the remuneration is claimed falls through, provided that it does not fall through in consequence of any act or default of the agent. Illustrations of this principle are furnished by the cases of Green v. Lucas (1) and Fisher v. Drewett (3). But it is essential, as was pointed out by Mr. Justice Chitty in In re Salter's claim (8), that the agent procures a person ready and willing to make the loan on the terms proposed; it is obviously not sufficient that he procures a person willing to negotiate about the matter. Now, in the case before us, the Defendants had granted a letter of authority to the Plaintiffs to raise a loan of eleven lakhs on a mortgage of their entire estate; they did not undertake to find security for twenty lakhs for a loan of eleven lakhs; they were prepared to give their estate as security for whatever it might be worth. But the Calcutta capitalists, with whom the agents and the sub-agent entered into negotiations, were not ready and willing to advance eleven lakhs upon the security of the whole estate, unless its value was established to be twenty lakhs; in other words, the capitalists were not prepared to advance the money on the terms offered by the borrowers; they imposed a condition which was never accepted by the borrowers and which in fact, was introduced by the agents in their letter of authority to the sub-agent entirely on their own responsibility. The position is completely covered by one of the illustrations given by Mr. Justice Chitty in In re Salter's Claim (8). The learned Judge observed: "if A. employs B. to procure a loan of £1,000 on his bond, and B. finds C. who says that he is willing to make the advance if A. will pay C.'s solicitor a fee for negotiating the loan to which A. does not agree, the commission is not earned." The same view was affirmed by the Court of Appeal in Cassingham v. King (9) [See also Peacock v. Freeman (10)]. The view we take is not inconsistent with the decision in Elias v. Govind Chunder Khatick (11), which was accepted as good law in Anna-swami v. Zemindar of Ayakudi (12).

KISHAN PROSAD SINGHA v. PURNENDU NARAIN SINGHA.

There the broker employed to negotiate for a loan of money brought a creditor who was willing to advance the amount and actually placed money in the hands of the Attorney: the transaction, however, fell through by reason of the inability of the borrower to make out his title to the property offered as security. The case of Mastrose v. Courjon (13), which followed the decisions in Prickett v. Badger (2) and Grogan v. Smith (14), also supports the view we take. In the case last mentioned, Lord Esher made the following observations:—"The agent, in order to earn a commission, was to get a purchaser, an actual purchaser, not, merely a person who might become a purchaser but one who would enter into a binding contract, binding him to purchase the house. It was true that the Plaintiff had an alternative right of action if he could shew that he did obtain a person who was ready and willing to enter into a binding contract, if he could shew that the two parties, vendor and purchaser, were really agreed as to all the terms of the contract, that it was prevented from becoming a binding contract only by reason of the fault or default of the Defendant in refusing to make the agreement valid and binding. This view also receives support from the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Burchell v. Gowrie (15), where Lord Atkinson stated the rule in the following terms:—"In the words of Erle, C. J., in Green v. Bartlett (16), if the relation of buyer and seller is really brought about by the act of the agent, he is entitled to commission, although the actual sale has not been effected by him, or, in the words of later authorities, the Plaintiff must show that some act of his was the cause causans of the sale, Tribe v. Taylor (17), or was an efficient cause of the sale" [Millar v. Radford (18)]. In the same case the learned Judge added an observation from the judgment of Willes, J., in Inchbald v. Western Nilgiri Coffee Co. (19):—"I apprehend that wherever money is to be paid by one man to another upon a given event, the party upon whom is cast the obligation to pay, is liable to the party who is to receive the money if he does any act which prevents or makes it less probable that he should receive it." In the case before us, it is indisputable upon the evidence that the agent never found a capitalist willing to advance eleven lakhs upon the security of the estate. The capitalists brought forward imposed a condition as to the margin of security never proposed or accepted by the borrowers. Under these circumstances, it is impossible to hold that the Plaintiffs ever earned the remuneration claimed by them. The Defendants were, therefore, entitled to repudiate the offer made in the letter of the 19th May 1904. There are two other circumstances in connexion with this branch of the case which deserve special mention. The sub-agent, Troilakhya Nath, in his evidence seeks to make out that another contract by which the estate was to be leased to the capitalists rather than given by way of mortgage was accepted by the borrowers. The plaint, however, is not based on the allegation that the claim was laid for the recovery of compensation for services in connexion with the alleged substituted contract. Troilakhya Nath also makes assertions as to the progress of the negotiations with the capitalists for the advance of the money. It is a matter for legitimate comment, however, that no one has been examined amongst the capitalists themselves to corroborate this part of the story, and we are not prepared to place implicit reliance upon the assertions of Troilakhya Nath who is admittedly at the root of this litigation and whose evidence as that of a person deeply interested does not always shew a scrupulous regard for truth. Our conclusion, therefore, upon this branch of the case may be summarised in the manner following. In our opinion, the agents undertook not merely to find a capitalist able ready and willing to advance the money but also to procure funds for the satisfaction of the debts of the borrowers; but even if this interpretation of the agreement be discarded, and if it be assumed that they undertook only to find a person able, ready and willing to advance the money, they have not done so. The capitalists whom they found insisted upon a margin of security which the borrowers had not covenanted to offer, and at no stage of the negotiations were the capitalists ready to accept the entire estate as security for the loan; in other words no capitalist was found able ready and willing to advance the funds on the terms prescribed by the principals. The transaction was never completed, and the failure could not be attributed to any default on the part of the principals. In fact, Purnendu Narain who had previously employed his son-in-law to survey the properties and ascertain their value, assumed that they were worth twenty lakhs of rupees, but the capitalists were not to be satisfied without full scrutiny and Pur-nendu Narain found them more exacting than he had anticipated. Consequently, the Plaintiffs cannot be held to have earned the remuneration claimed on account of their unsuccessful effort to negotiate the transaction which they had been employed to negotiate. The first contention of the Appellants must therefore prevail.

In support of the second contention of the Appellants, it has been argued that time was of the essence of the contract, and that whatever interpretation might be put upon the agreement, as it was not carried out within the prescribed time, the Plaintiffs did not earn the remuneration claimed. In our opinion, time was of the essence of the contract in the case before us. The rule of equity, which now is the general rule of English jurisprudence, is to look at the whole scope of the transaction to see whether the parties really meant the time named to be of the essence of the contract, Lennon v. Napper (20), Roberts v. Berry (21), Tilley v. Thomas (22). The same principle is formulated in sec. 55 of the Indian Contract Act. In the case before us, the agents knew, quite as well as the principals, the purpose for which the loan was required; the creditors of the principals were insistent for payment, and one of them had already obtained the sale proclamation issued for the sale of properties valued at several lakhs of rupees. The sale was to take place early in May, and although the Court might possibly show some indulgence, the matter was of the gravest urgency and importance to the principals. Even if, therefore, no time had been specified for the performance of the contract, the Court would have inferred from its nature and from the surrounding circumstances that time was intended to be of its essence to this extent at any rate that the agents were bound to use the utmost diligence to perform their part of the contract [Macbryde v. Weekes (23)]. We do not feel any doubt whatever that time was of the essence of the contract, and that the agents were bound to find, not merely a capitalist, but also the money within the time prescribed. This, indeed, is shewn by the letter of Purnendu written on the 19th May 1904. But even if it be assumed that time was not intended to be of the essence of the contract, it had to be performed in a reasonable time, Houghton v. Orgur (24) and Nosotti v. Auerbach (25). In the circumstances of the present case, the agreement was not performed even within a reasonable time; of what use would the money be to the borrowers if it was provided after their creditors had sold their estate, which they were so anxious to save? The second contention of the Appellants must consequently prevail.

We may add that the learned Vakil for the Respondents suggested that the time prescribed was extended by the continuance of the negotiation, and he relied upon the cases of Wood v. Bernal (26), Webb v. Hughes (27) and Bruner v. Moore (28). The principle deducible from these cases, namely, that the time originally fixed may be extended by the continuation of bond fide negotiations for completion has, however, no application to the case before us. There is no reliable evidence to shew that negotiations were continued for the purpose of completion after the expiry of the prescribed date; the presence of the officer of the Defendants at Calcutta did not amount to a continuance of the negotiation. In fact, the letter of Purnendu written on the 19th May 1904 shews that there was no prospect of completion of the agreement within any reasonable time, and all that he was able to offer at that stage was a quarter of the sum required, and even that on condition that the Subordinate Judge agreed to a postponement for another two months. This clearly can be of no assistance to the Plaintiffs.

The learned Vakil for the Respondents finally contended that the Plaintiffs were entitled to receive some remuneration for the trouble they have taken and referred to the decisions in Companion v. Woodburn (29) and Simpson v. Lamb (30). The answer to this argument is that no such claim was put forward in the plaint. The Plaintiffs claimed remuneration according to the contract; that case has completely failed. As Lord Justice Lindley observed in Lott v. Outhwaite (31) in answer to a contention that there was an implied contract to pay the agents a quantum meruit for his services, there could be no implied contract where there was an express contract [Battams v. Tompkins (32), Barnett v. Isaacson (33), Martin v. Tucker (34)]. It is not necessary for us, however, to hold that if a special contract is not executed, it can never give rise to a claim for quantum meruit. Assume that remuneration for services rendered may be claimed ; but the evidence shews that so far as Purnendu is concerned, he was paid in advance for his visits to Calcutta in connexion with this matter, and it is probable that Harendra also was similarly paid. At any rate, as no evidence has been given to shew upon what scale remuneration could be calculated quantum meruit, we cannot make a decree in favour of the Plaintiff on that basis. It follows, consequently, that the claim cannot be supported from any point of view.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed, and the decree of the Subordinate Judge discharged. The suit will stand dismissed ; the Plaintiffs-Respondents will pay the Defendants-Appellants their costs in this Court, but there will be no order as to the costs in the Court below.

Lunacy Act (XXXV of 1858), sec. 14—Guardian of lunatic, powers of—Lease, unauthorised, for more than five years if void or voidable—Avoiding a lease, suit if must be brought for.

A lease for more than five years granted by the guardian of a lunatic without the authority of the Court as required by sec. 14 of the Lunacy Act is voidable and not void.

It is not necessary that a suit should be brought to avoid the lease and when the Plaintiff on becoming sui juris brought a suit for damages in respect of occupation of the land leased, electing to treat the lease as a nullity :

Held, that there was sufficient avoidance of the lease.

This was an appeal from a decision of Babu S. C. Ganguly, Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 9th of May 1910, affirming a decision of Babu Jotindra Nath Mookerjee, Munsif of Tangail, dated the 6th of October 1909.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

This case comes before us on second appeal. The suit was brought by the Plaintiff on his becoming sui juris for damages in respect of occupation of lands by the Defendants.

The Defendants set up an ijara patta granted by the mother of the Plaintiff. She purported to grant it as the guardian of the father of the Plaintiff who was a lunatic. It was a lease for more than 5 years and it was not granted under the authority of the Court in conformity with the provisions of sec. 14 of the Lunacy Act (Act 35 of 1858).

The first question that is raised before us is whether this lease was absolutely void as it has been held to be by the lower Appellate Court or whether it was only voidable. We are of opinion that it was only voidable. There is no direct authority on the construction of sec. 14 of the Lunacy Act ; but there are authorities from which the above conclusion may be reached with some certainty. Sec. 14 of the Lunacy Act gives certain powers over the lunatic's property to his manager ; it then provides that he shall not have power to sell or mortgage the lunatic's property, or to lease it for more than five years without an order of the Court. Sec. 18 of the repealed Guardian, and Wards Act, Act XL of 1858, contained very similar provisions and in Til Koer v. Roy Anund Kishore (1) and Sreemati Ahfut-unissa v. Goluck Chunder Sen (2), it was held that an alienation wrongly made, without the leave of the Court, was voidable but not void. The new Guardian and Wards Act, VIII of 1890, provides in sec. 29, that a person appointed guardian shall not, without leave, make certain alienations, but provides in sec. 30 that if he does his alienation is voidable. We may thus suppose that the Legislature recognised the principle acted on in the two decided cases as applicable to the repealed Guardian and Wards Act, and did not in the new Guardians and Wards Act supply a defect existing in the old one, as one might suppose to be the case if one looked at the two Acts only. We may therefore safely apply the same principle to the Lunacy Act. In Umar Churn Mahaldar v. Norendra Nath Basu (3), Mookerjee J., recognised the existence of the principle and applied it to the construction of secs. 14 and 39 of the Court of Wards Act, IX of 1879, B. C., which in view of the difference of the terms of those sections from those of the section under consideration may not be of much consequence but is at least in favour of the view we have expressed. Consequently we differ from the lower

Appellate Court which held that the lease was void, but in this case the lease being voidable has in fact been avoided by the Plaintiff, who on becoming sui juris, and within the period of limitation which applied to him, brought this suit electing to treat the lease as a nullity.

The second objection made on behalf of the Appellants is that proceedings ought to have been taken to set aside this ijara before the suit for damages had been brought. In the view of the case we have first expressed it was not necessary so to do.

We were also desired to remand this case for clear findings upon the questions before it, but having had the facts clearly before us we consider this unnecessary, as a remand would of necessity require the Court below to consider the same matters over again.

The result therefore is that this appeal is dismissed, but as the lower Appellate Court made an error in law which has invited this appeal we make no order as to the costs in this Court.

Appeal dismissed.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The present Petitioner is the Plaintiff in a suit which she has brought against the Defendant No. 1, who is the adopted son of her deceased husband, and certain other persons. The Petitioner sued to have her title declared to, and to recover possession of, certain ornaments and other moveable properties which, she alleged, had been wrongfully removed from her custody by the Defendants and belonged to her and did not belong to the Defendant No. 1. She sought to recover possession of those properties or to obtain a decree for their value which she assessed at about Rs. 98,000. An application was made by the Defendants in the suit under Order XXV, r. 1, cl. (3),

(2) I. L. R. 32 Bom. 602 (1908).

C. C. P., for an order from the Court directing the Plaintiff to furnish security for the Defendants' costs in the suit. The Plaintiff in the suit is a woman, and it was alleged that she did not possess any sufficient immoveable property within British India to cover the costs which might be incurred by the Defendants in the suit. It seems that the Plaintiff alleged that she was the owner of certain garden property in Dacca. A suit on a mortgage-bond had been brought against her by her daughter to recover the sum of Rs. 10,000 and, in that suit, on a mortgage of the garden property now claimed by the Petitioner, during the trial of that suit, the Defendant No. 1 intervened and claimed that the garden property was, in fact, his property and that it did not belong to the present Petitioner. The matter was gone into and it was, in the end, determined that the property did not belong to the Petitioner, but that it did belong to the Defendant No. 1. In disposing of the application of the Defendants in the suit brought by the Plaintiff, which application was made under Order XXV, r. 1, C. C. P., the learned Judge of the Court below had to determine whether or not the present Petitioner, the Plaintiff, was possessed of sufficient immoveable property within British India to cover the probable costs of the Defendants in the litigation. The only immoveable property of which she alleged she was in possession was this garden property and the learned Judge, in determining the question whether or not that property belonged to the Petitioner, took into consideration the decision in the suit just referred to which had been brought by the Petitioner's daughter against her. It is true that in dealing with that matter the learned Judge remarked that the decision in that case might be treated as having decided the question of the right to the property between the Defendant No. 1 and the Petitioner, and that, therefore, the matter was res judicata; but the learned Judge also, in disposing of the matter, said that, on all the evidence adduced as well as on a consideration of the result of that case, he was not satisfied that the garden property belonged to the Plaintiff. As the Plaintiff did not allege that she had any other immoveable property, the learned Judge granted the application and directed that the Plaintiff should furnish security to the amount of Rs. 6,000. Against that order of the lower Court the present Rule was obtained against the Opposite Party to show cause why that order should not be set aside on the ground that it was made without jurisdiction and that the question whether the Plaintiff was possessed of sufficient immoveable property within British India had not been properly tried.

In support of the Rule, the learned pleader who has appeared on behalf of the Petitioner has, first, argued that the learned Judge has no jurisdiction to pass the order directing the Petitioner to furnish security for costs as the suit was not a suit for the payment of money. We are unable to hold that there is any real substance in this contention. In several cases, the facts of which are very similar to the present case, it has been held that a suit like the present, which, though it may not be exclusively for money, will ordinarily result in a decree for money, and the relief sought comes within the purview of sec. 380 of the old Code of Civil Procedure corresponding with cl. (3) of r. 1 of Order XXV of the amended Code. These cases are Degum- bari Debi v. Ashutosh Banerjee (1) and Sonabai v. Tribhowandas Narotamdas Malvi (2). In our opinion these two cases are sufficient authority for the view which we take that the suit brought by the Petitioner is a suit for the payment of money within the terms of cl. 3 of r. 1 of Order XXV, C. C. P. The learned Judge of the Bombay High Court in the case referred to noticed that attempts were often made in that Court to avoid the applicability of the provisions of sec. 380 of the old Code by introducing into the plaint either a quite unnecessary prayer for some unimportant or useless declaration of an estate. The learned pleader who has appeared to oppose the Rule has argued that, in the present case, no declaration of the title of the Plaintiff is really necessary. What she seeks in the suit is to recover the value of certain ornaments and other moveable property on the allegation that they are her property and do not belong to the Defendant No. 1, and that they have been wrongfully removed from her possession by the Defendant No. 1. We are unable to hold that, because a prayer for declaration of her title has been introduced into the plaint the suit is one which does not fall within the provisions of Order XXV, r. 1, cl. (3), C. C. P.

The second point taken by the learned pleader for the Petitioner is that the lower Court erred in law in holding that the decision regarding the title to the garden property in the mortgage suit must be regarded as determining the question raised in the application made by the Opposite Party and that the matter was res judicata. Reading the judgment of the lower Court as a whole, we do not think that this point is of much consequence. Under the provisions of Order XXV, r. 1, cl. (3), C. C. P., all that the lower Court had to do was to satisfy itself that the Plaintiff did not possess any sufficient immoveable property within British India and the judgment of that Court shows that, on the evidence, the Judge was satisfied that the Plaintiff was not in possession of the garden property which was the only property which she alleged belonged to her. In these circumstances and having regard to the relationship between the parties and the facts connected with the institution of the suit and the other proceedings during the trial, we are of opinion that the lower Court was fully justified in the order which it passed requiring security from the Plaintiff. The amount required is not also, in our opinion, excessive. It has been argued in opposition to the Rule that the order of the lower Court being an interlocutory order is not one with which this Court should interfere under sec. 115 of the Code. We think that, so far as the present case is concerned, this is certainly not a case in which we should interfere under the provisions of that section; and we also think that having regard to the facts stated and the conclusion at which we have arrived it is not a case in which we should interfere under the power of this Court under the powers of this Court under the Charter.

ANANDAMOY CHOWDHURANI v. GOKUL CHANDRA ROY.

The result, therefore, is that the Rule is discharged with costs, five gold mohurs.

Let the record be sent down at once.

Rule discharged.

Railway Company—Goods consigned for carriage—Risk note, Form B—Company absolved from liability in all cases except negligence or dishonesty of its servants—Onus.

Where goods were consigned to a Railway Company for carriage, the contract being embodied in a risk note, Form B, under which, in consideration of the Railway Company accepting a lower freight the consignor absolved the Railway Company from all liability for loss or damage to the goods, subject, however, to the proviso that the Company would be liable for loss due to wilful negligence on the part of their servants or due to thefts by its servants or agents :

Held—That the onus lay on the person seeking to charge the Railway Company with damages for loss of goods to show that the case came within the proviso.

This was a Rule granted on the 23rd of November 1911 against the judgment of Babu Srihari Lahiri, Subordinate Judge of Saran, passed in the exercise of his powers of a Court of Small Causes, dated the 17th of July 1911.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. B. C. Mitter, Mr. J. B. MacNair and Babu Ambica Pada Chowdhury for the Opposite Party.

SHEOBARUT RAM v. THE BENGAL NORTH-WESTERN RY. CO.

This is a Rule calling on the Opposite Party to show cause why the judgment and decree of the Court below in so far as it dismisses a portion of the Plaintiffs' claim should not be set aside. The suit was one in which the Plaintiffs recovered a decree for Rs. 30 but they claimed to be entitled to a considerably larger amount representing the value of some bags of black pepper and catechu which were consigned to them by their vendor and which were not delivered by the Railway Company. The suit was brought against the Railway Company. The terms of the contract under which the Railway Company carried the goods are to be found in a document headed 'Risk note, Form B.' In that document a special contract limiting the liability of the Railway Company was made. And it was agreed between the parties that in consideration of the Railway Company accepting a lower freight than that which they were entitled to charge the person who consigned the goods would absolve them from all liability for loss or damage to the goods. But then inasmuch as the Railway Company is not in law entitled to divest itself of all liability there was a proviso that the Company would be liable for the loss due to wilful negligence on the part of the Railway Company's servants or due to theft by the Company's servants or agents. The result is, when the Plaintiffs sued on that contract which made the Railway Company prima facie not liable the onus lay on them to show that they came within the proviso: because the contract which they entered into expressly absolved the Railway Company from the liability which was imposed upon them by the ordinary law except under certain particular circumstances in which their liability was preserved. Therefore, to succeed on that contract they were obliged to show that they came within the particular exceptions which were provided against the freedom of the Railway Company from all liability. But they failed to show this and therefore failed in their action.

I am unable to accede to the argument which has been put before us by the learned Vakil for the Plaintiffs that the onus lay on the Railway Company. That would be treating the contract in a way which in my view would be wrong because it would be treating the contract as though it were the converse of what it is.

Then it is said that there is no evidence to justify the learned Judge in coming to the conclusion to which he came. But there was evidence, as appears from the judgment, that the wagon containing these goods was found sealed at Sitarampur, that some time before it came to the next station the goods disappeared and that the guard saw some bags lying on the line. I think the Judge is quite justified in inferring from the evidence that some person got into the wagon and threw out the bags with the intention of stealing them. That being so, the Plaintiffs, to bring their case within the exception, had to prove that this was done by the servants or agents of the Railway Company. This the Plaintiffs failed to do.

The result therefore is that the Rule must be discharged, because in my opinion the judgment of the Court below is right.

CASPERSZ, J.—I agree.

Rule discharged.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 154, responsibility, under, test of—Sentence under, how the amount is to be determined.

A certain naib of an estate got up a riot in order to dispossess certain persons by force. Three ladies having interest in the estate did not themselves do or omit to do any of the things set out under sec. 154, I. P. C., but they were responsible for the appointment of the officers under the estate; their adopted sons although they took some share in the active management of the estate were in no way responsible for the appointment of the naib who brought about the riot. On the conviction of the ladies and the adopted sons under sec. 154, I. P. C.:

Held—That it was impossible to punish in every case under sec. 154, I. P. C., every person who had any interest in the land. The responsibility must depend upon the fact of the person who caused the riot being himself the person who has an interest in the land or an agent or manager of such person.

That the adopted sons could not be held guilty under sec. 154, I. P. C.

That the liabilities of the ladies were joint, but the case against them being a criminal one separate sentences should be passed against each of them. But in awarding punishment the extent of the responsibility of the estate should be kept in view rather than the number of individuals who are responsible under sec. 154, I. P. C.

This was a Rule granted on the 5th of February 1912 against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate (Mr. C. W. Jacob) of Patuakhali, dated the 31st of August 1911, convicting the Petitioners under secs. 154 and 155, I. P. C., and sentencing them each under each section to pay a fine of Rs. 500, which order was on appeal modified by the Sessions Judge (Mr. A. J. Chotzner) of Backergunge on the 21st of November 1911 by setting aside the conviction and sentence passed under sec. 155, I. P. C.

The facts material to the report will appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri and Babu Gunoda Charan Sen for the Petitioners.

Babu Monmatha Nath Mukherjee for the Crown.

This was a Rule calling on the District Magistrate of Backergunge to show cause why the conviction and sentence passed on the Petitioners should not be set aside, or such other order passed as to this Court may seem fit on the ground that it is doubtful which of the Petitioners, if any, is liable under sec. 154, I. P. C.

Now the facts are that a certain naib of the estate got up a riot in order to dispossess certain persons by force. Four rioters were convicted, one of them was sentenced to one month and three others to two months' rigorous imprisonment. The first point, therefore, which we have to notice is that this riot appears not to have been in any sense a serious one. There is no doubt under sec. 174, I. P. C., that the owner or occupier of the land or any person having or claiming an interest in such land is punishable with fine not exceeding Rs. 1,000 if he or his agent or manager do not use all lawful means in their power to prevent it, and in the event of its taking place use all lawful means in had the full text of the judgment of their Lordships before us.

THE LETTER OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA TO the Government of Orissa and Behar on the question of the establishment of a High Court for the new Province is in many respects a remarkable document. The first thing that strikes us about it is that its language is singularly inelegant. Even the very opening sentences are not only clumsy and entangled but are very faulty in their construction and inaccurate in their expressions. For instance the letter says that "it is necessary to examine the existing system under which the High Court of Calcutta is the highest judicial tribunal in this country in respect of litigation arising from the areas which now constitute the new province, and to consider whether it is desirable that this arrangement should continue or whether in these matters Behar and Orissa should be self-contained, a new High Court being established at Patna." The italics are our own. In the observations that follow we do not find any examination of the system that now exists. Nor do we find any consideration of the momentous questions whether the establishment of a High Court at Patna would not be a source of great hardship to the people of Orissa, Singbhum, Manbhum and other areas to the east and south of Chota Nagpur. The Government of India is surely aware that the grievances of the people of these areas have been publicly and frequently discussed in the newspapers and that memorials have also been submitted to them from Orissa protesting against the establishment of a High Court at Patna at any rate. It is therefore not at all fair to Orissa and the adjoining areas that the Government of India should pass over their protests without taking even the slightest notice of their representations and issue a mandate on the Local Government that the High Court for the new province, if established, shall be at Patna.

WE HOPE THAT IN THIS MATTER THE GOVERNMENT of Behar and Orissa would consult the opinion of the people of Orissa before communicating their mature opinion to the Government of India on the question. It would be highly unfair to

THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE HAS DELIVERED JUDGMENT in the case of Clarke v. Brojendra Kishore which was an appeal against the appellate decision of the Calcutta High Court in the well known case, arising out of the Jamalpore riots. Their Lordships appear from the telegraphic reports to have decreed the appeal in full. The summary of the judgment cabled by the Pioneer's London correspondent is not remarkable for its perspicuity. We gather from the summary that their Lordships were of opinion that the action of Mr. Clarke in going upon the Plaintiff's kutcherry and doing what he did was justified by the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code relating to the issue of search warrants. We do not feel ourselves justified in offering comments on this view of the case without looking into the full judgment. All that we can now say is that the telegraphic summary does not convince us that a correct view of the law and the pleadings in the case has been taken by the Judicial Committee. We find that Lord Macnaghten is reported to have observed in the judgment that the words Court and Magistrate have been used as convertible terms in the Criminal Procedure Code. The proposition is so startling and involves such wide issues that we can scarcely believe that that their Lordships could have meant to lay down such a broad proposition. We must therefore suspend our opinion on the judgment till we have Orissa if in every matter Behar is made to play the part of the dominant partner. If the convenience and interest of Orissa are thus systematically ignored by the Imperial Government, who are responsible for annexing her to Behar, we have no doubt that Orissa would soon demand the dissolution of her partnership with Behar with which she has nothing in common and would long to revert to Bengal with which she is indissolubly bound up by linguistic and religious ties. The Government of India may have committed themselves rashly to the selection of Patna as the capital of the new Province but why should they be so anxious again to repeat the blunder with reference to the location of the High Court to the serious inconvenience and detriment of a very integral and important part of the new Province. We had suggested a scheme which, without breaking up the Calcutta High Court, would have avoided all hardship to the people of Orissa and might have been to the advantage of Behar as well in many respects. But if it be not acceptable to Government and if a separate High Court must be established let it be established in a healthy locality and some central position which would be easily accessible to all.

ON OTHER QUESTIONS AS WELL THE LETTER OF Government of India presents various other anomalies. In the ordinary course we should have expected the Local Government to formulate a scheme on a question like this instead of the Government of India taking the initiative and foisting its own suggestions on the Local Government and thus handicapping it to a great extent. Next, it is quite evident from the Government of India's letters that the High Court of Calcutta has not up to now been consulted on the question of the proposed High Court for the new Province although they knew very well that the new High Court, when formed, could only be carved out of the old one. We thought that under such circumstance in ordinary courtesy and common fairness, the High Court of Calcutta should have been first consulted on the question. It was indeed very generous on the part of the Calcutta High Court to have offered to co-operate in the execution of any proposal which may be decided upon by the Government of India. On the face of this it is somewhat painful to us to read the letters of the Government of India to the Behar Government and the High Court of Calcutta side by side. On the question of its jurisdiction and its curtailment territorially as also the "policy," and "the administrative issues involved," the High Court may very well legitimately lay the claim to be first consulted. The Government of India has not certainly acted very wisely or candidly in not communicating their proposals to the High Court and in merely asking them to compile figures and submit them.

THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA EVEN BEFORE CONSULTING the High Court or the Local Government have already expressed their opinion that seven judges would be required. We defer our criticism on this question till the figures which the High Court has been asked to compile are published. But judging from the figures laid on the table during the last session of the Imperial Legislative Council, it would appear that roughly speaking about a third of the appellate work of the High Court ordinarily came from the new Province. If we leave out three judges who have to devote their time to Original Side and Sessions and other extraordinary work, of the remaining judges who attend to the appellate work, a third would then suffice to deal with the work from the new Province. So we have serious doubts whether more than five judges would be required for the new High Court. Of course, with a High Court at Patna litigation in Behar might increase but on the other hand people of Orissa and adjoining areas will have to ponder whether it would not be preferable to forego the right of appeal rather than incur the expense of a journey to Patna and the very great risks to life there during the plague season.

THE GOVERNMENT OF ORISSA AND BEHAR HAS been told by the Government of India, that the High Court of Calcutta will hereafter be consulted about the "appropriate accommodation and establishment" and, we presume, about the number of judges as well and we are very thankful to the Government of India for this assurance. But, as we have already remarked, the letter of the Government of India is singularly unhappy in giving expression to its ideas and thoughts on the subject. After struggling hard over almost every sentence of the Government of India's letter to the Local Government to ascertain what they exactly mean, we must sadly confess that we are hopelessly puzzled when we come to the concluding lines. They speak of "provision of buildings in keeping with the dignity of the Court" (whatever that may mean) which the India Government say "would be a necessary preliminary to its creation," but in the very preceding sentence they say that "the precise extent of accommodation required by a new Court can be decided hereafter." So we take it that as a preliminary the Local Government is to prepare imposing plans and estimates of the new High Court buildings with only the specification of "befitting dignity" before it and that the Calcutta High Court is to advise about the "extent of the accommodation" required after the plans are matured by the Local Government. The concluding passage of the Government letter is so very luminous that we cannot refrain from quoting it in extenso. "The precise extent of accommodation required by a new Court can be decided hereafter, but the provision of buildings in keeping with the dignity of the Court would be the necessary preliminary to its creation." The italics are our own.

ON TUESDAY LAST, THEIR LORDSHIPS HOLMWOOD and Imam, JJ., delivered their judgment in what is known as the Cotton Gambling Case. It will be remembered that some months ago, the Calcutta Police raided some houses where gambling in cotton figures was carried on and prosecuted some of the persons engaged in this trade which their Lordships very correctly characterise as pernicious. They were convicted by Mr. Keays, 2nd Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, who held that this form of wagering came within the scope of sec. 44 of the Calcutta Police Act. Against this the accused obtained a rule and their Lordships decided that the houses did not come within the definition of Common Gaming House in the Police Act and acquitted the accused. In a previous issue (16 C. W. N. lxxxii) we discussed the legal aspects of the game and expressed a doubt whether this form of game came within the provisions of the law as laid down in the Calcutta Police Act. In that view it would be difficult to say that the decision of their Lordships is not a correct interpretation of the law. We think that the Bengal Government was not well-advised in starting the prosecutions in question before legislating on the matter. At the time we had drawn prominent attention to this evil, the Local Government could very well have introduced a Bill in the Bengal Council and got it passed.

THEIR LORDSHIPS VERY PROPERLY POINTED OUT in the course of their judgment that their duty on the Bench was confined to giving an interpretation of the law and not expressing any opinion on the policy or morality of allowing these bettings to go on. With that aspect of the question their Lordships had nothing to do and in this matter the learned judges' views will find strong support from a very recent pronouncement of the Judicial Committee in the case of Attorney-General of Quebec, &c. v. Attorney-General of Canada. There Lord Loreburn very emphatically said that "it cannot be too strongly put that with the wisdom or expediency or policy of an Act lawfully passed, no Court has a word to say." The question before their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in that case was whether an Act passed by the Canadian Parliament was ultra vires and considerations of public policy were pressed before their Lordships.

"With that," their Lordships observed, "this Board is in no sense concerned. A Court of law has nothing to do with a Canadian Act of Parliament lawfully passed, except to give it effect according to its tenor. No one who has experience of judicial duties can doubt that, if an Act of this kind were abused, manifold evils might follow, including undeserved suspicion of the course of justice and much embarrassment and anxiety to the Judges themselves. Such considerations are proper, no doubt, to be weighed by those who make and by those who administer the law of Canada. . . . So far as it is a matter of wisdom or policy it is for the determination of the Parliament."

IT SEEMS TO BE SUGGESTED IN SOME QUARTERS that in interpreting the law in the gambling case, the Court would have been justified in straining its words from consideration of the pernicious character of these transactions and their evil effect on public morality. We have no hesitation in repudiating the suggestion as very objectionable. Public policy, it has been observed, is an unruly horse and it is always risky to allow judges to have recourse to it when they want to override the provisions of a statute. It is clear however that legislation on the subject is imperative. Their Lordships also have expressed an opinion on the character of the transactions which leave no doubt about what they think of it. We should urge therefore, as we have already suggested before, that some law on the lines of the English Betting Act should be passed at once. The fact that there is no Legislative Council in Bengal is no bar, for there is nothing to prevent the Supreme Council from introducing a Bill and passing it as speedily as possible. The evil is a growing one in all the big cities of India and legislation by the Government of India will therefore be quite appropriate.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

Consent decree if may be set aside by motion.

A consent decree puts an end to a litigation so far as that Court is concerned unless it is re-opened by way of review, failing which a suit must be brought. Remedy by motion to Court should be available only where no regular remedy is provided. So a consent decree could not be set aside by motion though there may be extreme cases where the impeached decree is so defective that the Court treats it as a nullity in which case possibly it may be got rid of by motion.

Hindu Law—Alienation by widow—Legal necessity—Pilgrimage and betrothal of daughter.

A Hindu widow alienated part of the immoveable property inherited by her from her husband partly to repay her husband's debts partly for the expenses of a pilgrimage to Pandharpur and partly for the expenses of a betrothal of her daughter. The betrothal was found to have been in accordance with the custom of the caste to which the parties belonged. Held, therefore, that she was justified in incurring the expenditure. With reference to the pilgrimage expenses, they having been incurred for the spiritual benefit of her husband they were allowable so far as they were reasonable having regard to the estate, the status of the family and other considerations which it is customary for Hindus to take into account. The alienations were therefore upheld in part. The question as to what amount was reasonably necessary in the particular case was one of fact which could not be reconsidered in second appeal.

[NOTE.—It does not appear from the report whether the pilgrimage to Pandharpur was for presenting funeral oblations to the husband and thus for the benefit of his soul within the meaning of the decision in 8 M. I. A. 529 referred to by the learned Judges.]

Hindu Law—Hereditary Priesthood—Nibandha.

Where a caste appoints a person the "hereditary priest" of the caste, his office becomes one in the nature of immoveable property. A suit to establish title to such office is not a mere caste question, but one relating to property.

In order to constitute the office of the hereditary priest of a caste or certain families, a Nibandha and as such property, it is not necessary that it should be created by royal grant. The office is a creature of custom and custom annexed to the office certain incidents in the nature of civil rights as against the family which neither the family nor the caste has the right to annul except on the ground of some offence under Hindu law.

A suit by a descendant of a hereditary priest for establishment of his right as such was therefore held maintainable and decreed.

Civil Procedure Code, sec. 115.—Award, decree on, how may be set aside—Excess of jurisdiction and material irregularity.

There being no appeal against a decree passed on the award of an arbitration the appeal was treated as an application in revision.

The High Court of Bombay has jurisdiction to interfere in revision with the orders of his Britannic Majesty's Court at Zanzibar.

A suit for possession of a few pots and pans on the allegation of a title as mutwali was instituted by the Plaintiff. In the course of the suit some other persons were added as parties. All the persons concerned including some who were not parties to the suit, asked the Judge to act as arbitrator, but there was no written reference and the reference included questions between the parties which were not in suit and included the framing of a scheme for the administration of a large religious endowment. On these grounds the arbitration was held to be wholly irregular as also because no suit for administration of an endowment could be instituted without the Advocate-General's sanction.

The award was made on 30th June 1904 and the application to have it filed not having been made till 1909 was time-barred.

Further the Plaintiff died during suit and no attempt was made to substitute his heirs, so that the suit had abated before the award.

Held, that a decree passed on such award was liable to be set aside in revision. That the High Court has jurisdiction to set aside decrees passed on awards in such circumstances.

Where a legacy has not been assented to by the Executor the prayer in such suit must include a demand for the administration of the whole estate. Whether this last object was a valid one for a wakf or not held upon a construction of the Will that as the general object of the bequest was charitable it was a valid wakf and that even if the third bequest was invalid, the funds would be devoted to some like charitable object on the cyprus doctrine.

THE LAW OF MISREPRESENTATION IN RELATION TO LIMITED LIABILITY COMPANIES. By A. M. Brice. Price 5s. Sweet & Maxwell, London.

Both lawyers and laymen will find this book very useful either in avoiding the pitfalls in promoting companies or in safeguarding one's interests either as director or shareholder of companies in the course of formation. The first three chapters explain clearly by reference to the English Statutes and leading cases what would amount to misrepresentation on the part of promoters and directors which would fasten personal liability on them; the next chapter, under what circumstances action for deceit would lie and also cases where unauthorised deceit by companies' servants would not fasten any liability on the company. Chaps. V and VIII deal with circumstances under which rescission of contracts would be denied or specific performance would be refused on account of misrepresentation. The effect of laches and the operation of the doctrine of estoppel in connection with misrepresentations are also treated under separate chapters. The concluding chapter deals with the criminal liability of directors and agents of a company for fraudulent misrepresentation. All these headings have been very clearly and yet very succinctly explained.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—Galloway v. Schill, Seeborn & Co., "Ld." Before THE LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND AND PICKFORD AND AVORY, JJ. 26th April 1912.

A Company's balance-sheet, what must it contain?

This was the hearing of a case stated. The Respondents were a public company, and the summary forwarded by them to the Registrar was in the form of a balance-sheet which, under the heading "Assets," contained the entry, "Good-will, trade marks, machinery, furniture, and fixtures, £100,007." Buildings, machinery, and fixtures were stated to be taken at cost less depreciation; and good-will and trade marks at the sum at which they were taken over by the company, but no details were given of these items.

The Magistrate dismissed the summons holding that the balance-sheet was proper. The Appellant contended that it was not a sufficient compliance with sec. 26, sub-sec. 3 of the Company's Act, 1908. The Court allowed the appeal. In the course of his judgment the Lord Chief Justice said:—

The section provided that the statement sent in by the company should contain "a summary of its share capital, its liabilities, and its assets, giving such particulars as will disclose the general nature of those liabilities and assets, and how the values of the fixed assets have been arrived at." It was not necessary for him to attempt to define the expression "fixed assets"; he was content to take it as meaning probably the same thing as "fixed capital," which, in Lord Justice Buckley's book on Companies (p. 653), was defined as meaning "property acquired and intended for retention and employment with a view to profit as distinguished from 'circulating capital,' meaning property acquired or produced with a view to resale or sale at a profit." The statute said that the shareholders had to know how the values of the fixed assets had been arrived at, and it could not be right to tell shareholders that the company had, as to part of the figure x, applied one mode of valuation, and as to another part had applied another mode. To put together machinery, &c., with such items as good-will and trade marks was not right where the value of the good-will and trade marks was taken at their value when taken over by the company, and the value of the machinery, &c., was taken at cost price less depreciation. He did not lay down what the summary must give but this summary was defective. The Solicitor-General had not asked them to say that a distinction must be made between good-will and trade marks; but the balance-sheet should show what was fixed on the one principle and what was fixed on another principle.

The Solicitor-General (Sir J. Simon, K. C.) and Messrs. Sargent, Racburn and Thomas for the Appellant.

Sir R. Finlay, K. C., and Messrs. Younger, K. C., and Atkinson for the Respondents.

THE DOMINION COTTON MILLS COMPANY, LIMITED and others,

v.
GEORGE E. AMYOT and others, Respondents, and ALFRED BRUNET, Intervenant.

Comp. ny—Resolution by majority of shareholders—Minority, remedy of.

The action was brought by two shareholders in the Dominion Cotton Mills Company, Limited, hereinafter called the Cotton Company, in their individual capacity against the Cotton Company and the Dominion Textile Company, Limited, hereinafter called the Textile Company, seeking to set aside a lease of the Cotton Company's mills, dated the 10th of November 1905, which was granted by the Cotton Company to the Textile Company for the period of 21 years from the 1st of April 1905, as well as a resolution passed by the Cotton Company in general meeting approving of that lease.

The Trial Judge in the Superior Court gave judgment for the Plaintiffs and set aside both the resolution and the lease with costs against both Companies.

In the Superior Court in review the judgment of the Trial Judge was affirmed by a majority of two judges to one, Charbonneau, J., dissenting. Hence this appeal.

The grounds on which the Plaintiffs claimed relief were (1) that the lease was ultra vires of the Cotton Company, and (2) that the transaction was of a fraudulent character and amounted to a confiscation of the interests of the Plaintiffs and other dissentient shareholders. Their Lordships found against the Plaintiffs on both the said points and allowed the appeal. In the course of their judgment which was delivered by LORD MACNAGHTEN they said:—

seek redress against the action of the majority of their associates are well settled. In order to succeed it is incumbent on the minority either to show that the action of the majority is ultra vires or to prove that the majority have abused their powers and are depriving the minority of their rights. It would be pedantry to go through the line of decisions by which those principles have been established. But there is a passage in a recent judgment of this Board in the case of Burland v. Earle, 1902, A. C. 83, which has the high authority of Lord Davey, so apposite to the circumstances of the present case, that it may be useful to cite it at length.

"It is," say their Lordships, "an elementary principle of the law relating to joint stock companies that the Court will not interfere with the internal management of companies acting within their power, and, in fact, has no jurisdiction to do so. Again, it is clear law that in order to redress a wrong done to the company or to recover moneys or damages alleged to be due to the company the action should be primò facie brought by the company itself. These cardinal principles are laid down in the well-known cases of Foss v. Harbottle, 2 Hare. 461 and Mochly v. Alston, 1 Ph. 799, and in numerous later cases which it is unnecessary to cite. But an exception is made to the second rule where the persons against whom the relief is sought themselves hold and control the majority of the shares in the company and will not permit an action to be brought in the name of the company. In that case the Courts allow the shareholders complaining to bring an action in their own names. This, however, is a mere matter of procedure in order to give a remedy for a wrong which would otherwise escape redress, and it is obvious that in such an action the Plaintiffs cannot have a larger right to relief than the company itself would have if it were Plaintiff, and cannot complain of acts which are valid if done with the approval of the majority of the shareholders or are capable of being confirmed by the majority. The cases in which the minority can maintain such an action are therefore confined to those in which the acts complained of are of a fraudulent character or beyond the powers of the company. A familiar example is where the majority are endeavouring directly or indirectly to appropriate to themselves money, property, or advantages which belong to the company or in which the other shareholders are entitled to participate, as was alleged in the case of Menier v. Hooper's Telegraph Works, 9 Ch. 350. It should be added that no mere informality or irregularity which can be remedied by the majority will entitle the minority to sue if the act when done regularly would be within the powers of the company and the intention of the majority of the shareholders is clear. This may be the illustrated by the judgment of Mellish, L. J., in MacDougall v. Gardiner, L. Ch. D. 13.

"There is yet a third principle which is important for the decision of this case. Unless otherwise provided by the regulations of the company a shareholder is not debarred from voting or using his voting power to carry a resolution by the circumstance of his having a particular interest in the subject matter of the vote. This is shown by the case before this Board of the North-West Transportation Company, Limited v. Beatty, 12 A. C. 589. In that case the resolution of a general meeting to purchase a vessel at the vendor's price was held to be valid notwithstanding that the vendor himself held the majority of the shares in the company, and the resolution was carried by his votes against the minority who complained.

FAIRCLOUGH

v.

THE SWAN BREWERY COMPANY, LIMITED.

Equity of redemption, clogging of - Provision allowing redemption merely a pretence.

This was an appeal from the Supreme Court of the State of Western Australia. The Appellant in this case became the registered proprietor of a lease of the Federal Hotel, Katanning, for the residue of a term of twenty years from the 12th of June 1905.

By an instrument of mortgage, dated the 27th of December 1907, the Appellant therein called "the mortgagor," in consideration of the sum of 500*l.* lent to him by the Respondent Company, and in consideration of all moneys which might thereafter become owing by the mortgagor to the Company for goods supplied, etc., covenanted with the Company as follows:—

"That the mortgagor will pay to the Company the said principal sum of 500*l.*, by 209 successive monthly instalments as follows, that is to say, 208 instalments of 2*l.* 8*s.* each, and one final instalment of 16*s.*, the first of such monthly instalments of 2*l.* 8*s.* to be paid on the 1st day of January next, and a subsequent instalment to be paid on the 1st day of every succeeding month thereafter until the whole of the said principal sum of 500*l.* shall be paid off, provided always that the mortgagor shall not be at liberty to pay off the said principal sum, except by the instalments, and at the times aforesaid, without the express consent in writing of the Company on each occasion first had and obtained."

Then followed a covenant for payment of interest on the amount from time to time remaining unpaid, at the rate of 7*l.* per cent. per annum on the first day of every calendar month, and other covenants including a covenant stipulating in effect that during the continuance of the security the Federal Hotel should be a tied house in favour of the Company. For better securing the payment in manner aforesaid of the said principal sum and interest, and all other moneys intended to be thereby secured, the mortgagor thereby mortgaged all his estate and interest in the Federal Hotel to the Company.

It would thus appear that without the consent in writing of the Company, the mortgage debt of 500*l.* was not to be wholly paid off until the 1st of May 1925 that is just six weeks before the actual expiration of the lease.

In December 1909 the Company were prevented by accidental circumstances from supplying the Appellant with beer in accordance with a covenant on their part contained in the mortgage deed. The Appellant thereupon assumed to treat the tie as at an end, and obtained beer from other quarters. The Company brought an action for damages and for an injunction. The Appellant, who apparently had already offered to redeem, counterclaimed for redemption. McMillan, J., gave judgment for the Company in the action, and assessed the damages at 87. On the counter-claim he gave judgment for the Appellant, holding that by law he was entitled to redeem. On appeal to the Full Court an order was made in the action in favour of the Company with a reference as to damages. The counter-claim was dismissed with costs. Hence the present Appeal which was allowed.

In the course of their Lordships' judgment which was delivered by LORD MACNAGHTEN, they said:—

"There is" as Kindersley, V. C., said in Gossip v. Wright, 32 L.J., Ch. 653, "no doubt that the broad rule is this: that the Court will not allow the right of redemption in any way to be hampered or crippled in that which the parties intended to be a security either by any contemporaneous instrument with the deed in question, or by anything which this Court would regard as a simultaneous arrangement or part of the same transaction." The rule in comparatively recent times was unsettled by certain decisions in the Court of Chancery in England which seem to have misled the learned Judges in the Full Court. But it is now firmly established by the House of Lords that the old rule still prevails and that equity will not permit any device or contrivance being part of the mortgage transaction or contemporaneous with it to prevent or impede redemption. The learned Counsel on behalf of the Respondents admitted as he was bound to admit that a mortgage cannot be made irredeemable. That is plainly forbidden. Is there any difference between forbidding redemption and permitting it, if the permission be a mere pretence? Here the provision for redemption is nugatory. The incumbrance on the lease the subject of the mortgage according to the letter of the bargain falls to be discharged before the lease terminates, but at a time when it is on the very point of expiring when redemption can be of no advantage to the mortgagor even if he should be so fortunate as to get his deeds back before the actual termination of the lease. For all practical purposes this mortgage is irredeemable. It was obviously meant to be irredeemable. It was made irredeemable in and by the mortgage itself."

The appeal was allowed and the decision of McMillan, J., was restored.

Second appeal—Main ground of first Appellate Court's judgment non-existent—Evidence, estimate of—Remand.

The appeal was against the decree of the District Judge of 24 Pergunnahs reversing that of the Subordinate Judge and dismissing a suit for the recovery of possession of some 600 bighas of land in the Sunderbans. The Plaintiff's vendor, Shama Charan Das, obtained from the landlord, the third Defendant, on the 22nd June 1909, a permanent lease for the reclamation of a chak in the lot known as Jeliakhali, and the first Defendant obtained a similar lease on the 12th August following, of two adjoining chaks, one to the north, and the other to the east, of the chak of Shama Charan Das. The Plaintiff charged that the Defendant had, by erecting an embankment south of the Bhardubi Khal, which was fixed by the leases as the northern boundary of the former's chak and the southern boundary of the first of the latter's chaks, encroached upon and wrongfully taken possession of the lands in suit. The first Court gave the Plaintiff a decree subject to the payment to the Defendant of the expenses actually incurred by the latter in reclaiming the lands; but on the Defendant's appeal the suit was dismissed in toto and the Plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

The first Appellate Court found that there was in the lease (by which it meant each of the leases) a clause providing that there should be a consultation and arrangement between the parties regarding the precise division of the lands covered by the two, that in pursuance of that understanding, it was agreed between Shama Charan Das and the Defendant that the embankment complained of should be erected on the boundary; and that the embankment was erected accordingly.

Held—That when the main ground which a Judge below took had no existence, the Appellate Court could not be satisfied that his estimate of the evidence was a proper one. The High Court remanded the appeal for a reconsideration of the evidence as it really stood, and not as it had been supposed it to have stood.

The Appellant was the gomasta of the Respondent. He was prosecuted by the Respondent for criminal breach of trust under sec. 408 of the Indian Penal Code, in respect of certain moneys collected in the course of his duty. The Magistrate before whom the case was being tried suggested, after having drawn up a charge, that the matter was one which might appropriately be settled out of Court. Accordingly the matter was settled out of Court. The Appellant executed a mortgage-bond for the amount embezzled, and though the withdrawal of the criminal prosecution was not mentioned in the instrument as forming part of the consideration, the prosecution was in fact dropped by the Respondent after the execution of the deed, and the Appellant was then acquitted or discharged.

The suit out of which the appeal arose, was afterwards brought upon the mortgage-bond executed in the circumstances just described, and it was decreed by both the Courts below. The Defendant then preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

Held—That the offence being non-compoundable it was against public policy to compound it, any agreement to that end was wholly void in law.

The Respondent obtained a money-decree against the Appellants under Act X of 1859 on compromise. The compromise petition stated that the money would be paid in two instalments failing which the Appellants will get interest at 6 per cent. The decree drawn up was to this effect:—"To-day the papers being put up before the Court it is ordered in terms of the solenamah filed by the parties that in accordance with the solenamah a decree may be passed in favour of the Plaintiff for Rs. 3,500 and cost of suit Rs. 247-9-6. Total Rs. 3,747-9-6." The Respondent executed the decree and attached moveables of the debtors under sec. 109 and realized some money. On the 20th May 1911, he applied for execution of the decree for Rs. 3,500 with interest by attachment of the moveables, then immoveables and then persons of the judgment-debtors excepting two. The judgment-debtors objected that under sec. 109, Act X of 1859, the decree-holder's application was not maintainable for he must exhaust the moveables of all the judgment-debtors first before applying for process against their persons and immovable properties and that under the terms of the decree he was not entitled to interest. The Court below overruled the objections and against that order the debtors preferred the above appeal and application under sec. 115, C. P. C.

Held—(1) Sec. 109, Act X of 1859, contemplates a single execution creditor and a single debtor, it does not refer to the case of joint and several decrees. The decree-holder in this case is entitled to proceed against as money debtors as he chooses. (2) The proposition that no application for attachment and sale of immovable property can be entertained so long as there is any moveable is too broadly put. This cannot at least be said of a subsequent application in, which it is not obligatory to proceed against moveables that might have come into existence in the interval; but it is not the duty of the debtor to prove that he has sufficient moveables. 10 W. R. 341 followed. (3) It is not a condition precedent to proceed against the person of the debtor before applying for sale of his immovable properties. (4) The decree as drawn provides for no interest and the decree-holder is not entitled to interest.

their power to disperse or suppress the riot and if they knowing or having reason to believe that such an offence is being or has been committed or is likely to be committed do not give the earliest notice thereof in their power to the nearest police station. In this case it is admitted that the ladies themselves did not do or omit to do any of the things which are set out under sec. 154. It was their agent or naib who got up the riot apparently to promote his own ends and who did not take any steps to prevent it or give notice to the police station. The ladies therefore in this case or their adopted sons would be responsible for having appointed such an agent and for not having removed him.

The question therefore which arises in this case is as to who was responsible for the management of this estate and for the appointment of the officers under the estate. It is clearly proved by the general manager, Mr. Savi, that the three ladies Siva Sundari Chaudhrani and two others were fully responsible for these appointments; and that although their adopted sons took some share in the active management of the estate they are in no way responsible for the appointment of this naib who created this riot. It seems to us impossible to punish in every case every person who has any interest in the land. The responsibility must depend upon the fact of the person who caused the riot being himself the person who has an interest in the land or an agent or manager of such person; and one of the facts to be proved was whose agent or manager the person who fomented the riot is. In this case we cannot trace the appointment of this naib to any one else but the three ladies, and the conviction and sentence therefore against the two adopted sons, Dakhina Ranjan Ray Choudhry and Ramesh Chandra Ray Choudhry, must be set aside and the fine if paid must be refunded.

Then as regards the liabilities of the ladies, we think that in this case they must be considered to be jointly liable, although the case being one under the criminal law separate sentences have to be passed against each of them; and we think that in all these cases what should be considered is the extent of the responsibility entailed upon the estate by the occurrence, for it would be manifestly inequitable that in a riot between two sets of zemindars, where there are 100 co-owners on one side and one only on the other, that the one man should be fined Rs. 100 and the hundred men should be fined Rs. 100 each, which seems to be the principle upon which the present case has been decided. We consider that a fine of Rs. 300 would amply meet the justice of this case.

We reduce the sentence on each of the ladies to a fine of one hundred rupees each and in default one month's simple imprisonment. The Rule is so far made absolute and the balance of the fine if paid will be refunded.

LORD ATKINSON.		COMPANY,
LORD SHAW.		Appellants,
SIR JOHN EDGE.		v.
MR. AMEER ALI.		SHAPURJI BURJORJI
1912,		BHAROOCHA,
3, May.		Respondent.

Guarantee, letter of, construction of—Conditional or unconditional guarantee—Undertaking by broker to find money on mortgage of debtor's property and pay off sum advanced by creditor—Debtor declining to make the mortgage through broker, if discharges broker's liability to pay off advance.

VISSANJI, SONS, AND COMPANY v. SHAPURJI BURJORJI BHAROOCHA.

D. being in financial difficulties approached V. for an advance of 1½ lac of rupees, representing that he was about to raise a loan of 11 lacs on a first mortgage of certain Mills through broker B. and would pay off V.'s advance out of that loan. V. advanced the money to D. upon B. signing a guarantee to this effect: "In consideration of your having at my request acceded to the proposal of D. to advance to him a sum of Rs. 1½ lacs I hereby bind myself to you to procure a loan within two weeks of Rs. 11 lacs as the first mortgage of the Mills, and to pay you thereout the sum of Rs. 1½ lac agreed to be advanced by you to the Mills: "

Held—That by this document, B. gave a substantial undertaking that a loan should be procured and out of the loan the sum of Rs. 1½ lac was to be paid to V., and not merely a conditional undertaking that B. would procure the lending of 11 lacs if a first mortgage of the Mills was given and pay thereout Rs. 1½ lacs to V.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Bombay, dated the 23rd August 1910, on an appeal from a judgment and decree of the said Court in its original civil jurisdiction, dated the 11th February 1910.

The only question for determination upon this appeal was whether the Respondent personally guaranteed by a letter, dated the 7th August 1909, the payment to the Appellants of a sum of Rs. 1,50,000.

The facts giving rise to this litigation shortly stated were as follows:—

One Dwarkadas Dharamsey was a partner in the firm of Tricumdas Dwarkadas & Co., who acted as the secretaries, treasurers and managers of the Tricumdas Mills Co., Limited.

The business of the mills was in the main carried on and managed by the said Dwarkadas Dharamsey.

In August 1909 he, his firm, and the Tircumdas Mills Company were in financial difficulties and on the 7th August 1909 Dwarkadas Dharmsey applied to the Appellants for a loan of Rs. 1,50,000 to be made to the mills, which was refused.

He explained to the Appellants that he was about to raise a loan of 11 lakhs of rupees on first mortgage of the mills through the Respondent, and that the proposed advance of Rs. 1,50,000 for which he asked would be repaid out of that loan.

The Appellants and the said Dwarkadas Dharmsey thereupon had a draft letter prepared by their solicitors, which was to be put before the Respondent for his signature.

The said Dwarkadas Dharamsey on that same date called on the Respondent and informed him that the Appellants required assurance from him before they would make the said advance and requested him to sign the said letter.

The Respondent had at the time a large sum of money belonging to a principal of his available for the said investment, and he agreed to procure the said loan which was to be secured upon a first mortgage of the said mills.

On the 7th August 1909, the Respondent was requested to and did sign a letter stating his ability to procure the said loan in terms of a draft produced by the said Dwarkadas Dharmsey which is quoted in their Lordships' judgment.

Dwarkadas Dharamsey took the said letter to the Appellants and obtained from them an advance of Rs. 1,50,000 which was secured by a promissory note signed by Tricumdas Mills Company and the

VISSANJI, SONS, AND COMPANY v. SHAPURJI BURJORJI BHAROOCHA.

Appellants' firm of Tricumdas Dwarkadas & Co.

The said advance was debited in the books of account of the Appellants to the said mills and the said firm.

On the 9th August 1909, the Respondent heard from the Dwarkadas Dharamsey that he would not require the Respondent to procure him the loan, as the firm of Shival Motilal had arranged to lend the sum of 5 lakhs to the mills on a further mortgage.

The Respondent immediately wrote and informed the Appellants of the refusal by Dwarkadas to contract with the Respondent and told him to look to the said Shival Motilal and the said Dwarkadas Dharamsey to reserve for him the sum of Rs. 1,50,000 from the amount of the further loan.

The Respondent received no reply to his said letter until the 24th August 1909, when the Appellants wrote and demanded the payment of the said sum of Rs. 1,50,000.

On the 25th August 1909, the Respondent replied to the Appellants' letter of demand and repudiated all liability stating that he had been and was then in a position to procure and advance the said loan on the first mortgage, and to carry through the said transaction, but that Dwarkadas Dharamsey refused to mortgage the mills to him.

On the 28th August 1909, the said Dwarkadas Dharamsey committed suicide.

On the 11th October 1909, the Appellants instituted the present suit in the High Court of Bombay.

They alleged that the Respondent had failed to keep his promise contained in the said letter and had broken his contract and they prayed for a decree for Rs. 1,50,000 with interest at 6 per cent. and costs.

The Respondent filed a written statement in answer. He denied that he in fact requested the Appellants to advance any money to the said mills, or that he promised to repay any such advance, and he stated that he received no consideration for the said letter.

He stated that he was always ready and willing to perform what he had undertaken to do, and he denied that he had failed in his promise or broken any contract of his.

He contended that under the circumstances which had taken place it became impossible for him to pay Rs. 1,50,000 out of the mortgage loan to the Appellants.

He further contended that the Appellants accepted the determination of any contract under the said letter of the 7th August 1909, and agreed with Dwarkadas Dharamsey to get his advance paid out of the loan which would be made by Shival Motilal upon the further mortgage.

On these pleadings the following issues were fixed for trial :—

(1) Whether the Plaintiffs advanced Rs. 1,50,000 to the Tricumdas Mills on the faith of the letter A to the plaint.

(2) Whether the promise of the Defendant to pay the Plaintiffs Rs. 1,50,000 was not conditional upon the Tricumdas Mills granting a first mortgage of the mills to the Defendant's client for 11 lakhs.

(3) Whether the Defendant was not always ready and willing to perform the promises made by him in the said letter.

(4) Whether on the 9th August 1909 Dwarkadas Dharamsey as representing the Tricumdas Mills did not refuse to grant a first mortgage of the mills to the Defendant's client.

(5) Whether such refusal did not render it impossible for the Defendant to perform his said promises.

VISSANJI, SONS, AND COMPANY v. SHAPURJI BURJORJI BHAROOCHA.

(6) Whether, if the said promises amounted to a contract, such refusal did not render the contract void.

(7) Whether the Plaintiffs did not treat the Defendant's letter of 9th August 1909 as terminating any contract between them with reference to the sum of Rs. 1,50,000.

After recording evidence both oral and documentary the learned Judge (Beaman, J.) delivered judgment on the 11th February 1910 and made a decree dismissing the suit with costs.

He held that the Respondent believed that the mortgagee Shivalal Motilal was willing to be paid off in full, that the Respondent had the 11 lakhs available for the said loan which he undertook to procure and was ready and willing to advance the said sum on a first mortgage of the said mills, that the undertaking to pay the sum of Rs. 1,50,000 out of the mortgage money contained in the letter of the 7th August 1909 was conditional and contingent on the transaction of mortgage being given effect to and carried out by the loan being taken and was not a promise unfettered by that condition, that the contingency failed in consequence of the act of Dwarkadas Dharamsey, that the fulfilment of the said undertaking thereby became impossible, and that there was no breach on the part of the Respondent of his contract, or any liability on his part in respect of the said sum.

The Appellants appealed from the said judgment and decree to the High Court of Bombay in its appellate jurisdiction.

The appeal came on for hearing before Sir B. Scott, C. J., and Batchelor, J., on the 16th August 1910, and judgment therein was delivered on the 23rd August 1910, and a decree made affirming the decree of the lower Court and dismissing the said appeal with costs. In the course of their judgment they said :—

"The Plaintiff's present case is that he insisted on a request from the Defendant for an advance of Rs. 1½ lakhs to Dwarkadas Dharamsey and the Defendant's promise that he would repay that amount. If this was what he wanted it is strange that he did not ask for a bare and absolute guarantee from the Defendant instead of introducing an unnecessary reference to the first mortgage of the Tricumdas Mills.

"It appears to us that no reasonable business man in the Plaintiff's position can possibly have supposed that a loan broker however wealthy would promise to pay out of his client's money 1½ lakhs of rupees except upon condition of some security being obtained for the lender of the money. As between business men like Plaintiff and Defendant dealing with a tottering financier like Dwarkadas Dharamsey any arrangement for an unconditional guarantee such as the Plaintiff now asserts is incredible. It appears to us that the words 'I bind myself to you to procure a loan within 2 weeks of Rs. 11 lakhs on the first mortgage of the mills and to pay you thereout' are correctly paraphrased in para. 5 of the Defendant's written statement, where he says that all he had undertaken to do was to procure the lending of 11 lakhs if a first mortgage of the mill was given and to pay thereout 1½ lakhs to the Plaintiff.

"It was suggested by the Plaintiff's Counsel that if Defendant had offered a written guarantee in these terms the Plaintiff would never have advanced the money. We do not think that this would have been the result, for the Plaintiff had no doubt of Dwarkadas Dharamsey's ability or willingness to mortgage the mills. His only doubt was (as he himself says) whether Dwarkadas Dharamsey could induce any one to lend him the 11 lacs he wanted on the mills. On the other hand looking at the case from the point of view of the Defendant, if he had been asked to promise repayment of the Plaintiff's money, mortgage or no mortgage, security or no security, we cannot doubt that he would have refused."

Hence this appeal.

Sir A. Cripps, K. C. (with him Messrs. Lowndes and Rowlatt) for the Appellants submitted that upon the true construction of the letter in question the Respondent promised unconditionally to repay the loan out of a loan to be procured by him. It was a promise to procure it effectually for the purpose in contemplation. There was no implied condition that Dwarkadas would take up the loan nor any circumstances justifying it. Before the learned Counsel had concluded his argument, Sir R. Finlay, K. C. (with him Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Grey) for the Respondent were called upon.

Sir R. Finlay, K. C., submitted that the contract must be construed with reference to the existing circumstances of the case. All that the Defendant agreed was to find a lender willing to lend the money. He gave no personal guarantee. Here the borrower refused to take the loan. That was beyond the Defendant's control. The completion of the contract became impossible by the unwillingness of the proposed borrower. The Defendant gave no guarantee that Dwarkadas would take the loan. Both parties had no doubt that he would take the loan, and no guarantee on that point was necessary. And if it were the intention of the parties to provide for it they would have done in more explicit terms. The taking of the loan was assumed—it was a condition precedent to the enforcement of the contract. He referred to the following authorities: Chandler v. Webster (1), Krell v. Henry (2), Taylor v. Caldwell (3), Jackson v. Union Marine Insurance Co. (4).

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., submitted that the Defendant was a broker and by his letter he promised to do nothing more than what he would ordinarily do, that is, to procure a loan. It is incredible that a broker should have guaranteed that Dwarkadas would take the loan. The words of the letter only mean that on completion of the loan for 11 lacs he would pay out of it the amount specified. There was no personal guarantee.

Without calling on Counsel for the Appellants their Lordships delivered judgment.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—The question in this case turns simply upon the construction of a very short document. It is addressed to the Appellants, and is in these words:—"In consideration of your having at my request acceded to the proposal of the Secretaries, Treasurers, and Agents of the Tricumdas Mills Company, Limited, to advance to the Mills a sum of Rupees one lac and fifty thousand, I hereby bind myself to you to procure a loan within two weeks of Rupees eleven lacs as the first mortgage of the mills block property, and to pay to you thereout the said sum of Rupees one lac and fifty thousand agreed to be advanced by you to the mills."

(4) L. R. 8 Com. Pleas. 572, 581 (1873).

VISSANJI, SONS, AND COMPANY v. SHAPURJI BURJORJI BHAROOCHA.

Everybody is now agreed that what took place after the execution of that document can have no bearing on the construction of it. All that the admitted evidence shows is that the Appellants wanted some real and substantial security for their advance. They advanced the lac and a half, and the only question is, what is the meaning of this guarantee? Does it mean that all that the Respondent undertook was that he would find somebody willing to lend eleven lacs on a first mortgage of the mill and that he was to do nothing further except, if that arrangement was carried through, he would pay to the Appellant out of the loan a lac and a half?

Various constructions have been suggested. The one which Sir Robert Finlay, for the Respondent, finally adopted is the one on which the Judges in the Appeal Court relied. They say they agree with the Respondent when he says "that all he had undertaken to do was to procure the lending of eleven lakhs if a first mortgage of the Mill was given, and to pay thereout Rupees $1\frac{1}{2}$ lacs to the Plaintiff."

Their Lordships read the document not in that sense at all, but as a substantial undertaking that a loan should be procured, and that out of that loan this sum of Rs. 1,50,000 should be repaid.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the Appeal should be allowed, and that a decree should be made in favour of the Appellants. Of course the Respondents will pay the costs of this Appeal, and the costs below.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES

Nos. 2098 and 2625 OF 1909.

D. CHATTERJEE, J.	}	SHYAMA CHURN
N. R. CHATTERJEE, J.		DAS, Defendant,
1912,		Appellant,
Heard, 28 and		v.
29, February,		JOGES CHANDRA
4 and 5, March.		RAY, Plaintiff,
Judgment, 2, April.		Respondent.

Co-sharer landlord, if may sue for his share of rent when no separate collection—Suit for apportionment, if lies—Prayer for apportionment in rent suit, if entertainable—Parties—Decree for entire rent in favour of all co-sharers when may be made.

A co-sharer landlord can maintain a suit for his share of the rent separately if there is an arrangement for separate collection without a division of the lands amongst the co-sharers. The case of RAJ NARAIN MITTER v. EKADASI BAG (1) does not lay down that there must be a division of the lands before a co-sharer can maintain a separate suit for his share of the rent.

A sale of a share in an estate which has been let out in its entirety to a tenant does not of itself necessarily effect a severance of the tenure or an apportionment of rent, but if the purchaser desires such severance or apportionment, he must give the tenant due notice to that effect and then if an amicable apportionment cannot be made by arrangement between all the parties concerned, the purchaser may bring a suit against the tenant for the purpose of having the rent apportioned making all the co-sharers parties to the suit.

Such an apportionment can be asked and effected in the rent suit itself. But where in such a suit the Plaintiff did not ask for an apportionment, though he made all his co-sharers parties, the Plaintiff was entitled to ask for a decree for the entire rent in favour of all the co-sharers.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 8th of October 1909 against the decree of Babu Nikunja Behary Ray, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Chittagong, dated the 13th of July 1909, reversing that of Babu Nishikant Guha, Munsif at Patiya, dated the 22nd of December 1908.

The facts of the case material to this report will appear from the judgment.

Babu Samatul Chandra Dutt for the Appellant.

Babu Dharendra Lal Kastgi for the Respondent.

These two appeals arise out of a suit for rent. It was alleged by the Plaintiff that the lands of sch. 1 appertained exclusively to hisyas Nos. 3, 11 and 6 in a revenue-paying estate called Taraf Sambhuran, that hisyas Nos. 3 and 11 belonged to one Raj Kumar Ray, whose rights in hisya No. 3 was purchased at a revenue sale by the Defendant No. 23 who again sold the same to the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff as purchaser of Raj Kumar Ray's hisya No. 3 sued to recover his share of the rent from the Defendant No. 1 making the other co-proprietors of the estate parties to the suit. In the alternative he prayed that a decree for the entire rent might be passed on taking additional court-fee from him. There was a further alternative claim for a certain share of the rent of the lands of schs. 2, 3 and 4 which it is unnecessary to consider in these appeals.

The defence inter alia was that the lands do not belong to hisyas 3, 11 or 6 but belong to a different hisya (No. 2) owned by Defendants Nos. 3-8.

The Court of first instance held that the lands did not appertain to hisya No. 3 and there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between the Plaintiff and the Defendant No. 1 with respect to any land mentioned in the plaint and dismissed the suit.

On appeal the lower Appellate Court held that the lands of schedule No. 1 were held under the proprietors of Taraf Sambhuran and that there was relationship of landlord and tenant between the Plaintiff and Defendant No. 1 but gave a decree to the Plaintiff for a share of the rent proportionate to his share in the entire estate. The Defendant No. 1 has appealed to this Court in Second Appeal No. 2098 and the Plaintiff has appealed in No. 2625.

It has been contended on behalf of the Defendant No. 1, first, that a co-sharer cannot sue for his share of the rent separately unless the lands are divided among the co-sharers, second, that at any rate he cannot do so without apportionment of the rent, and that there being no finding that Plaintiff or his predecessor in title had separate collection of rent in the share purchased by the Plaintiff, he cannot maintain a suit for his share of the rent separately.

The objection as to there having been no separate collection in the share purchased by the Plaintiff does not appear to have been raised in the written statement or in the issues. But the Plaintiff himself states in his plaint that a portion of the rent is payable to him and the remaining portion to his co-sharers who are made pro forma Defendants and there is no allegation that there was separate collection in respect of the share purchased by them. It is stated by the learned Pleader for the Respondent that there is evidence on both sides on the point but there is no finding

We are of opinion that the first contention raised on behalf of the Appellant has no force. A co-sharer can certainly maintain a suit for his share of the rent separately if there is such an arrangement (and it is an exceedingly common arrangement) without a division of the lands among the co-sharers. The case of Raj Narain Mitter v. Ekadasi Bag (1) relied on by the Appellants does not lay down that there must be a division of the lands before a co-sharer can maintain a separate suit for his share of the rent. In that particular case there was a division of the land and the co-sharers ceased to be joint landlords, and it was held that a co-sharer could separately sue for his share when he had asked for apportionment of the rent.

A sale however of a share in an estate which has been let out to a tenant in its entirety, as pointed out in the Full Bench case of Iswar Chandra Dutt v. Ram Krishna Das (2), does not of itself necessarily effect a severance of the tenure or an apportionment of the rent, but if the purchaser desires to affect a severance of the tenure or an apportionment of the rent he must give the tenant due notice to that effect and then if an amicable apportionment cannot be made by arrangement between all the parties concerned the purchaser may bring a suit against the tenant for the purpose of having the rent apportioned making all the co-sharers parties to the suit; and the authorities show that such an apportionment can be asked for and effected in the rent suit itself. But in the present case the Plaintiff did not pray for any apportionment.

In the absence of separate collection of rent, a co-sharer can of course maintain a suit for the entire rent due to all the co-sharers making them parties to the suit and there is such a prayer in the plaint.

In Appeal No. 2625 the Plaintiff appeals on the ground that his share of the rent ought not to have been determined with reference to his share in the entire estate, but ought to have been determined with reference to his share in the hisyas to which the land exclusively belonged.

If the Plaintiff's case, that the lands appertained exclusively to the particular hisyas a share of which was purchased by him, is true, we think the rent to which he is entitled should be determined according to his share in such hisyas.

We think therefore that the lower Appellate Court should decide, first, whether the land of which rent is claimed appertained exclusively to the hisyas as alleged by the Plaintiff; and, second, whether there was separate collection in Raj Kumar Ray's hisya No. 3 purchased by the Plaintiff. If the second question is answered in the negative, the Plaintiff cannot get a decree for rent for his share separately but he may be allowed a decree for the entire rent on payment of the additional court-fee.

The judgment and decrees of the lower Appellate Court are accordingly set aside and the cases remanded to that Court to rehear and dispose of the appeal in accordance with the observations made above. Costs to abide the result.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 159, 160, 161, 167—Suit to annul incumbrance—Burden of proof—Separated share of tenure dealt with as distinct tenure.

When a share in a tenure has been duly and effectually recognised by both landlords and tenants as a separated share and as constituting a distinct tenure, the purchaser of such a share at a sale for its arrears acquires the rights of a purchaser of an entire tenancy within the meaning of sec. 159 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The burden is on the purchaser of a tenure at a sale for its arrears to prove that the interest sought to be annulled was an "incumbrance" within the meaning of cl. (a) of sec. 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and if he proves this he starts his case sufficiently; and the burden shifts upon the Defendant to prove that he has a "protected interest" within the meaning of sec. 160.

Moulvis Serajul Islam and Nuruddin Ahmed for the Appellants.

Babus Girija Prasanno Rai Chaudhuri and Kumar Sankar Roy for the Respondent.

This is an appeal on behalf of the first two Defendants in a suit commenced by the Plaintiff-Respondent for recovery of possession of land included in an osat nimhowla. The Plaintiff claims to be the purchaser of a nimhowla at a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent obtained by the howladar against the nimhowladar, and asserts that he has, by service of notice upon the first two Defendants under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, annulled the incumbrances held by them. He consequently asks for ejection of the Defendants from the disputed lands. The Courts below have concurrently made a decree in favour of the Plaintiff. The decision of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed before us on three grounds, namely, first, that the Plaintiff is purchaser of only a fourth share in the nimhowla tenure and is consequently not entitled to the benefit of the provisions of sec. 159 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; secondly, that the first two Defendants are the holders of only one-half of the osat nimhowla and are consequently not liable to be ejected at the instance of the Plaintiff; and, thirdly, that the onus was upon the Plaintiff to show that the interest of the first two Defendants is an incumbrance within the meaning of sec. 161 and is not a "protected interest" within the meaning of sec. 160 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In our opinion, there is no foundation for any of these contentions.

In so far as the first ground urged on behalf of the Appellant is concerned, it is clear that although the Plaintiff may in one sense be said to have purchased only an one-fourth share of the nimhowla, yet he has purchased, upon the facts found, an entire tenure which entitles him to claim the benefit of the provisions of sec. 159 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That section provides that where a tenure or holding is sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent due in respect thereof, the purchaser shall take subject to the interests defined in Chap. VIII as "protected interests" but with power to annul the interests defined in that chapter as "incumbrances." To entitle the Plaintiff to avail himself of the provisions of this section, he has to establish that he is a purchaser of a tenure sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent due in respect thereof; in other words that what he has purchased constitutes an entire tenancy. Now the Courts below have found that the nimhowla mentioned in the plaint is an one fourth share of the entire nimhowla but that this one-fourth share has been separated from the remaining three-fourth share, that the land comprised in it and the rent payable for it have been completely separated, and that consequently this one-fourth share now constitutes by itself an entire tenancy. Under the circumstances the principle obviously applies that a share in a tenure which has been duly and effectively recognised by both the landlords and tenants as a separated share, constitutes a distinct tenure, and, when such a tenure is sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent due in respect thereof, the purchaser acquires the rights of a purchaser of an entire tenancy within the meaning of sec. 159 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In support of this proposition, reference may be made to the decision of this Court in the case of Gopi Nath Biswas v. Radha Shyam Poddar (1). The first ground, therefore, cannot be successfully maintained.

In so far as the second ground urged on behalf of the Appellant is concerned, it clearly raises a question not urged before the learned Subordinate Judge, though it had been raised in the Court of first instance and decided against the first two Defendants. It was pointed out by the original Court that the lease granted to the Defendants on the 15th February 1896 shows that the lands in their occupation which comprised one-half of the lands of the osat nimhowla were treated as constituting an entire under-tenure. In fact, the lands included in the lease were assessed separately, and although they constituted one-half share of the original osat nimhowla acquired by the landlords, the new tenure was an entire tenancy by itself. This position was not controverted before the Subordinate Judge and in our opinion it cannot be successfully challenged. The second ground therefore fails.

In so far as the third ground is concerned, it has been argued that the burden is upon the Plaintiff to prove not merely that the under-tenure was created by the holders of the nimhowla but also to establish that the tenancy is not a protected interest within the meaning of sec. 160 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In support of this position reliance has been placed upon the cases of Durga Prosanna Ghose v. Kali Das Dutt (2), Gobinda Nath Shaha Chowdhury v. Reily (3) and Narmada

SOMIR JAMA v. MOHABHARAT RAKTU.

Sundari Devi v. Tarip Mollah (4). The first two of these cases turn upon the construction of sec. 66 of the Bengal Act VIII of 1869, while the third case depends upon the interpretation of sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885. In our opinion, the cases relied upon are clearly distinguishable and do not lend any support to the contention advanced by the learned Vakil for the Appellant. In each of these cases, it was argued on behalf of the person who was sought to be ejected by the purchaser at a sale in execution of a rent decree that his interest had been created, not by the holders of the tenure sold but by the superior landlords before the intermediate tenancy was created. In the first of these cases, Durga Prosanna Ghose v. Kali Das Dutt (2), the defence was that the disputed jungle-bury tenure had been created, not by any holder of the ganti tenure sold in execution of the decree for arrears of rent, but by the superior landlords and was in fact in existence before the creation of the ganti tenure on the 21st February 1851. With reference to these allegations, the learned Judges held that the burden was upon the purchaser to prove that the interest of the Defendant which he sought to annul, was an incumbrance created by an act of the holders of the ganti tenure. The question which was raised in the other two cases was precisely of the same character, and it was ruled that the burden was upon the purchaser to prove that what he sought to annul was an incumbrance, that is, was a sub-tenure created by the tenant on his tenure or holding or in limitation of his own interest therein. In the case before us, there is no controversy that the osat nimhowla was created by the holder of the nimhowla; the only suggestion put forward is that it might have been so created with the consent given expressly in writing by the holders of the howla and might in this view be a "protected interest" under cl. (g) of sec. 160 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Obviously, the burden is upon the party claiming this "protected interest" to establish the elements essential to validate his contention. The true rule plainly is that the burden is upon the purchaser to prove that the interest sought to be annulled is an "incumbrance" within the meaning of cl. (a) of sec. 161, and if he proves this, he starts his case sufficiently; the burden then shifts upon the Defendant to prove that he has a "protected interest" within meaning of sec. 160. If the contrary view were maintained the result would be that the Plaintiff purchaser would be obliged to prove a negative, namely, to show not only that the interest was an "incumbrance" but also that it was not a "protected interest." Such a position cannot possibly be maintained. The third ground must, therefore, be overruled.

The result is that the decree made by the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

HARI MONI DEBI v. MOTI SHERIKH.

annul incumbrance—Onus of proof—Defendant if must prove his interest to be "protected"—Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 106—Second appeal—Evidence adduced on both sides, but evidence considered only as produced by the party on whom onus wrongly placed—Finding, if of fact.

In a suit by a purchaser of a tenure or holding at a rent sale to annul an alleged incumbrance the onus is in the first place on the Plaintiff to show that the interest sought to be annulled is an "incumbrance," but when once that is established the onus shifts on to the incumbrancer to prove that his incumbrance is saved through being a "protected interest."

NARMADA SUNDARI DEVI v. TARIP MOLLAH (3) referred to.

SOMIR JAMA v MOHABHARAT BAKTU (2) approved.

The existence of such a "protected interest" as a right of occupancy is a matter specially within the knowledge of the person claiming it and the onus under sec. 106, Evidence Act, is on him.

The proposition that as soon as there is a conflict of evidence, the question of onus disappears presupposes not only the existence of evidence on both sides but also consideration of both by the Court, so that where the Court of Appeal below dismissed the Plaintiff's suit on the ground of his failure to discharge an onus wrongly placed on him and ignoring altogether the evidence adduced by the Defendant, the High Court on second appeal interfered.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 5th of August 1909 against the decree of B. C. Mitra, Esq., District Judge of Berhampur, dated the 8th of May 1909, affirming a decree of Babu Durga Kanto Roy, Munsif of Kandi, dated the 25th of March 1908.

(8) 9 C. L. J. 490 (1909).

The appeal arose out of a suit brought by an auction-purchaser of a tenure or holding at a rent sale to annul an alleged "incumbrance" held by the Defendant, after notice served under sec. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act. The Defendant resisted the suit on the allegation that his interest was a "protected interest" within sec. 159 of the Act and as such not liable to annulment. The Defendant's plea was that he was an occupancy raiyat, whilst the interest purchased by the Plaintiff was that of a tenure-holder. The first Court gave effect to that plea and dismissed the suit. An appeal preferred by the Plaintiff against that decision was disposed of in these terms:—

"The only point in dispute in this appeal is whether the Defendant's landlord is a tenure-holder or a raiyat. If the former, then the Defendant, being an occupancy raiyat, is protected from ejectment under sec. 167. If the latter, then the Defendant is an under-raiyat, and cannot claim exemption unless he succeeds in proving that he has acquired occupancy rights.

"There is no doubt in this case that the burden of proof lies on Plaintiff. It was for him (?) to show that the Defendant's landlord's interest was a holding and not a tenure. The oral evidence coming from interested parties is not sufficient and does not appear to be much relied upon. The documentary evidence describes the tenancy as a jamai right or a jote. This does not mean that the tenancy is necessarily a holding and not a tenure. Nor does any presumption favourable to the Plaintiff arise from the smallness of area. No doubt, if a tenancy is more than 100 bighas, the presumption is that it is a tenure, but the converse presumption, that where the area is less than 100 bighas it is a holding, does not follow. Thus as the burden of proof is on the Plaintiff it cannot be held that the burden has been sufficiently discharged.

"The Appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs and the cross-appeal also dismissed."

The Plaintiff thereupon preferred this Second Appeal.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy, Krishna Prosad Sarbadhikary and Monmatha Nath Roy for the Appellant.

Babus Hemendra Nath Sen, Sachchidanund Gupta (for Babu Haradhan Nag) and Kunja Behary Sen for the Respondent.

The point of law raised by this second appeal is as to the burthen of proving the existence or non-existence of a "protected interest" for the purposes of sec. 159 and the following sections of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885.

The Plaintiff, who is the Appellant before us, was the purchaser at a sale held in execution of a decree for rent of the tenure or holding of one Nistarini Debi, and having, in pursuance of the provisions of sec. 167 of the Tenancy Act, served a notice on the Defendant-Respondent, as being the sub-tenant of of Nistarini and, therefore, an incumbrancer within the meaning of the Act, he sued the latter for the recovery of khas possession of the land concerned. The defence was that Nistarini Debi was a tenure-holder, that the Respondent was an occupancy tenant under her and that consequently the incumbrance which the Appellant was seeking to annul, was under cl. (a) of the definition in sec. 160 a "protected interest" which could not be annulled. Both the Courts below held that the onus was on the Appellant to prove that the Respondent's interest was not a "protected interest" and that, as he had failed to discharge the onus, his suit must be dismissed.

We are unable to accept this view of the law as to the onus probandi in a case of this kind. Sec. 159 gives the auction-purchaser power to annul, in the prescribed manner, any "incumbrance" such as is defined by sec. 161, cl. (a), and at the same time provides that he shall take subject to any "protected interest" within the meaning of sec. 160. Now, no doubt it rests upon the auction-purchaser in the first instance to show that the interest which he wishes to annul, is an "incumbrance": but it seems to us that, if and when that is established, the onus shifts on to the incumbrancer to prove that his incumbrance is saved through being a "protected interest." In other words, it was for the Appellant to show at the outset that the Respondent's sub-tenancy was a sub-tenancy created by the defaulting tenant Nistarini Debi: but, as soon as this was established, it was for the Respondent to prove that Nistarini Debi was a tenure-holder and that he had acquired a right of occupancy under her. This is, we think, in accordance with first principles. For the general rule is that the burthen of proving any particular fact rests on him who alleges, not on him who denies, it: That is to say, the issue must be proved by the party who states the affirmative, and not by the party who states a negative. Moreover, the provision as to "protected interests" has the effect of introducing a restriction upon, or exception to, the rights of the auction-purchaser, and, as was explained in Rash Behari Bosu v. Hara- moni Debya (1), the person pleading a certain exception is bound to bring himself within it. And, finally, the existence of such a "protected interest" as a right of occupancy is a matter specially within the knowledge of the person claiming it, on whom, therefore, the onus is placed by sec. 106 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872. We observe too, that our view accords with that taken by Mookerjee and Teunon, JJ, in Somir Jama v. Mohabharat Baktu (2), while it is not, as will presently appear, opposed to the decision of Brett and Chitty, JJ., in Narmada Sundari Devi v. Tarip Mollah (3).

Returning to the facts before us, we find that there was really no onus of proof for the Appellant to discharge. For the Respondent had admitted in his written statement that he held, and had from the inception of his sub-tenancy held, under Nistarini Debi and her predecessors-in-interest, and it was, therefore, of course unnecessary for the Appellant, to adduce any evidence to show that the Respondent's sub-tenancy was a sub-tenancy created by Nistarini Debi, that is to say, an "incumbrance" within the meaning of sec. 160, cl. (a) of the Tenancy Act. And this distinguishes the case from that of Narmada Sundari v. Tarip Mollah (3), in which it was not only not admitted that the Defendant's tenancy was a sub-tenancy under the defaulting gantidar but expressly alleged that the sub-tenancy had been created long before the ganti.

Our conclusion, then, is that the onus was wrongly placed upon the Appellant by both the Courts below. But it is contended by the Respondent that, even if this be so, there was evidence on both sides, and no question of onus arises. As to this contention, it must be conceded that, as soon as there is a conflict of evidence, the question of onus disappears. But conflict implies and predicates not only the existence of evidence on both sides but also consideration of both by the Court; and in this case it seems to us patent that, if any evidence was produced by the Respondent, the lower Court of appeal at all events ignored it altogether. The judgment speaks for itself and cannot be misunderstood. It deals exclusively with the Appellant's evidence, oral and documentary; it decides nothing but that that evidence was insufficient to prove that Nistarini was a raiyat and not a tenure-holder; and nothing could be clearer than that the learned District Judge would have dismissed the appeal and the suit even if the Respondent had not adduced a scrap of evidence of any kind. In these circumstances we think that we must require him to reconsider the case anew in the light of our ruling as to the initial mistake made both by him and by the Court of first instance. Should a case be made out for the admission of further evidence, it will be open to him to receive it or direct that it be taken by the first Court.

In the result, the appeal is allowed, the appellate judgment discharged and the case remanded for redisposal in accordance with the foregoing directions. Costs will abide the result.

Case remanded.

No. 379 OF 1908.

COXE, J.	}	MOWAR KALI CHURN

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 11—Res judicata—Suit by Mitakshara coparcener for declaration of right to a share, resisted by Defendant setting up impartibility and primogeniture—Decree in Plaintiff's favour if bars Defendant's eldest son who was not joined in the suit from setting up same defence in subsequent suit for partition.

Plaintiff sued the Defendant's father and others for a declaration of his right to a certain share in certain properties which he alleged had descended to him and the Defendants as ancestral property governed by the ordinary Mitakshara law. The Defendant's father resisted the suit on the plea that the property had descended to him alone under a custom of primogeniture. Plaintiff obtained a decree in that suit, the plea of Defendant's father regarding the custom of primogeniture being rejected. In a second suit by the Plaintiff for partition of the properties, Defendant who was no party in the former suit, took up the same plea of primogeniture, he being the eldest son of his father :

Held—That the Defendant was barred by the rule of res judicata from taking up the same defence.

That under sec. 11, Civil Procedure Code, what had to be considered was what the Defendant himself claimed and as, according to his case, he was claiming through his father he was bound by that decision ; and the fact that according to the Plaintiff's case the Defendant as a coparcener of his father did not derive his right through his father was no answer to the plea of res judicata.

This was an Appeal preferred against the decree of Babu Ram Lal Dutt, Subordinate Judge of Palamau, dated the 23rd of May 1908.

The facts of the case material to this report will appear from the judgment.

Babus Tara Kishore Choudhury, Nagnendra Nath Ghosh and Mr. J. W. Chippendale for the Appellant.

Babu Mohendra Nath Ray, Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babu Harihar Prosad Sinha for the Respondents.

This is a suit for partition of property which was admittedly at one time a jaigir of one Dhurup Singh, the common ancestor of the Plaintiff and the Defendants. It apparently descended to his eldest son, Bhukan Singh, but in Bhukan Singh's time was resumed, and after that was again granted in the name of Pahalwan Singh, the third son of Dhurup Singh, and not in the name of Baiju Singh, the second son, who was the Plaintiff's ancestor. It is a matter of controversy in this case whether the jaigir was given exclusively to Pahalwan Singh or given to him as the representative of the whole family.

Only one name is recorded as jaigirdar in the Collector's Register. After Pahalwan Singh, Jhao Singh was recorded, after him Odit Singh, after him Ghinu Singh and after Ghinu, the present Defendant No. 3, Nursing Dyal Singh. In the time of Ghinu Singh, a suit was brought by the present Plaintiff for declaration of his rights, which seems to have been almost identical in nature with the present suit except that partition was not sought.

MOWAR KALI CHURN SINGH v. MOWAR SHEO BUKSE SINGH.

The Plaintiff succeeded and obtained a decree which was affirmed on appeal by this Court.

In the present case the learned Subordinate Judge has found that this decision was wrong, that the jaigir belonged to Nursing Dyal Singh alone and that the Plaintiff was not in possession and not entitled to succeed. The Plaintiff appeals to this Court.

It appears to us that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be sustained. In our opinion the matter is now a res judicata.

The issues in the former suit, as we gather from the decision of this Court, were as follows :—Firstly, is the Plaintiff in possession of the property in suit? If not, can the suit proceed? Secondly, does the rule of primogeniture prevail in the family of the parties? Thirdly, was the property in suit granted in jaigir to Pahalwan as alleged by the Defendants. On the first point, the learned Judges observed that it was contended on behalf of the Defendants that the Court below was wrong in holding that the possession of the Plaintiff was made out so as to entitle him to maintain his suit for a declaratory decree. But they agreed with the Court below in the conclusion arrived at, namely, that the possession of the Plaintiff was made out. On the second point, they held that it lay upon the Defendants to prove that there was any special custom governing the succession to this jaigir as against the ordinary Hindu law of succession and that the Defendants had failed to discharge that burden, or in other words that the rule of primogeniture was not proved to prevail in the family of the parties. On the third point, they held that the Plaintiff's ancestor along with other members of the family had been in possession of the lands of the jaigir by virtue of their right by inheritance and that the grant of the jaigir was not to Pahalwan Singh alone.

These findings seem to us completely to dispose of the present suit in which these identical questions are raised. It is nobody's case that the Plaintiff has been dispossessed since the decision of the former suit. The only reason given for holding that the suit is not concluded by the rule of res judicata is that if, as is alleged by the Plaintiff, the family is governed by the ordinary Mitakshara law it must be held that the Defendants obtained an interest in the property at birth and did not derive their rights from Ghinu. It would follow therefore that as they were not parties to the former suit though they were alive at the time they are not bound by the decision.

With this question we are only concerned in so far as it affects the Defendant No. 3. The contesting Defendants are Defendants Nos. 1 to 10. Of these, Defendants Nos. 1, 2, 9, and 10 were parties to the former suit while Defendants Nos. 4 to 8 disclaim all title to the property. As regards Defendant No. 3 we find, on reference to his written statement, that he states distinctly that the property is impartible and governed by the rule of primogeniture. In that case it is perfectly clear from the decision in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1) that he obtained no right at birth at all and could not properly have been made a party to the former suit during his father's life-time. In these circumstances, it appears to us that he must be regarded as claiming under Ghinu.

It does not appear to us to be of any importance what the Plaintiff's case is. A reference to sec. 11, C. P. C., shows that what has to be considered in these cases is what the Defendant himself claims, and as we have said above on the allegations in his written statement he must be regarded as claiming under Ghinu.

(1) I. L. R. 10 All. 272 (1881).

MOWAR KALI CHURN SINGH v. MOWAR SHEO BUKSH SINGH.

Reference has been made to an alternative claim put forward by the Defendants Nos. 4 to 8. If they had put forward the alternative case that even though the rule of primogeniture did not apply, yet the jaigir was granted to Pahalwan Singh alone, something might have been said for it. But the only alternative prayer they put forward is that if the Plaintiff succeeds in getting a decree for partition, that is to say, if it is found that others besides Pahalwan Singh's descendants are interested in the jaigir, the share of these Defendants also may be separated. To this prayer, the Plaintiffs have no objection.

We have been invited to go into the merits of the case, but we think that it is not proper for us to consider the correctness of a former decision of this Court based on the same materials with regard to the same matters in controversy and between persons whom we regard as the same parties.

It appears to us therefore that the appeal must be allowed with costs and a preliminary decree given to the Plaintiff for partition.

Appeal allowed.

EMPEROR

v.

MOTI LAL CHANDER and anr., Appellants.

Bengal Excise Act (V, B. C. of 1909), secs. 2 (14), 2 (20), 9 (2), 10, 46, 52, 55, 57—Medicinal drugs if necessarily exciseable because spirit is an ingredient—Importing of exciseable articles, offence of, when committed—Transport—Possession—Taking orders to supply, if abetment of transport—Delivery when takes place—Cocoanut, milk of, if exciseable.

The unreported decision of O'Kinealy and Ameer Ali, JJ., that spirits of wine sold by a chemist for medicinal purposes are not liable under the Excise Act, has been overruled by the enactment of the new Excise Act V, B. C. of 1909; but that GONESH CHANDRA SIKDAR v. QUEEN-EMPRESS (1) is no longer good law is not so clear.

Semble (without deciding the question): The meaning of the Legislature in amending the Act was to prevent chemists and vendors of drugs selling intoxicating liquors or otherwise dealing with them as medicinal preparations, and not to declare that all drugs bonâ fide prepared in accordance with the British or other recognised Pharmacopœias are exciseable merely because alcohol is used in their preparation and the notifications of the Board of Revenue if they declared that spirit found in the prepared drugs rendered the drugs themselves exciseable would be ultra vires.

Liquor as defined in sec. 2 (14) of the Bengal Excise Act must be intoxicating liquor and the enumeration of all the liquids that follow does not make them liquor unless they are intoxicating.

EMPEROR v. MOTI LAL CHANDER.

Held—That if articles which are subject to both customs and excise duties escape the customs they can be dealt with by the Excise Authorities either in transport or when an attempt is made to export them, but the excise duty on imports does not apply to articles that are liable to a similar duty in the customs.

Where medicinal drugs containing spirit which had been manufactured in Chandernagar within French territories were consigned from Chandernagore station by rail to Howrah and from there taken to a Calcutta shop, in pursuance of orders given to the manufacturer by the manager of the Calcutta shop :

Held—That assuming that the articles were exciseable, after they had passed undetected by the customs authorities, no charge could be framed at the instance of the Excise Authorities against persons concerned in the transaction of importing exciseable articles, but the Excise Authorities could proceed for illegal transport or export or possession of the articles imported.

Held, on the evidence, that delivery of the articles to the Calcutta firm had taken place before the transport of the same commenced and the mere fact of the persons who despatched them from French territory having arranged that an agent of theirs should be present at the Calcutta shop to see that the goods were in order when opened did not prevent possession passing to the Calcutta firm ; and they were not liable to conviction for illegal transport or possession of exciseable articles.

Taking an order for foreign goods which are exciseable may constitute abetment of their import but not of their transport.

The expression "juice drawn from any cocoanut" in sec. 2 (20) of the Excise Act does not mean the milk of the cocoanut but the juice of the tree.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 5th of March 1912 against an order of Mr. E. Keays, Second Presidency Magistrate in Calcutta, dated the 25th of January 1912.

The material facts of the case appear from the judgment.

Mr. J. N. Roy with Babus Monmatha Nath Mukherjee and Probodh Chandra Chatterjee for the Appellants.

Mr. P. L. Roy with Babu Jatindra Mohun Ghosh for the Crown.

This is an appeal from the judgment and sentence of the Second Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, who has convicted the Appellants, Mati Lal Chandra and Promotha Lal Chandra, of transporting exciseable articles from Chandernagore to Calcutta under sec. 46, Act V of 1909, and of being in possession of exciseable articles knowing the same to have been unlawfully imported under sec. 52 of the same Act both read with sec. 55 of the Act and sentenced them under sec. 57 to a fine of Rs 1,000 each or in default one month's rigorous imprisonment.

The facts are as follows :—There is a manufactory of drugs known as the Indian Pharmacy Co., situate in French territory at Chandernagore within the compound of the Disillery of the French Government. This factory is ostensibly owned by a lady, named Giribala Dassi, widow of the gentleman who originally started the business.

The accused persons are her nephews and the first is a pleader at Hughly, the second a clerk in the office of the Director of Commercial Intelligence in Calcutta. Their family house is at Chandernagore, but they seem to habitually reside in Calcutta. For the purposes of this case we may take it on the evidence, though the Appellants disputed this, that these gentlemen both have an active interest in the management of the Chandernagore business. On the 29th August 1911, the accused No. 2 received an order from Messrs. B. K. Pal, large wholesale and retail druggists in Calcutta, for three cases of Tinctures consisting of 25 one pound bottles of each of (1) Tincture of Cinchona, (2) Tincture of Cardamom, (3) Spirits of Nitric Ether, (4) Tincture of Ginger. This order is Ex. B in the case and is of some importance. It is headed "Indian Pharmacy," it is on a printed Invoice slip of B. K. Pal & Co., and it says "Please supply" the tinctures already mentioned and is signed B. K. Pal & Co., admittedly by one Haridhan Nag, P. W. 2, who is Manager and Superintendent of the godown and signs for Messrs. B. K. Pal.

On the 2nd September, a Saturday, one Tarini Charan Mukerjee alleged by the prosecution to be the Sircar of the Indian Pharmacy conveyed the three cases from Chandernagore to Howrah where they were consigned to him and took them thence in a carriage to Messrs. B. K. Pal's godown at 16, China Bazar Lane, and delivered them to the Manager. The same evening a letter was received from the 2nd accused Ex. 2 which is also of great importance and runs as follows :—

"Re your order of 29th August 1911. The medicines of the above order have been despatched under your instructions. Please order them to be opened and counted." Then follows an interpolation "in presence of our agent" in smaller writing and different ink but we have no reason to doubt it is in the same handwriting, viz., that of P. L. Chandra.

The letter goes on : "The order of the 29th ultimo will be attached to the Bill when it will be presented to you afterwards, as is the custom with you and elsewhere. But it is impossible for us to attach it with our invoice as it has never been the practice with you or anywhere. Hope you will do what is needful." From this it would appear that some message oral or written had been sent by Messrs. B. K. Pal to the 2nd accused.

On the 5th September, the two accused came to B. K. Pal's shop as they say to discuss prices for a contract for which they were tendering as Messrs. B. K. Pal expected to get a large order from the Government of the U. P. or the Punjab. The correspondence seems to show it was connected with Oudh but this is immaterial. An excise officer saw them enter the shop and leave again for the godown at China Bazar. He informed Mr. Wilson the excise officer who had long been on the look out for these Chandernagore medicine sellers and he went to the godown and says that he found them sitting at a table with price lists, one of which is Ex. 1 before them, and the three boxes of medicines, two closed and one open. The letter Ex. 2 and the challan Ex. 3 and other documents Exs. 4 and 5 were found on the table. He made a search-list Ex. 6 and seized all the articles. Upon this evidence the accused have been acquitted of importing exciseable articles but convicted of transporting and possessing the 3 cases of medicines in question.

The points raised in the appeal by the defence are 1. That these tinctures are not exciseable articles. 2. That the accused are not proprietors of the Indian Pharmacy nor its agents. 3. That T. C. Mookerjee is not their Sircar but the agent of Messrs. B. K. Paul or at least became so as soon as the goods were delivered to him for conveyance to them under a completed contract of sale. 4. That the possession proved in this case at the time of seizure is the possession of B. K. Pal & Co., and not the possession of the accused. 5. That to prove transport you must prove direct connection of the accused with the act of transport.

The first point gives rise to a question of law which is of extreme difficulty and importance but in the view we take it is not necessary to the decision of this appeal. In Act VII of 1878 (B. C.), exciseable articles are defined as including spirituous and fermented liquors and intoxicating drugs as defined by this Act.

Fermented liquor includes malt liquor of all kinds; tari, fresh or fermented, pachwai diluted or undiluted, and any other intoxicating liquor which the Local Government may from time to time declare to be included in this definition.

Spirituous liquor includes any spirituous liquor imported into India or manufactured in India by any process of distillation.

Now in the case of Gonesh Chandra Sikdar v. Queen-Empress (1), Macpherson and Banerjee, JJ., held that "spirituous liquor" in sec. 53 of the Act is not intended to include a medicinal preparation merely because it is a liquid substance containing alcohol in its composition. The case would be different if alcohol was manufactured separately for the purpose of being used in the preparation of a medicine.

They point out that the terms "spirituous liquor" is not defined in the Act. What is given as the definition of the term is, strictly speaking, no definition at all. It merely says "spirituous liquor includes, etc.," as above. But we observe that the medicinal preparation thereunder consideration was manufactured from gur or treacle mixed with other ingredients used for medicinal purposes. The Judges say the case would have been different if the accused had been found manufacturing alcohol or spirits separately for the purpose of being used in the preparation of a medicine. But what was found to have been manufactured in that case by the processes of fermentation and distillation is not alcohol or spirit separately, but the compound substance, the medicine, at once.

Again in an unreported case the judgment in which is filed with the record before us, Criminal Revision No. 180 of 1892, O'Kinealy and Ameer Ali, JJ., held that spirit of wine sold by a chemist for medicinal purposes was not liable under the Excise Act. They rely on sec. 66 of that Act and then they say that rectified spirit of wine is a drug largely used in making up other drugs, and if a chemist sells it bona fide as a medical drug and as a medical drug only he is not liable. In the case before us the articles are tinctures prescribed by the British Pharmacopæia and there is no doubt as to their being bona fide medicinal preparations. Now in the new Excise Act, B. C., Act V of 1909, a definition of liquor has been given and "exciseable article" has been defined as any liquor or intoxicating drug as defined by or under this Act. We have nothing to do with intoxicating drugs and have only to see what the definition of liquor is and that definition runs as follows: Liquor means intoxicating liquor, and includes spirits of wine, spirit, wine, tari, pachwai, beer, all liquid consisting of or containing alcohol and any substance which the Local Government may, by notification, declare to be liquor for the purposes of this Act.

It will be observed that the only defining words in this clause are "Liquor means intoxicating liquor" and the rest of the clause is open to the observations made by the Judges in Gonesh Chandra Sikdar's case (1). That the clause covers spirits of wine which is in itself, apart from its medicinal use, a liquor which can be drunk as an intoxicating liquor there can be no doubt and the decision in the unreported case we referred to above has therefore been clearly overruled. But that Gonesh Chandra Sikdar's case (1) is no longer good law is not so clear. To be an exciseable article liquor must be intoxicating liquor and the enumeration of all the liquids that follow does not make them liquor unless they are intoxicating. Now none of these drugs before us could conceivably be used as an intoxicating liquor. The poisonous drugs they contain would kill a man long before he had taken a sufficient quantity of alcohol to intoxicate him and we can hardly think that the Legislature can have intended to penalize the use of a beneficent drug like Sweet Spirits of Nitre which has saved the lives of thousands of children and is the basis of all the most efficient fever mixtures in this country, where malaria is the greatest scourge. The real object of this prosecution is to prevent smuggling of drugs prepared in French territory with French spirits in Bond into British territory. This can be effected under the customs law, it is idle to urge that the Government cannot afford to keep up a customs station if necessary on the French frontier.

As a matter of fact it would be wholly unnecessary inasmuch as there is a customs establishment at Hughly and the Station Master at Chandernagore, which station is in British territory, could be empowered to detain all articles exported from French territory, just as local Post Masters are empowered in respect of the parcel post, and have them examined if suspected to contain articles liable to duty. It so happens that the customs duty on drugs containing alcohol is exactly the same as that levied on exciseable articles. The matter being res integra we should be inclined to hold that the meaning of the Legislature in amending the Act was to prevent chemists and vendors of drugs selling intoxicating liquors or otherwise dealing with them as medicinal preparations.

It in effect says you shall not sell brandy or gin or other intoxicating spirits because they are included in the British Pharmacopœia under the name of Spiritus Vini Gallici or Spiritus Juniperi, etc., nor shall you by merely mixing a little cinnamon or other harmless medicament with spirits palm off an exciseable article as a bona fide medicine, and as one instance you shall not sell that exceedingly dangerous intoxicant, rectified spirit of wine, as a medicine without a license or transport it without a permit.

The argument that unfermented tari is not an intoxicating liquor does not help the prosecution inasmuch as that was also an exciseable article under the old Act, and as it is impossible to say when it may become intoxicating by a natural process of fermentation over which the owner has no control, the Legislature has very rightly declared it to be an intoxicating liquor from the first, as it is undoubtedly a potentially intoxicating liquor in its nature.

A rather curious argument which was adduced by the prosecution may be glanced at here since it may be reproduced in other cases unless disposed of once for all.

This is that "Juice drawn from any cocoanut" is mentioned and the astounding argument is put forward that this refers to the milk of the cocoanut itself whereas it is obviously to be read with the word "tree" the words being any cocoanut, palmyra, date or other kind of palm tree, and means the juice of the palm tree of whatever species and not its fruit.

A much stronger argument is derivable from the fact that "denatured spirit" is treated as an exciseable article and is subject to duty under the Act. "Denatured" means effectually and permanently rendered unfit for human consumption. But it may be that "denatured spirit" is only exciseable by virtue of the notification which makes it liquor. It certainly is not intoxicating liquor and would not be exciseable but for the special notification. Had it been necessary for the decision of this appeal to come to a finding whether all drugs bona fide prepared in accordance with the British or other recognised pharmacopœias were exciseable merely because alcohol is used in their preparation we should have felt it our duty to refer the question to a Full Bench in this form, "Does the change in the law enacted in Act V, B. C. of 1909, make the decision in Gonesh Chandra Sikdar v. Queen-Empress (1) no longer sound law?"

The argument that the notifications of the Board treat all spirits used in the preparation of drugs as exciseable articles has no force.

If the law is as we have above indicated those notifications would be ultra vires if they said that the spirit found in the prepared drugs rendered the drugs themselves exciseable. But they are careful to say nothing of the kind.

In the notification under sec. 4, a new clause (h), dated 6th January 1911, says that perfumed spirits and spirits used in drugs, medicines or chemicals whether manufactured in India or imported from foreign countries shall be taxed (if liable to taxation) as foreign and not as country liquor.

This cannot affect the question though it may indicate that the Board of Revenue takes a different view of the law to what we do. That this is so is patent from a letter on the record from the Personal Assistant to the Excise Commissioner pointing out in answer to a question from the Indian Pharmacy that all their tinctures are liable to excise duty when imported into British India unless they can prove that the spirit used is foreign liquor and has paid the full duty imposed thereon by the Indian Tariff Act or the Bengal Excise Act. But this is rather discounted by another letter from the same gentleman to the Collector of Hughly in which he says that the Ipecacuanha Wine and Tincture of Bryonia manufactured by Moti Lal Chandra of Chandernagore are proved by analysis to be of a strength of 100·38, 54 or 61·46 U. P. and 6·40 U. P. respectively and that they are therefore spirits and not medicines.

This seems to admit that if they were bona fide medicines as the articles in this case admittedly are they would not be liable.

Then there is the notification under sec. 19 imposing certain rates of duty upon spirit used in drugs, medicines, etc., which is Rs. 7-13 per proof gallon. This does not either affect the question. The spirits are undoubtedly exciseable but the finished drugs are apparently in the view we have expressed not so. About 3 as.

6 p. would have to be laboriously collected on each bottle of tincture after analysis and the duty would be impossible to collect. The procedure adopted in the firm of Messrs. David Waldie who have a manufactory of drugs similar to the French one in British territory at Serampore has been described to us at our request by the learned Counsel Mr. P. L. Roy for the Crown. We must here express our full appreciation of the very able and exhaustive way in which he dealt with the legal difficulties that arise in this case and the great help he gave us in elucidating them. It appears that the spirits used by them go up in bond so that no customs duty is paid, but Messrs. Waldie by arrangement with Government pay excise duties on the finished tinctures on a declaration which Government accepts that so much spirit goes to each gallon of tincture. This arrangement is no doubt convenient with a large firm having a permanent location at a British Excise head-quarter but it does not show that the finished drugs are exciseable articles. It only shows that by special engagement Messrs. Waldie & Co. pay the duties on the spirits used after the drugs issue from their factory and not before as they are liable to do. Obviously this could not be done in the case of a small retail trade or of small imports from foreign territory made at odd times.

In the latter case the customs must intervene and this brings us to the contention which Counsel for the Crown necessarily had to make that the decision of the learned 2nd Presidency Magistrate was erroneous when he held that the accused could not be convicted of importing. The learned Magistrate bases his contention quite rightly in our opinion on the wording of sec. 9, sub-sec. (2). It is argued that the words "was liable on importation to duty" import the condition that the duty has been paid. But as the Magistrate points out there is a clear distinction between imports and articles exported or transported. The customs are supposed to look after imports of non-exciseable articles and articles which are subject both to customs and excise.

If such articles escape the customs they can be dealt with by the Excise Authorities either in transport or when an attempt is made to export them, but the excise duty on imports does not apply to articles that are liable to a similar duty in the customs. In other words two import duties cannot be charged and it is not the business of the Excise to enquire whether customs have been paid until transport begins and the Inland Revenue is affected.

It is perfectly clear that these articles ought to have been dealt with by the Customs Authorities but because this was not done the accused are not thereby rendered liable to punishment under the Excise Act. As regards the exemptions notified under sec. 90 of the Act it is clear that the Board intended to exempt only such articles as had paid duty under sec. 10 and wished to take powers to tax the spirit contained in tinctures which had not already paid duty. There is no doubt that such spirit can be taxed in transport or export but that does not make the drugs exciseable articles. Supposing the alcohol had been destroyed or masked by some chemical process in making the drug. It is clear from the wording of all the notifications that it is separated spirit and not the combined drug that is exciseable. If as we are inclined to hold these drugs are not exciseable articles the customs are the only authority that can deal with them. But assuming for the purposes of this case that they are 'exciseable articles we have now to see whether the present accused can be said to have transported them and whether at the time of their seizure at 16, China Bazar Lane, they were in the possession of the accused. We think both these questions must be answered in the negative.

Sec. 46 says "if any person transports" and sec. 55, which is the section relied on to make the owner or person interested liable by implication, only applies to manufacture, sale or possession. It does not apply to import, transport, or export. It is sec. 56 which makes the holder of a license, permit or pass liable for the misconduct of his servant or agent in matters of import, transport or export and it is not contended that the accused are the holders of licenses, permits or passes. The persons actually engaged in the transport are the Manager Siddeshwar who ordered it and the Brahmin Tarini Charan Mookerjee who carried it out. It is faintly suggested that accused No. 2 might be charged with abetment of transport inasmuch as he took the order for the supply of the goods. But to begin with, that is not what he is charged with, nor does the act of taking an order for foreign goods constitute an abetment of their transport though it might be an abetment of their import.

We do not think that the evidence is at all sufficient to make out that this Tarini Charan Mookerjee was a servant in the employ of the Indian Pharmacy, though he may have been a person acting on behalf of Siddeshwar, the Manager, and of B. K. Paul & Co., as a kind of go-between in this illicit trade.

It is in evidence that this Tarini Charan Mookerjee only personally conveyed goods to B. K. Paul & Co., though he countersigned the consignment notes addressed to other firms.

Now the consignor being in French territory and not coming to the station himself to forward the goods it is the practice of the Railway not to accept his signature on the consignment bill unless it is counter-signed by some person who knows him. The counter-signature of his own servant would obviously be of very little value to the Railway Company and it must therefore be held that the Railway authorities regarded him as an independent witness not in the sole employ of the Indian Pharmacy. It is clear that B. K. Paul & Co. alone derived benefit from this importation without duty from French territory. They had been been carrying it on for some years and their managers must be regarded as accomplices. We cannot therefore place any reliance on their unsupported statements that T. C. Mookerjee was the Sircar of the Indian Pharmacy, which, they aver, they learnt from the accused themselves. The evidence of the Deputy Inspector of Excise, Hem Chander Banerjee, who was employed to watch accused No. 2 and saw him in a number of Chemists' shops canvassing his wares, is clear that he does not remember any other shop than B. K. Pal's that was supplied through T. C. Mookerjee. For the same reason we cannot accept their evidence that delivery had not been taken of the goods which form the subject-matter of this case, and that the price of this consignment was still under discussion and a dispute still going on as to the presentation of the bill. The evidence is half-hearted and inconsistent and it is perfectly clear from the admissions made that the discussion of prices that Mr. Wilson found going on, was with regard to the proposed tender

THE REVERSAL OF THE HIGH COURT JUDGMENT in the case of Clarke v. Brojendra Kishore, is being made the occasion of a fresh onslaught on the High Court of Calcutta, because it has not been swayed by executive influence in arriving at its decision in a political trial. That Judges with a legal training have been singled out for attack ostensibly for their freedom from executive bias, will not surely lower them in public estimation. It is only the critics who are really making fools of themselves. Sir John Rees for instance went so far as to suggest in Parliament a revision of the composition of Indian High Courts by ostracising from them men of legal training and manning them by the appointment of executive officers as High Court Judges.

MR. REES IS QUITE AT LIBERTY TO RETAIL HIS own fantastic ideas in Parliament. But the worst of such irresponsible suggestions is that there are people in India who are apt to take them seriously and make them the occasion for fomenting fresh unrest. It is the Calcutta High Court that has paved the way to peace and order that now prevail in this country. If it gets abroad now that the High Courts in India would be in future so constituted that the people are to have no protection against the arbitrary and irresponsible acts of executive officers it is sure to give rise to grave political troubles.

TO-DAY THE HIGH COURT COMPLETES THE 50TH year of its existence. It is perhaps to be regretted that its Jubilee is not being fittingly celebrated.

But to those associated with the administration of justice by the High Court as well as to all who are concerned in the good administration of the country the occasion cannot but call up old and historic memories and solemn thoughts for the future.

THE HISTORY OF THE HIGH COURT IS THE HISTORY of the establishment of the reign of law and order in this Province. The first few years of the supremacy of the East India Company in these Provinces were years in which chaos reigned supreme. The old system of Government and judicial administration was thoroughly dislocated and demoralised and no new system of law or judicial tribunals established. The Company was concerned with its revenues and its sole look out was for dividends. Gradually it came to be understood that even for the purposes of revenue collection, good administration would be of great assistance, and tentative attempts were made to regulate some purely revenue matters till Warren Hastings introduced the first comprehensive change in the system of administration which laid the foundation of the rule of law in India in 1772 by the establishment of the Sudder Courts. This was supplemented in the Presidency Towns by the Supreme Courts which were established under the Regulating Act of 1773.

THE JUDGES OF THE SUDDER DEWANY SAT in their old premises in Sudder Street, and subsequently, in order to be outside the local jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in the premises where the Military Hospital now is in Bhowanipur and the Judges of the Supreme Court sat in their premises on the site of the present High Court—passing their time, in the intervals of their judicial work, in occasional bickerings against one another. For a long time there was little love lost between His Majesty's Judges in the Supreme Court and the Company's Judges of the Sudder Dewany Adawlut and the Sudder Nizamat Adawlat. And occasionally questions arose regarding conflict of jurisdiction which did not surely add to the good feeling of the two Courts for each other. Besides, the dual system of administration of justice led to practical difficulties, specially in respect of jurisdiction over Europeans and of the law to be administered, for the Supreme Court applied English law while the Sudder Court and the Mofussil Courts subordinate to it administered the Hindu and Mahomedan law supplemented by rules of equity and good conscience.

AS FAR BACK AS 1852-53, EVIDENCE WAS GIVEN before the Parliamentary Committee for East

Indian affairs relating to the disadvantages of the dual system of legal administration and strong opinions were expressed in favour of the amalgamation of the Supreme and Sudder Courts. When the India Bill of 1852 was introduced Sir Charles Wood wanted to introduce a provision for the amalgamation. But the Indian Law Commissioners advised the postponement of the amalgamation till a common law of procedure was established. The Codes of Procedure were passed in 1859 and in 1861 the Indian High Courts Act was passed, in pursuance of which the High Court at Fort William was established by the amalgamation of the Sudder and the Supreme Courts on the 1st July 1862.

THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE HIGH COURT DID not, to outward appearance, immediately introduce any very great change. For the Supreme Court really survived as the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court and the Sudder Courts as its Appellate Side. The Courts also continued to sit in their respective old houses till the present High Court buildings were completed ten years later. The feeling of aloofness was, however, gone and a great deal more of community of laws was established.

SIR BARNES PEACOCK, THE GREATEST NAME in the Indian Judiciary, who had come out to India as Law Member of the Governor-General's Council and was at the time of the establishment of the High Court the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, became the first Chief Justice of Bengal, the common head of both the Courts, though he was not the first to act in that capacity; for Sir Elijah Impey who came out as the first Chief Justice of the Supreme Court was also appointed later on the Chief Judge of the Sudder Court.

ONE REMARKABLE CHANGE INTRODUCED BY THE High Courts Act was the opportunity it afforded to Indian lawyers of ability to rise to the high position of High Court Judges. In those days the appointment of an Indian to any position of importance and responsibility was sure to send up a cry from the European community as if their life and property were at stake. A great outcry was raised against the appointment of an Indian gentleman of great ability and learning to the comparatively unimportant office of a Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta as late as 1858. The provision in the Letters Patent for recruiting Judges from the Vakils and members of the Provincial Judicial service was therefore a great forward move. Under this provision Babu Romaprasad Roy was appointed the first Indian Judge of the Calcutta High Court though he never sat as one, and in fact Babu Simbhunath Pandit was the first Indian Judge who sat as such. Since then distinguished lawyers drawn from the ranks of Vakils have equally distinguished themselves on the Bench and have secured for themselves a name on the roll of the great Judges who have made the High Court in the space of a few years the great institution to which every member of the public looks instinctively for protection from oppression and injustice.

THERE ARE MEN STILL LIVING AND SOME IN active practice who remember the day when the High Court was first established. The fifty years just passed represent to them perhaps the most eventful period of their lives. But fifty years is too short a period in the life of an institution and specially an institution like the High Court. But the true measure of such a period can be gathered only from the amount of useful work crowded in on it. It is without doubt a strenuous fifty years' life that the High Court has just completed. And here we may note that the usefulness of a Court of justice cannot be estimated wholly or even principally by the number of sensational cases decided by it. Cases raising great political or constitutional issues no doubt require careful and impartial handling by His Majesty's Judges. But the amount of public interest that such cases create would, if there was nothing else, be sufficient to secure for them that degree of painstaking consideration on the part of the judges which all knotty questions of law and policy necessarily demand. But such cases do not after all affect the hearth and the home of the villager or the raiyat as immediately as for instance a simple decision on a question of occupancy right or a contested succession to a Hindu female's property.

LIKE THE ENGLISH LAW COURTS, THE HIGH Courts of India are not merely interpreters of law but also makers of new law. To a superficial observer it may seem as if the enormous output of legislation by the Supreme and Local Legislatures has placed the law-making power of the High Court within very narrow bounds. In point of fact however this is not so. The whole of the Hindu and the Mahomedan law has been left untouched by the legislature. The land laws of the various Provinces have no doubt been elaborately framed in Statutes, but there are gaps in them which cannot wait for the Legislature to fill up, and it falls on the High Court to lay down such rules of law, consistent with the terms of the Codes, as may best suit the circumstances. At least half if not more of the law one finds in an annotated edition of the Bengal Tenancy Act, for instance, is Judge-made law. As a result of the last fifty years' development we have also a fairly complete code of Hindu and Mahomedan law. We do not say that the law thus laid down is beyond criticism; but it would be idle to deny that the rules of Hindu and Mahomedan law as also those determining the relations of landlords and tenants and other branches of law as laid down by the High Court have on the whole given satisfaction to the communities concerned.

DURING THESE 50 YEARS, HARDLY ANY CHANGE has been effected in the constitution of the High Court. The latest Parliamentary Statute relating to the High Courts has enabled the Government to increase the number of judges beyond the former maximum of 16 and this provision has been availed of for the purpose of increasing the number of Judges of the Calcutta High Court alone. Power has also been taken under the Statute to reduce or divide the local jurisdiction of the High Court. But the power has not been exercised yet. Should this power be exercised now, the High Court of Calcutta as we know it will cease to exist. It would be a great pity if this Fiftieth Anniversary of the High Court should in a way also foreshadow its death. A new High Court confined only to Bengal, and under the regis of the Governor of Bengal, may no doubt have a great future before it, but it will not be the "Calcutta High Court," which enjoys the unique distinction amongst all the Indian High Courts of not being subject to any of the local Governments.

THE CASE OF Vissanji v. Shapurji REPORTED in our last issue was a rather hard case. The case arose out of one of the transactions relating to the Dwarkadas Dharamsey insolvency in Bombay. It appears that Dwarkadas Dharamsey applied to the Plaintiffs in the case for a loan of Rs. 1,50,000 which they refused. On that Dwarkadas represented to the Plaintiffs that he was raising a loan of 11 lakhs on a first mortgage of the Tricumdas Mills and that the Plaintiff's loan of a lakh and-a-half would be paid out of that amount when raised. The Defendant was negotiating for that loan on behalf of Dwarkadas Dharamsey and at the request of Dwarkadas he signed a letter addressed to the Plaintiff in the course of which he said, "In consideration of your having at my request acceded to the proposal of the Secretaries, Treasurers and agents of the Tricumdas Mills Company Limited to advance to the Mills the sum of rupees one lakh and fifty thousand, I hereby bind myself to you to procure a loan within two weeks of rupees eleven lakhs as the first mortgage of the Mills block property and to pay you thereout the said sum of rupees one lakh and fifty thousand agreed to be advanced by you to the Mills."

SUBSEQUENTLY THE DEFENDANT PROCURED THE loan but Dwarkadas refused to complete the transaction. Thereupon the Defendant gave notice of this to the Plaintiffs and stated that under the circumstances his liability under the contract had ceased. The Plaintiffs took no action on that notice. If the Plaintiffs had then intimated to the Defendant that they would look to him for payment the Defendant might possibly have instituted proceedings against Dwarkadas to protect his risk. Shortly afterwards Dwarkadas became insolvent and the Plaintiffs sued Defendant on the guarantee. Their Lordships held that the Plaintiffs had given an unconditional undertaking that a loan would be procured and that being so, nothing that subsequently happened could affect the terms of the agreement or liabilities thereunder.

THERE CAN BE NO DOUBT, VIEWING THE AFFAIR as a business transaction, that the parties had none of them contemplated the contingency that happened but they had both acted upon the assumption that Dwarkadas would be willing to complete the negotiations with the Defendant. And there can be no doubt also that it was very hard for the Defendant to be bound down to a promise made on an assumption of a state of facts which had ceased to exist without his fault. From the circumstances of the case also it would seem that all that the Plaintiffs were anxious to get from the Defendant was an assurance that he was actually negotiating the loan without evidently contemplating that Dwarkadas might refuse to negotiate.

COMING TO THE LEGAL ASPECT OF THE QUESTION, there is no doubt that subsequent events cannot possibly vary the terms of the contract and the parties must be bound to the terms they used in the sense in which they used them at the date of the contract. But what did the parties contemplate? Their whole intention, not merely as expressed in their words, but taken along with the circumstances present at the time, should be taken into consideration. Taking all these circumstances, can it be said that the Defendant took the risk of the contingency that had happened? No doubt, it was open to the Plaintiffs to insist that the Defendant should undertake all risks but can it be said that they contemplated it and that they understood the Defendant to undertake to raise a loan for the Mills whether they wanted it or not?

NO DOUBT THE WORDS OF THE LETTER READ BY themselves are categorical and contemplate no contingencies, but taking the words with the circumstances it may reasonably be said that both the parties proceeded on the assumption that the Mills would take the loan when raised and there was no question of taking risks on that—there was no contract relating to that contingency. If then the assumption failed, on principle it would seem the contract also would fall to the ground. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, however, seem to have tied down the Defendant to the words of the contract irrespective of implied assumptions. This seems rather hard, having regard specially to the fact that there was no default or laches on the part of the Defendant and that the Plaintiffs might surely have had their remedy if they had taken action in time when the Defendant gave them notice of Dwarkadas's failure to complete the loan transaction. If it was a case in which both sides took the risk of Dwarkadas failing to complete the transaction, it seems scarcely consistent with equity and good conscience to fasten the responsibility for the failure on the party who was not guilty of any default or laches.

An order dismissing an appeal for default is not a decree within the meaning of sec. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Penal Code, sec. 292—Obscenity, test of—Religious poem of allegorical character based on an ancient sacred book.

Under sec. 292, the test of obscenity would be whether the writing in question is calculated to deprave and corrupt those into whose hands the work might fall. Where a work would have such influence its publication would be an offence though the writer might have an ulterior laudable object in view.

Objectionable passages contained in a religious or classical work would not necessarily make its publication punishable as of obscene literature. Publication of an extract from it of its obscene passages, where its publication tends to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to immoral influences would however be an offence.

But where a story which appears objectionable when read as relating to immoral acts of human beings is extracted from a religious book and relates to divine beings whose works are not to be judged by human standards and where the extracts would not inspire impure thoughts in those who read it by reason of its relation to divine beings its publication is not punishable. In this case the offending book was a story relating to the acts of Krishna viewed as a divine incarnation. The story was taken from Oriya Haribansa, a religious book of great antiquity and related an incident which taken as acts of human beings would be obscene, but which on the face of it could not possibly be the act of a human being. The language used was not more obscene than in the original and the learned Judge found that it would not raise impure thoughts in people who believed in the divinity of Radha and Krishna. It was held that the publication of the work was not an offence under sec. 292 of the Penal Code.

Land Acquisition Act, sec. 54—"Award," meaning of—Refusal to restore a case dismissed for default.

In this case there was a claim case before the Land Acquisition Judge which was dismissed for default. An application for its restoration on the ground that the pleader's clerk had not informed the claimant of the date of hearing was dismissed. On appeal, a preliminary objection having been taken, it was held that under sec. 54 of the Land Acquisition Act, an appeal lay only against an "award." As the order in question was not an award the appeal was held to be incompetent.

v.

JAMES BYRNE.

Charitable bequest—Gift of funds to Archbishop to be expended as he might judge most conducive to the good of religion, if gift for charitable purpose.

The Reverend Denis Joseph Byrne, a Roman Catholic clergyman in charge of the Roman Catholic Mission at Dalby, in the State of Queensland, disposed by will of the residue of his estate in the following words:—

"I will and bequeath . . . that the residue of my estate should be handed to the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Brisbane and his successors to be used and expended wholly or in part as such Archbishop may judge most conducive to the good of religion in this diocese."

The question was, was that a good charitable bequest? In the Supreme Court of Queensland the Full Court unap unanimously held that it was. The High Court of Australia, by a majority of three Judges to two, declared the bequest void.

For the Appellants it was urged that inasmuch as according to the authorities a gift to a Roman Catholic Archbishop and his successors, without more, would be a good charitable gift, there was to be found in this will an overriding charitable intention sufficient to supply the lack of certainty—if lack of certainty there was in the declared object of the bequest. Their Lordships rejected this argument. LORD MACNAGHTEN in delivering the judgment of the Board observed that a similar argument had been advanced and rejected in the Court of Appeal in England in the case of Re Davidson, 1909, 1 Ch. 567; and that it was difficult to see on what principle a trust expressed in plain language whether the words used be sufficient or insufficient to satisfy the requirements of the law can be modified or limited in its scope by reference to the position or character of the trustee.

For the Respondent it was contended that even if the trust declared be a charitable trust the words "wholly or in part" left it uncertain how much of the subject-matter of the gift was impressed with the trust, because the trustee was authorised to apply part only of the residue to the purpose specified in the will. On this point their Lordships held that on the true construction of the will the effect of the words in question was merely to give the trustee a discretionary authority to break in upon the capital of the trust fund.

On another point, however, their Lordships decided that the trust was too indefinite for the Court to execute it as a charitable bequest. The fund was to be applied in such manner as the Archbishop might "judge most conducive to the good of religion" in his diocese. A thing may be "conductive," and in particular circumstances "most conducive," to the good of religion in a particular diocese or in a particular district without being charitable in the sense which the Court attached to the word, and indeed without being in itself in any sense religious. Cocks v. Manners, L. R., 12 Eq. 574. As to what might be considered "most conducive to the good of religion" in the diocese of Brisbane the Archbishop was given an absolute and uncontrolled discretion. That being so, apart from a certain line of decisions cited at the Bar, there would be an end of the case. The language of the bequest (to use Lord Langdale's words) would be "open to such latitude of construction as to raise no trust which a Court of Equity could carry into execution," Baker v. Sutton, 1 Keen 224, 233. If the property, as Sir William Grant said in James v. Allen, 3 Mer. 17, "might consistently with the will be applied to other than strictly charitable purposes, the trust is too indefinite for the Court to execute."

To the argument that this was a gift for religious purposes, and that a gift for religious purposes was a good charitable gift, the answer was that this was not in terms a gift for religious purposes, nor were the words synonymous with that expression. Their Lordships agreed with the opinion of the Chief Justice that the expression used by this testator was wider and more indefinite. On this part of the case, Re White, 1893, 2 Ch. 41, was referred to. In their Lordships' opinion the Court of Appeal in that case did not mean to lay down any new law, or to extend the law as laid down in former decisions. All they did was to hold, as had often been held before, that a bequest for religious purposes was a good charitable gift. It was too late in their opinion to depart from long-established decisions, although the Master of the Rolls did observe that "a religious society may or may not be a charitable society in the sense in which that expression is used."

In the result their Lordships dismissed the Appeal but having regard to the great divergence of judicial opinion in this case and the fact that the difficulty was occasioned by the testator himself, they directed that the costs of both parties as between solicitor and client ought to be paid out of the estate.

[APPEAL FROM NEWFOUNDLAND.]

LORD MACNAGHTEN.	} THE REID NEWFOUNDLAND COMPANY v. THE ANGLO-AMERICAN TELEGRAPH CO., LTD.
LORD SHAW.
LORD MERSEY.

Limitation—Suit for money accountable by Defendants as trustees.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland in an action brought on the 2nd November 1905 by the Anglo-American Telegraph Company against the Reid-Newfoundland Company, wherein the Defendants had pleaded the Statutes of Limitations (21 Jac. 1. chapter 16, and local statutes) as to so much of the Plaintiffs' claim as accrued prior to the 2nd November 1899. The Plaintiffs had replied that the plea disclosed no defence because the action was taken on a specialty contract under which the period of limitation was 20 years. The Supreme Court had decided, by a majority of two out of three Judges that the Plaintiffs' replication was good.

By an agreement under seal made on the 11th August 1888 between the Newfoundland Railway Company (the former owners of a portion of the Appellants' Railway system) of the first part, F. H. Evans, the Receiver and Manager of the said Newfoundland Railway Company, of the second part, and the Respondents of the third part, it was agreed, among other things, that the Respondents should erect and maintain along the lands forming the roadways of the Southern Division of the Railway Company's railway between S. John's and Harbour Grace, and between Harbour Grace and Carbonear, a "special wire" for the Railway Company, their successors and assigns for use in and above the operation of the said railway as therein defined, and the Newfoundland Railway agreed "not to pass or transmit any commercial messages over the said special wire, except for the benefit and account of the Telegraph Company."

By a series of transactions which need not be described in detail the rights of the Newfoundland Railway Company became vested from 1st April 1898 in one R. G. Reid, and from 1901 in the Appellants, "subject to the subsisting contract with the Anglo-American Telegraph Company as regards the telegraph line along the said railway."

Since the 1st April 1898 R. G. Reid and the Appellants used the "special wire" in and about the operation of railways other than the railway between S. John's and Harbour Grace, and between Harbour Grace and Carbonear. In fact they used it for all the purposes of their business, including the new or extended lines of Railway and their shipping business, and other commercial undertakings.

The Respondents accordingly brought this action against the Appellants for (1) an account of all telegraphic messages sent by R. G. Reid and the Appellant Company over the special wire since the 1st April 1898, other than messages connected with the operation of the railway as defined by the contract of the 11th August 1888, (2) payment of the amount found to be due, and (3) damages.

The Supreme Court held, by a majority, that as the agreement of the 11th August 1888 was under seal the Appellants were liable as on a specialty.

Lord Robson in delivering their Lordships' opinion said it was not necessary to determine this question on which the learned Judges disagreed. The claim of the Respondents rested on surer ground. The Appellants took over the railway together with the "special wire" comprised in the agreement of the 11th August 1888, with notice of the limitations and conditions attached to the user of that wire. It seems to their Lordships that when and as often as the Appellants used the special wire for the transmission of unprivileged messages, an obligation in the nature of a trust arose on their part, and it became their duty to keep an account of the profits accruing from such use of the wire, and to set those profits aside as moneys belonging to the Respondents. To such a duty, so created, the Statute of Limitations could have no application unless by express statutory provision. The Appellants were accountable as trustees, and, in giving to trustees the protection of the Limitation Acts, the Trustee Act, 1898 (Newfoundland), 61 Vict., cap. 38, to which reference was made in the course of the argument, withheld such protection from a trustee when the proceedings are taken to recover property, or the proceeds thereof, still retained by the trustee, and converted to his own use.

The principle is laid down in Burdick v. Garrick (L.R., 5 Ch. A. 233.) In that case an agent was entrusted with property which he was authorised to sell and he was directed to invest the proceeds in the name of his principal. Under this authority he received certain moneys and paid them into his own account at his bank. Afterwards, in an action for an account, the agent pleaded the Statute of Limitations, but Lord Hatherley, L. C., said :—

"How a person who is intrusted with funds under such circumstances differs from one in an ordinary fiduciary position I am unable to see."

And the Court held that the Statute of Limitations had no application. Lord Justice Giffard followed in the same sense, and stated the principle broadly in these terms (afterwards cited with approval by Lord Macnaghten in Lyell v. Kennedy [14 A. C., p. 463]) :—

"I do not hesitate to say that where the duty of persons is to receive property and to hold it for another and to keep it until it is called for, they cannot discharge themselves from that trust by appealing to the lapse of time. They can only discharge themselves by handing over that property to somebody entitled to it."

In Lyell v. Kennedy, Lord Selborne, in deciding that the facts were sufficient to establish a fiduciary character against a manager of property who had received rents on behalf of a principal, said :—

"For the constitution of such a trust no express words are necessary; anything which may satisfy a Court of Equity that the money was received in a fiduciary character is enough."

Their Lordships accordingly dismissed the appeal with costs and directed that the accounts be referred to the Registrar to be made up from the 1st April 1898, when the special wire began to be used for unprivileged messages, until the discontinuance by the Appellants of the use of such wire.

Messrs. Danckwerts, K. C., and Moore for the appellants.

Sir R. Finlay, K. C., and Mr. Rowlatt for the Respondents.

TESTAMENTARY AND INTESTATE JURISDICTION.
Before FLETCHER, J. IN THE GOODS OF BINODINY DASSI, deceased. 17th June 1912.

Will—Attesting witness, verification by—Examination of attesting witness by Court in Chambers, if sufficient verification of petition for probate.

A Hindu Lady, Sreemutty Benodiny Dassi, who was governed by the Bengal School of Hindu Law, died on the 10th December 1911, after having made and published her last Will on the 27th May 1900. By the said Will she appointed Raj Chunder Dey and Nidhoo Nath Dutt, the executors thereof. The execution of the said Will was attested by two witnesses, Kamini Kumar Guha and Kally Nath Bose. The said Kamini Kumar Guha predeceased the testatrix. On the death of the testatrix, one of the executors, viz, Nidhoo Nath Dutt requested the said Kally Nath Bose to verify the petition for probate which he intended to make, but the said Kally Nath Bose refused. Thereupon the said Nidhoo Nath Dutt applied to Fletcher, J., in Chambers for an order that the said Kally Nath Bose do on a date to be fixed appear before the Court to be examined with reference to his attesting the said Will. An order was made in terms of the said petition and on the 17th June 1912 the said Kally Nath Bose was examined viva voce before the Judge in Chambers.

Mr. B. L. Mitter appeared for the Petitioner.

Held—That the evidence of the said Kally Nath Bose should be treated as his verification provided in sec. 67 of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881). The learned Judge having regard to the indigent circumstances of the said Kally Nath Bose did not order him to pay the costs of the application and examination viva voce, but directed that the said costs would be costs in the said probate proceedings. His Lordship then admitted the said Nidhoo Nath Dutt's petition for probate.

Hindu widow in possession of tenure with husband's co-sharers—Rent paid by latter—Decree for contribution against widow, sale in execution if passes absolute title.

The Plaintiff, as reversionary heir of her father after the death in 1898 of her widowed mother Jagadiswari Debya, sued for a declaration of her title to, and the recovery of possession of, a share in a shikimi taluk. In 1873 a decree for rent of the taluk was obtained against Jagadiswari and her co-sharers. The latter satisfied the claim, brought a suit for contribution against Jagadiswari, and were given a decree, in execution of which a share of the taluk was sold and purchased on the 20th May 1876, by the Appellant, a Mahomedan. Both the Courts below decreed the Plaintiff's suit, and this appeal was preferred by the Defendant.

Held—That where a suit for rent against a Hindu widow was brought in respect of arrears which had accrued due after her husband's death and when she was in enjoyment of the property, the liability for rent should be regarded as her personal liability and did not attach to the reversion unless and until the landlord proceeded to bring the tenure itself to sale under the special provisions of the rent law.

Thakbust map, entries in, if sufficient to prove inclusion of land at the Permanent Settlement—Chitta prepared by Government as proprietor, if public document.

The appeal arose out of a suit brought for the recovery of possession of certain lands claimed by the Plaintiffs as appertaining to a mehal purchased by them at sale under the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act of 1859. The Plaintiffs, having made this purchase, proceeded to issue notices for the annulment of encumbrances under sec. 37 of the said Act and they were unsuccessful in obtaining possession of the land and had to institute the present suit. They rested their case mainly on the thakbust map of 1865. The Defendants set up the title of the owners of certain other shares in the mehal and relied on their part on certain chittas prepared by the Government in 1843-44 when the pergunnah was measured.

The Court of first instance gave preference to the chittas and dismissed the suit on the strength of the evidence afforded by them. The lower Appellate Court, on the other hand, took a contrary view, holding that the evidence of the thakbust map was superior to that of the chittas and decreed the suit. The Defendant appealed to the High Court.

Held—That an entry in a thakbust map was not insufficient to entitle a Court of fact to hold that the disputed lands were really included in the estate at the time of the Permanent Settlement.

A chitta prepared by Government when interested as a proprietor of the estate was not a public document.

for a large order by an up-country Government and that accused said they could execute it at a lower rate than that quoted by other firms, or in their own price lists, if a large quantity was ordered.

Their price lists had been with B. K. Paul & Co. for years and there is no evidence that they had ever been disputed. They had ordered the goods, had accepted them and were in possession both in law and fact. The mere presence of an agent of the seller to see that the goods are in order when opened does not keep the sale uncompleted. It is a common practice for wine merchants to indemnify their customers for bottles broken in transit but that does not prevent the property passing to the consignee when delivery has been taken. We find on the evidence that the accused were not in possession either actual or potential of the incriminating articles.

That being so the convictions and sentences must be set aside and the fines if paid must be refunded.

Accused acquitted.

Practice—Redemption decree under appeal by mortgagee—Deposit of decretal amount by mortgagor—Duty of mortgagee to withdraw under protest—Responsibility of mortgagee for loss of right in deposit by lapse of time although amount of decree increased by Appellate Court—Ex parte judgment, slip in order founded on, responsibility.

In a suit for redemption the Court of the Judicial Commissioners in India passed a decree entitling the mortgagees to recover a certain sum on account of principal and interest, from which decree the mortgagees appealed to the Privy Council who increased the amount. Pending the appeal the mortgagors had deposited the amount of the decree of the Judicial Commissioners, which however the mortgagees did not withdraw, as they might have done without prejudice to their pending appeal, either by arrangement or the sanction of the Court in India or the sanction of the Board which would have been given as a matter of course, Held—That if the amount deposited has lapsed to Government under the Rules owing to the same not having been withdrawn in time, the mortgagees must give credit for the amount.

A person who obtains an ex parte judgment is responsible for any slip in the order founded on the judgment.

This was an Appeal against an order and decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, dated the 5th August 1907, passed in execution proceedings, which affirmed the order and decree of the District Judge and Subordinate Judge of Sitapur, dated the 27th April 1907, and the 5th February 1907, respectively.

The principal question for determination on the present appeal was whether the Appellants' application for execution of His Majesty's Order in Council, passed on the 28th July 1906, in Privy Council Appeal, No. 34, of 1904 (Oudh, No. 6 of 1902), between Lekha Singh and Jangu

CHAMPAT SINGH v. JANGU SINGH.

Singh, Appellants, and Champat Singh and others, Respondents, was within time.

The history of the litigation previous to the said Appeal, may be briefly stated. In the year 1837 the Appellants' ancestor mortgaged the Tihar Estate in the Province of Oudh to the ancestors of the Respondents, who got possession of it. Subsequently, in the year 1867, the representatives of the mortgagors sued the representatives of the mortgagees for redemption. While the suit was pending some of the mortgagors compromised the suit in respect of one-third share of the said estate, and executed a fresh mortgage, dated the 14th January 1867, for a term of 30 years.

In 1897, the Appellants and their predecessors brought a suit for redemption of the said mortgage against the Respondents and others in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur. The said Judge delivered a judgment and passed a decree on the 14th September 1898 in favour of the Plaintiffs in terms following:—

"It is ordered and decreed by this Court, that under sec. 198 of the Civil Procedure Code, a decree be passed in favour of the Plaintiffs as against the Defendants; and it is further ordered that the Plaintiffs should deposit in Court within three months Rs. 3,519-10-11 together with interest at Rs. 2 per cent. from the date of execution of the document to that of realization, and then obtain possession."

Both parties appealed against the said decree. The Plaintiffs' appeal related to the payment of interest only, and the Defendants appealed against the whole decree. The District Judge of Sitapur dismissed both the appeals on the 30th January 1900.

The Plaintiffs, decree-holders, preferred

a second appeal against the said decree to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh. The Defendants, judgment-debtors, filed objections under sec. 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The said Court rejected the objections and allowed the appeal by reducing the amount of interest on the 11th April 1902, and passed a decree for redemption of the property on payment of the money within three months from the 11th April 1902.

The judgment-debtors, Respondents, submitted to that part of the said decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner which fixed the time for payment of the mortgage money, and appealed to His Majesty in Council against the decree reducing the amount of interest payable.

The appeal was heard ex parte by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, and their judgment allowing the appeal was delivered on the 27th July 1906. Thereupon His Majesty's Order in Council was passed on the 28th July 1906, restoring the decree of the District Judge. In the course of the order it was among other things stated:—

"That on the 14th September 1898, the Court of the said Subordinate Judge made its decree in the said suit declaring that the Respondents were entitled to redeem the said properties on payment of the principal money (Rs. 3,519-10-11) with interest at 2 per cent. to the date of realization, and awarding proportionate costs to the parties: that both parties appealed from the said decree of the 14th September 1898, to the Court of Judicial Commissioner of Oudh: that by an order of the Court of the said Judicial Commissioner, dated the 8th December 1899, the present Appellants were permitted to represent all the Defendants, and on the same day the Court of the said Judicial Commissioner decided that the appeals lay to the Court of the District Judge of Sitapur and returned the Memoranda of Appeal for presentation to that Court: that on the 30th January 1900, the Court of the said District Judge made two decrees dismissing both the Appeals with Cos's."

The Appellants filed the present application on the 17th January 1907, in execution of His Majesty's said Order in Council, and deposited the mortgage money. The Respondents filed objections to the said application on the 21st January 1907. They stated therein that the time fixed by the decree, dated the 14th September 1898, of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur for payment of the mortgage money expired on the 14th December 1898; and that as the said decree was not a decree for redemption of a mortgage, the Court had no power to extend the time for payment. The Appellants filed their reply to the said objections on the 29th January 1907.

The Subordinate Judge of Sitapur passed his order on the 5th February 1907. He was of opinion "that the decree of the Privy Council cannot be construed as a decree for redemption;" and that the payment of the mortgage money was made beyond the time fixed by the said decree. He accordingly rejected the application for execution.

The Appellants appealed against the said decree to the District Judge of Sitapur who affirmed the order of the said Subordinate Judge on the 27th April 1907.

The Appellants preferred a second appeal against the said decree to the Court of the Judicial-Commissioner of Oudh, which dismissed the second appeal on the 5th August 1907. In the course of judgment they (Messrs. Chamier and Sanders) said :—

On behalf of the Appellants it is admitted that they are not entitled to execute the decree of the Subordinate Judge unless that decree is treated as a decree for redemption of a mortgage, because unless it is a decree for redemption of a mortgage the Court executing the decree has no power to extend the time limited in the decree, but it is contended that according to the decree of the Subordinate Judge that was before their Lordships of the Privy Council there was no time limited for depositing the money.

It is quite clear from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge that he had no intention of passing a decree for redemption of a mortgage. He held distinctly that the Appellants who were the Plaintiffs in his Court were not proprietors of the property. In the closing passage of his judgment he directs that the Plaintiffs shall pay the sum found due by him within three months and this provision was, as it ought to have been, entered in the decree prepared in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. But in the printed record there is a mistake in the decree. The words "within three months" which appear in the judgment and in the original decree do not appear in the print at page 86. The Appellants cannot have been misled by this mistake for, as I have already said, they made efforts to obtain an extension of the time fixed by the Subordinate Judge, but it is suggested that their Lordships of the Privy Council must have been under the impression that there was no time fixed in the decree for payment of the money or they would have extended the time. We do not know whether the mistake was corrected in the printed copy which was signed by the Registrar and sent to the Privy Council. The learned Advocate for the Appellants contends that the Order in Council shows that their Lordships were under the impression that the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge was one for redemption of a mortgage. He relies upon the passage "that on the 14th of September 1898, the Court of the said Subordinate Judge made its decree in the said suit declaring that the Respondents were entitled to redeem the said properties on payment of the principal money Rs. 3,519-10-11, with interest at a per cent. to the date of realization." But this passage, like several passages before it and after it, is merely an extract from the petition presented by the Appellants. It may be that the Appellants in their petition to the Privy Council represented the decree of the Subordinate Judge as a decree for redemption of a mortgage, but it is impossible to suppose that their Lordships were under the impression that the Subordinate Judge's decree was one for redemption of a mortgage. They may have been misled by the mistake in the print if it was not corrected, and it may be that if they had known that the decree gave three months' time only to the Appellants they would have given the Appellants further time within which to pay the money. But there is no reason to suppose that they were misled. At all events we must take the decree of the Subordinate Judge as it stands. It is quite clear that that decree is not one for redemption of a mortgage and that we cannot, while executing that decree, extend the time. This has been ruled over and over again in pre-emption and other cases. It may be that the mistake in the printed record furnishes ground for an application for review but that is a matter upon which we cannot express an opinion. It is quite clear that we cannot give the Appellants any relief."

Hence this appeal.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Bhugwandin Dubé for the Appellants submitted that the view taken by the Court below of His Majesty's Order in Council was erroneous.

Mr. K. Brown for the Respondents supported the Court below, but their Lordships intimated that they would advise His Majesty to allow the appeal, and asked Counsel to settle the minutes.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—This was an appeal from an order of the Judicial Commissioners dismissing an application by the Appellants, as mortgagors, for the execution of a redemption decree. The mortgage in respect of which the decree was made was a usufructuary mortgage for a period which has expired, but there was a provision for payment on redemption of a sum in respect of interest. The mode of calculating interest was a matter in controversy in the redemption proceedings in regard to which this Board differed from the view of the Judicial Commissioners.

By the judgment of this Board, dated the 28th of July 1906, the Respondents, the mortgagees, were held entitled to simple interest at the rate of 24 per cent. per annum on Rs. 3,519, the original mortgage debt as from the 14th of January 1867, the date of the mortgage, as well as to mesne profits until redemption.

In 1902, previously to the judgment of this Board of the 28th of July 1906, the mortgagors had deposited in Court Rs. 3,844, a portion of which they afterwards withdrew, leaving in Court Rs. 3,335, a sum sufficient to satisfy the interest payable in respect of the mortgage according to the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur affirmed in substance by the Judicial Commissioners in April 1902, and on the 5th of December 1902 the mortgagors were let into possession of the mortgaged premises, although an appeal to His Majesty against the order of the Judicial Commissioners was then pending.

After the judgment of this Board possession of the mortgaged premises was restored to the mortgagees on the 12th of November 1906.

On the 15th of December 1906, the mortgagors deposited in Court Rs. 40,000 and again applied for possession of the mortgaged premises.

The sum of Rs. 40,000 plus the sum of Rs. 3,335, making together the sum of Rs. 43,335, was more than sufficient to discharge the interest due in respect of the mortgage in accordance with the judgment of this Board of the 28th of July 1906, amounting on the 15th of December

1906, to Rs. 37,239-2-11, together with the amount due to the mortgagees for costs which amounted to Rs. 3,765, making together the sum of Rs. 41,004-2-11.

On the opening of the present appeal it became obvious that the refusal of the Judicial Commissioners to restore the mortgagors to possession was due to a misconception of the effect of their Lordships' judgment of the 28th of July 1906, or to a slip in the order founded on that judgment. The error, if there was a slip in the order, is attributable to the mortgagees, as their appeal was heard ex parte. Their Lordships therefore intimated that they would humbly advise His Majesty that the present appeal should be allowed, and minutes were to be settled by the Counsel for the parties. The learned Counsel, however, were unable to agree, and the matter has been referred to their Lordships.

It is stated that the sum of Rs. 3,335 has now lapsed to the Government under the Rules.

It appears that after having been restored to possession the mortgagees obtained a decree against the mortgagors for the sum of Rs. 9,800, which was the agreed amount of the mesne profits received by the mortgagors during the period of their possession.

On behalf of the mortgagors Mr. De-Gruyther offered to set this amount, Rs. 9,800, against the amount of mesne profits received by the mortgagees since the deposit in Court of the sum of Rs. 40,000 by the mortgagors. Their Lordships think that this is a fair and reasonable proposal and that effect ought to be given to it.

Their Lordships also think that if the sum of Rs. 3,335 has lapsed to the Government, and is not forthcoming, the mortgagees must give credit for that amount as they ought to have taken it out of Court without prejudice to their pending appeal either by arrangement or with the sanction of the Court in India or the sanction of this Board, which no doubt would have been given as a matter of course.

Their Lordships think that the proper order, therefore, will be that the mortgagors should be restored to possession forthwith, and that the mesne profits received by the mortgagees since the 15th December 1906, should be set off against the decree for Rs. 9,800 and taken in satisfaction of that decree and interest, and (the mortgagees being entitled to draw out of Court Rs. 41,004-2-11, the amount due to them for interest and costs calculated up to the 15th of December 1906), the balance of the amount in Court increased by the addition of the sum of Rs. 3,335, if that sum has lapsed to the Government, should be paid out to the mortgagors.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Their Lordships will make no order as to costs.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE

No. 199 OF 1897.

PRINSEP, J.	}	MOHUNT JIB LAL GIR,
STEVENS, J.		Objector, Appellant,
1898,		v.
Heard, 6, July.		MOHUNT JAGA MOHAN
Judgment,		GIR, Petitioner, Res-
11, July.		pondent.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), sec. 37—Mohunt of math—Death—Application by claimant to office for letters of administration—Trust estate—Beneficiary—Shebait and idol, relation of.

A mohunt is not the owner of the property of the math, and on his death a person claiming to be his successor in office cannot apply under Act V of 1881 for letters of administration in respect of the math property. Sec. 37 of the Act is intended to apply only to property in which the deceased person had ownership so as to constitute it a portion of his estate although he held it in trust.

RANJIT SINGH v. JAGANNATH PROSAD GUPTA (1) distinguished.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 23rd of June 1897 against a decision of C. M. W. Brett, Esq., District Judge of Bhagalpur, dated the 7th of June 1897.

The Respondent, Jaga Mohan Gir, applied on the 11th February 1897 before the District Judge of Bhagalpur for letters of administration to the trust estate of the Sibsara math on the death of the previous Mohunt, Sabhaput Gir, which had taken place on the 14th December 1896. He based his claim to succession on the fact that after the death of the late Mohunt he was, according to the custom of the endowment, selected as the fittest chela to succeed by the other chelas and the Gosains of the math and that his selection was confirmed by the Mohunts of the neighbouring maths who had been summoned for that purpose on the Bhandara ceremony day.

Jib Lal Gir his opponent (Appellant) denied the custom as alleged and asserted that the senior chela succeeded by right of seniority, and that he as senior chela was entitled to succeed, that the Petitioner had no right to succeed to the office, that the Petitioner along with certain other persons had been bound down to keep the peace in a proceeding under sec. 107, Cr. P. C., in which it had been held by the Magistrate that he the objector had lawfully succeeded to the Mohuntship and was in possession of the estates and effects appertaining to the math. He accordingly prayed for the dismissal of Jaga Mohan's application and simultaneously also applied for grant of letters of administration to himself.

On the 9th April 1897 before evidence had been recorded in the case, the objector (Appellant) moved that the application of Jaga Mohan Gir be rejected on the ground that the application could not be granted under Act V of 1881. It was urged on his behalf that the applicant based his title not on succession but on election, that moreover the deceased Mohunt owned a life-estate only which determined on his death and that he merely occupied the position of a trustee. On behalf of the Petitioner it was urged that the objection was opposed to the prevailing practice, that sec. 37 of Act V 1881 contemplated the appointment of an administrator to a trust-estate on the death of the sole or surviving trustee and that the necessity for such appointment was recognised in Ranjit Singh v. Jagannath Prosad Gupta (1) amongst other decisions of the High Court.

(1) I. L. R. 12 Cal. 375 (1886).

MOHUNT JIB LAL GIR v. MOHUNT JAGA MOHAN GIR.

incorrect to assume that the trust-estate held by the late Mohunt determined on his death. "The trust estate in the case of this endowment appears to be perpetual and the death of a trustee does not bring it to an end." There was no reason why an application to administer such an estate should not be entertained. Sec. 37 of Act V of 1881 clearly laid down that administration to such a trust-estate might be granted. Referring to In re Bhyrub Bharutee Mohunt (2), Dukharum v. Luchmun (3) which were cases under the Succession Certificate Act, he held there was no real analogy between an application for letters of administration to such a trust-estate and one under the Succession Certificate Act.

He accordingly dismissed the preliminary objection.

The case was heard in due course on the merits and the learned District Judge decreed the Petitioner's claim.

The Defendant appealed.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, Babu Lal Mohan Dass, Dr. Ashutosh Mukherjee and Babu Ashutosh Mukherjee for the Appellant.

Mr. Hill and Babus Saligram Singh and Jogesh Chandra Dey for the Respondent.

The parties in this case are rival claimants to the succession to the Mohun ship of a math. The Petitioner, now Respondent, sought to have his claim determined by applying in the Court of the District Judge under Act V of 1881 for letters of administration to enable him to administer the estate of the math in succession to the deceased Mohunt, in whose place he alleged himself to have been elected after the Mohunt's death.

A preliminary objection was taken in the Court of the District Judge that such an application did not lie under Act V of 1881; but the objection was disallowed and in the end letters of administration were granted to the Petitioner, the present Respondent.

The objector has preferred the present appeal against the order of the District Judge upon the whole case; but we have in the first instance heard arguments only upon the question of law raised in the preliminary objection disallowed by the Court below, which is embodied in the first paragraph of the grounds of appeal, as, if that be decided in favour of the Appellant, it becomes unnecessary to consider the case upon its merits.

The learned District Judge considered that the objection was unsustainable as being "based on the incorrect assumption that the trust-estate held by the late Mohunt is determined by his death." "The trust-estate," he goes on to say, "in the case of this endowment appears to be perpetual and the death of a trustee does not bring it to an end. It is to administer this estate that the application is made, though the application itself has perhaps not been correctly worded." The learned Judge referred to several cases; but we are of opinion that the only one which has a material bearing upon the present case is that of Ranjit Singh v. Jagannath Prosad Gupta (1).

We are inclined to think that the learned Judge has unconsciously used the word 'estate' in different senses. When he says that the trust-estate in the case of the endowment appears to be perpetual, he seems to be intending to decide against the contention noticed by him early in the judgment, "that the late Mohunt had a life-estate only, which determined on his death," but the word 'estate' seems here to be used in two different senses, neither of which is that in which it is used in Act V of 1881, where it invariably denotes the property and credits left by a deceased person. To avoid confusion we shall use the term in the latter sense only.

Some questions have been argued before us, as to whether the relation of a shebait to an idol can be correctly described as that of a trustee and whether ownership on the part of a trustee is not necessary to constitute a trust, which we do not think necessary to discuss here, because we are of opinion that assuming them to be decided in favour of the Petitioner-Respondent, his application must be held to be outside the scope of Act V of 1881.

The preamble of the Act sets forth that "it is expedient to provide for the grant of probate of wills and letters of administration to the estates of deceased persons in cases to which the Indian Succession Act, 1865, does not apply." The form of letters of administration prescribed by sec. 77 of the Act sets forth that that of which letters of administration are granted is "the property and credits of late of—, deceased." That the deceased Mohunt in the present case had no ownership in the property of the math which was in his charge is not disputed; the only contention which has been raised in this connection is that such ownership was not necessary to constitute him a trustee. Be that as it may, if he had no ownership in the property of the math, we are unable to understand how it could form any portion of his estate, or how letters of administration purporting to affect the math property could be given as letters of administration of his "property and credits" in accordance with the prescribed form.

The provision relied upon as bringing the case within the scope of the Act is sec. 37 of the Act and the case in Ranjit Singh v. Jagannath Prosad Gupta (1) is relied upon in support of the applicability of that section to cases of this kind. Sec. 37 occurs in Chap. III, which is headed "Of Limited Grants" and in division (c) of that chapter, headed "For special purposes." It runs as follows:—"Where a person dies, leaving property of which he was the sole or surviving trustee, or in which he had no beneficial interest on his account, and leaves no general representative, or one who is unable or unwilling to act as such, letters of administration, limited to such property, may be granted to the beneficiary or to some other person on his behalf."

This provision may not be taken apart from the other provisions of the Act, the object of which, as we have seen, is to provide for "the grant of probate of wills and letters of administration to the estates of deceased persons" and not for the administration of trust property generally.

Again the definition of an "administrator" in sec. 3 of the Act is "a person appointed by competent authority to administer the estate of a deceased person when there is no executor" and if we examine Chap. VI of the Act, "Of the Powers of an Executor or Administrator" and Chap. VII "Of the Duties of an Executor or Administrator," we see that their provisions have no relation to the ordinary functions of the shebait of an idol. No doubt the shebait "administers" the affairs of the idol in the sense that he carries on the general management of them; but that is not "administration" in the restricted technical sense in which, i.e., the word is used with reference to the estate of a deceased person.

(1) I. L. R. 12 Cal. 375 (1886).

MOHUNT JIB LAL GIR v. MOHUNT JAGA MOHAN GIR.

Looking to the object of the Act, we think that sec. 37 can apply only to property in which a deceased person had ownership so as to constitute it a portion of his estate although he held it in trust.

We think that the case in Ranjit Singh v. Jagannath Prosad Gupta (1) is distinguishable from the present case. In that case a testatrix had by her Will dedicated certain immoveable property to the sheba of an idol and appointed an executrix whom she also constituted shebait and to whom she gave power to appoint the next shebait. The executrix died without having made any such appointment and the sister's son of the testatrix thereupon applied for letters of administration with a copy of the Will annexed to be granted to him in respect of the debutter property. It was held that letters of administration could be granted under sec. 45 of the Act, because there still remained some portion of the estate of the testatrix to be administered. The learned Judges in considering whether that case came within the scope of Act V of 1881 referred in the first place to sec. 45 and after stating the provisions of that section they say at page 379 :—

"In the present case what has happened is that the executor appointed by the Will has died; and the estate of the testator, for reasons already explained, has yet to be administered. In this view it would seem that administration might well be applied for and granted under the Act.

We may also refer to sec. 37 of the Act as bearing upon this matter."

After noticing the terms of sec. 37 they say: "It may be doubtful whether in using the word 'beneficiary' in the above section the Legislature ever contemplated the case of an idol. But regard being had to what has for a number of years been understood in our Courts to be the true position of an idol in regard to dedicated properties, we do not see why as a cestui que trust an idol may not be a 'beneficiary' within the meaning of that section"

With regard to this general proposition we do not consider it necessary to express any opinion in the present case. In our view it would not, if we accepted it, suffice for the decision of the case with which we are dealing. In the present case in order to bring the property of the idol within the purview of sec. 37 of the Act, it is necessary in our opinion not only that the idol should be a 'beneficiary' within the meaning of that section, but that the property should be property left by the deceased, that is a portion of his estate. It would appear that the main ground on which the provisions of Act V of 1881 were held to be applicable in the reported case was that the executrix who had obtained probate of the Will of the testatrix had died leaving a part of her estate unadministered. No such circumstance exists in the present case and we accordingly do not feel pressed by the ruling in the reported case.

The appeal is decreed with costs in both Courts. Pleders' fee 5 gold mohurs.

Ghatwali tenure, income from, if may be attached—Receiver, if may be appointed for Ghatwali lands—Rents and profits not due at the date of appointment.*

The rents and profits of a Ghatwali tenure may be attached in execution of a decree in the life-time of the Ghatwal though the estate itself cannot be attached.

This is an appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Dumka allowing an attachment of the estate of the judgment-debtor and appointing a receiver.

By a compromise between the parties in Appeal from Original Decree No. 467 of 1907 it was decreed that the decretal amount was to be paid to the decree-holder in three instalments and failure to pay any two consecutive instalments was to entitle the Plaintiff decree-holder to realise the entire amount due at the time of such default by executing the entire decree, it being further stated in the petition of compromise that the decretal amount was realisable from the estate of the late Raja Udit Narain Singh (the deceased husband of the judgment-debtor) as well as from the Defendant judgment-debtor personally.

There having been default in the payment of two consecutive instalments the decree-holder applied for execution of his entire decree and prayed for realisation of the decretal amount by the appointment of a receiver for 13 taluks mentioned in the schedule to the application. This application states as a ground for the realisation of the decretal amount by means of a receiver the fact that in another suit the 13 taluks had been declared Ghatwali. On this application the judgment-debtor was called upon to show cause why her estate should not be attached and placed under a receiver. She appeared and applied for two weeks' time which application was refused and the whole of her estate with some exceptions specified in the order was attached and the Deputy Commissioner was appointed receiver, the Court issuing directions to the mustagirs and raiyats not to pay rents to anybody other than the Deputy Commissioner or his duly constituted agents. The judgment-debtor was forbidden to make any collections during the continuance of the attachment.

RANI KESHABATI KOERI v. MOHON CHANDRA MONDUL.

Though the order relates to two matters, viz. : attachment and the appointment of a receiver, this appeal is in respect of the latter only. A preliminary objection that no appeal lay was raised on behalf of the Respondent but as it was not pressed we need not deal with it at any length. It will be sufficient for us to say that in our view an appeal does lie against the order of the Subordinate Judge.

Though in the grounds of appeal no exception has been taken to the attachment the argument on behalf of the Appellant addressed to us has been directed mainly to show that a Ghatwali estate is not liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree and we have been referred to the cases in Nilmony Singh v. Bakra Nath (1), Ram Chunder v. Madho Kumar (2), Kustooria Koomaree v. Benode Ram (3), Benode Ram v. Court of Wards (4), Benode Ram v. Court of Wards (5) and Udoy Kumari v. Hari Ram (6).

On a consideration of these cases we are unable to say that they go so far as to lay down that the surplus rents and profits of Ghatwali tenures cannot be attached in the life-time of the Ghatwal, though they do lay down that the estate itself cannot be attached. The case of Kustooria Koomaree v. Benode Ram (3) is clear authority for the proposition that the surplus proceeds of a Ghatwali tenure collected during the life-time of the judgment-debtor are his personal property and thus liable to be taken in execution. In Surajmal v. Kristo Pershad (7), it was held that the income of a Ghatwali property was not itself Ghatwali property and as such was liable to be sold. The appointment of a receiver in this case is in entire accord with the view taken in the case of Udoy Kumari v. Hari Ram (6) which like Raj Keshore v. Bunshidas, (8) came from the Sonthal Pergunnahs. It may be open to question whether a receiver ought to be appointed to collect rents and profits that have not accrued at the time of the appointment but we do not think that we ought in the present case to dissent from the decision in Udoy Kumari v. Hari Ram (6). For all that we know to the contrary, rents and profits may have accrued prior to the appointment. Had there been merely a prohibitory order issued to the Ghatwal not to receive any rents and profits from the raiyats and also to the raiyats not to pay their rents to the Ghatwal without the appointment of a receiver the order might have been open to question but the appointment of a receiver to receive the rents and profits seems to us an order sanctioned by authority. The order for attachment of the estate may be erroneous but as the practical effect of the appointment of the receiver is merely to ensure that the rents and profits are properly dealt with we do not think it necessary to interfere. We therefore, in the view

Putni Regulation (VIII of 1819), Sec. 17, cl. (c)—Antecedent balances, if recoverable by resale of the tenure.

Under the provisions of sec. 17, cl. (c) of the Putni Regulation, arrears of rent for a period antecedent to the period to recover the rent of which the tenure had been sold must be regarded as personal debts recoverable under the ordinary procedure for the recovery of debts and not by resale of the tenure.

JAGANNATH v. MOHIUDDIN MIRZA (2) followed.

PEARY MOHAN MUKHOPADHYA v. SREERAM CHANDRA BOSE (1) dissented from.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 10th of February 1911 against an order of Mr. T. C. Mukerjee, District Judge of Zillah Khulna, dated the 17th of December 1910, affirming an order of Babu Ashutosh Sirkar, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Khulna, dated the 30th of July 1909.

The facts of the case are briefly as follows :—

The Appellant had the putni taluk then held by one Moulvi Mafazal Rahan sold for arrears of rent due thereon for the last half of 1313, B. S. The sale was held on the 1st Jaista 1314, B. S., under Regulation VIII of 1819. In the sale notification there appeared these words “এই মহালের উপর সরকারের যে দাবী থাকে তাহা নিলাম দ্বারা লোপ হইবে না” which meant that if the sarkar had any demand upon the mehal it would not be extinguished by reason of the sale. The Khulna Loan Company, Ltd., became the purchaser at the sale. Thereafter the Appellant sued the old tenant for arrears due on account of a previous period, obtained a decree and in execution of the decree put up the putni tenure again to sale. The Khulna Loan Company, Ltd., objected to the tenure being sold and this objection prevailed in both the lower Courts.

Hence this appeal.

Babu Satish Chandra Ghosh for the Appellant.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal against an order of the District Judge of Khulna confirming an order of the Subordinate Judge of that place on an application for execution of a decree. It appears that the decree was for rent of a certain putni taluk which had been previously sold for subsequent arrears of rent and purchased by the Khulna Loan Company, Ltd. The decree-holder, in execution of his decree, sought to recover the decretal amount, being rent for antecedent period, by sale for the second time of this putni taluk. Both the lower Courts held that he was not entitled to execute his decree by sale of the putni taluk after it had already been sold once for subsequent arrears of rent and that his remedy lay in a suit against the original tenant for recovery of the amount of rent due for the previous years as a money debt. The learned pleader who appears in support of the appeal contends, on the authority of the case of Peary Mohan Mukhopadhyaya v. Sreeram Chandra Bose (1), that his client is entitled to have the tenure resold and that the orders passed by both the lower Courts are wrong and should be set aside. We are unable to accept this contention as valid. We had the same matter before us in the case of Jagannath v. Mohiuddin Mirza (2) and we hold that, under the provisions of sec. 17, cl. (c) of the Putni Regulation (VIII of 1819), arrears of rent for a period antecedent to the period to recover the rent of which the tenure had been sold must be regarded as personal debts recoverable under the ordinary procedure for the recovery of debts and not by resale of the tenure. We see no reason to differ from the view which we expressed in that case and we think that that concludes the present appeal. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs, three gold mohurs.

Where a putni has been sold under the Putni Regulation and no suit has been brought under sec. 14 of that Regulation to set aside that sale,

Held—That the sale cannot be impugned as invalid collaterally by way of defence in a suit brought by a purchaser of the putni for ejectment.

Irregularity in the service of notices in such sale does not make the sale a nullity. Irregular sales under the Regulation are voidable and not void and they can only be avoided by the procedure laid down in the Regulation and within the time allowed for such suit by Art. 12, Sch. II of the Limitation Act.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 9th of November 1908 against the decree of Babu Kishore Lal Sen, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah Dacca, dated the 12th of June 1908, affirming the decree of Babu Mohim Chandra Chakraverty, Munsif, 1st Court at Naraingunj, dated the 24th of May 1907.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The subject-matter of the litigation, which has resulted in this appeal, is an one-third share in a putni taluk created on the 19th July 1888 by Nawab Assanulla as zemindar in favour of one Hara Lochan Das. On the 10th August 1889, the lessee transferred to the first Defendant, Sonamala, the one-third share now in dispute, which was subsequently conveyed by Sonamala on the 2nd January

SREEMATI RAMSONA CHOWDHURI v. NABA KUMAR SINGHA CHOWDHURI.

1897 to the second Defendant, Naba Kumar Singh. On the 14th April 1893, Hara Lochan transferred the remaining two-thirds share to Probhat Chandra Nag, now represented by his infant son, the fourth Defendant Prokash Chandra Nag. It does not appear, however, that either of the transferees got his name registered in the books of the landlord under the provisions of sec. 5 of the Putni Regulation of 1819. Default was made in the payment of rent to the zemindar, and the result was that the putni was sold on the 14th May 1894, under sec. 8, cl. (2) of the Putni Regulation. The fifth Defendant, Basanta Kumar Sen, was declared the purchaser at this sale for a sum of Rs. 51. On the 9th May 1895, Probhat Chandra Nag, the transferee of a two thirds share, commenced an action for reversal of the sale under sec. 14, against the purchaser Basanta Kumar and the zemindar Nawab Assanulla. The original putnidar, Hara Lochan, as also the transferee of the one-third share, the present first Defendant Sonamala, were joined as parties Defendant. The Plaintiff, Probhat Chandra, asked for reversal of the entire sale, as he was bound to do upon the principle explained in the cases of Unnoda v. Erskine (1), Suresh v. Akkowi (2) and Ram Charan v. Drobomoyee (3), that the sale of a putni cannot be declared good or bad in part. The Plaintiff further stated that he had failed to induce his co-sharer Sonamala to join as a co-Plaintiff, but had no objection, if upon her application, she was transferred from the category of Defendant to that of Plaintiff. The suit was resisted by the purchaser Basanta Kumar as well as by the zemindar Nawab Assan-ulla; they denied that the sale was in any way irregular, and also suggested that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suits, as the value of the disputed property exceeded the limits of its pecuniary jurisdiction. During the pendency of this litigation, the Plaintiff came to terms with the purchaser, and the result was that on the 23rd November 1895 the purchaser executed a conveyance in favour of Probhat Chandra in respect of a two-thirds share of the putni for a sum of Rs. 300. This was intimated to the Court, and the Plaintiff declined to proceed with the suit, which was thereupon dismissed with costs in favour of the zemindar. On the 11th August 1896, the auction-purchaser Basanta Kumar transferred the one-third share, which still remained with him, in favour of the Plaintiffs in the present litigation. The Plaintiffs were unable to obtain possession, and commenced this action on the 26th February 1906, for declaration of title by purchase and for recovery of possession. The principal Defendants resisted the claim on the ground that the sale under the Putni Regulation was void as contrary to law, and that, consequently, the Plaintiffs had acquired no title under their purchase from the purchasers at that sale. In answer to this contention, it was argued on behalf of the Plaintiffs that so long as the putni sale stood unreversed, their title could not be impeached collaterally. The Courts below have overruled this contention, and have treated the suit as if it were one brought by the putnidars for reversal of the sale. They have found that the Plaintiffs had failed to prove that the notices required by the Regulation had been duly served and have dismissed the suit on the ground that they had not acquired a valid title by their purchase.

SREEMATI RAMSONA CHOWDHURI v. NABA KUMAR SINGHA CHOWDHURI.

The Plaintiffs have appealed to this Court, and on their behalf the decision of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed on the ground that as the putni sale has not been set aside in the manner provided by the Regulation, and as any suit now commenced for the purpose would be prima facie barred by limitation, the title of the Plaintiffs cannot be successfully impeached, and there is, in substance, no valid answer to their claim. On behalf of the Respondents, it has been argued that the validity of the putni sale may be collaterally impeached in the present suit as constituted, and that the Plaintiffs are not entitled to succeed till they establish that they have an unimpeachable title. The question raised is one of considerable importance and apparently one of first impression, but we feel no doubt as to the manner in which it ought to be answered in view of well-recognised principles.

Sec. 14 of Reg. VIII of 1819 provides that it shall be competent to any party, desirous of contesting the right of the zemindar to make the sale, whether on the ground of there having been no balance due or any other ground, to sue the zemindar for the reversal of the sale, and upon establishing a sufficient plea to obtain a decree with full costs and damages; the purchaser shall be made a party in such a suit, and upon decree passing for reversal of the sale, the Court shall be careful to indemnify him against all loss at the charge of the zemindar or person at whose suit the sale may have been made. Art. 12 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act provides that a suit to set aside a sale of a putni taluk, sold for current arrears of rent, must be instituted within one year from the date when the sale would become final and conclusive had no such suit been brought. These provisions plainly indicate that the sale is treated not as void but as voidable. A sale under Reg. VIII of 1819 does not require to be confirmed. Such a sale becomes final and conclusive when the whole of the purchase-money has been paid under sec. 9 of the Regulation, and the period of one year runs from the date of such payment, Bhuban v. Girish (4). It has not been suggested before us that the arrears, for the recovery of which the sale was held at the instance of the zemindar, were not due, but even if such an allegation were made, it would be worthy of note that sec. 14 of the Putni Regulation contemplates a suit for reversal of the sale on the ground that no balance was due; consequently, in such a contingency, the question might arise whether the principle of the decisions in Byjnath v. Lala Seetul Pershad (5), Harkhoo v. Banshidhar (6) and Bal Kishen v. Simpson (7), namely, that a sale for arrears of revenue when no arrears are due is not a legal sale because the Collector acts entirely without jurisdiction, would be applicable to putni sales held when no balance was due to the zemindar. In any event when a putni sale is impeached on the ground that the notices required by the Regulation have not been duly served, the sale must be treated as a voidable sale capable of reversal in a suit properly constituted and commenced under sec. 14 of the Putni Regulation. This view receives considerable support from the principle which underlies the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Tasaddak v. Ahamed (8), Gobinda Lall v. Ramjanam (9) and Malkarjun v. Narhari (10). These decisions recognise the important doctrine that the omission to serve statutory notices, though it may affect the validity of a sale and render it liable to be reversed in an appropriate proceeding, does not render the sale a nullity which may be ignored by the person whose property has been sold. This principle may not be of universal application, as indicated by the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in Purna Chandra Chatterjee v. Dinabandhu Mukerjee (11), where it was ruled that the omission of the Collector to serve a notice under sec. 10 of the Public Demands Recovery Act of 1895 destroys his jurisdiction to hold the sale. In the case before us, however, it is impossible for us to hold that the sale was a nullity, because the notices required by the Regulation were not proved to have been duly served. But reliance was placed by the learned Vakil for the Respondents upon the cases of Maharaja of Burdwan v. Tarasundari (12), Maharaja of Burdwan v. Krishno Kamini (13), Maharani of Burdwan v. Krishna Kamini (14), Mahomed v. Abdul (15), Surnomoyee v. Girish Chandra (16), Hurodyal v. Mahomed Gazi (17), Raj Narain v. Ananta Lal (18), Bejoy Chand v. Atulya (19), Bhugwan v. Sudderally (20), Bykunta Nath v. Mahtap Chand (21), Hara v. Juggarnath (22), Raghub v. Brojo Nath (23) and Bejoy Chand v. Amirta Lall (24) to shew that compliance with the provisions of the Regulation as to the issue and service of the requisite notices is essential for the validity of the sale. These cases are clearly distinguishable; they merely shew that the validity of the sale is affected by the failure of the zemindar to comply with the provisions of the Regulation, and the sale is liable to be annulled in a suit instituted under sec. 14, but they do not shew that the sale may be treated as a nullity.

The learned Vakil for the Respondents, however, strenuously contended that upon general principles the validity of a statutory sale may be attacked collaterally in a suit for ejectment brought by the purchaser or his representative in interest, and in support of this view, he relied upon the analogy of the doctrine recognised in some judicial decisions that an objection to the validity of an execution sale may be raised by way of defence in a regular suit although the objection is one within the scope of sec. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 [Bhiram Ali v. Gopi Kanth (25), Chandra Mani v. Halejennessa (26), Durga Charan v. Karamat Khan (27), Thathu v. Kondu (28), Venkataramna v. Menatchisundara (29)]. In answer to this argument, it may be pointed out that the doctrine upon which reliance is placed has not uniformly been accepted in this Court [Dwarka Nath Pal v. Tarini Sanakar Roy (30), Durga Charan v. Kali (22) 11 W. R. 87 (1869) (23) 14 W. R. 489 (1870). (24) I. L. R. 27 Cal. 308 (1899). (25) I. L. R. 24 Cal. 355 (1897). (26) 9 O. L. J. 464 (1908). Prasanna (31) and Murullah v. Barullah (32)]; the matter is indeed, by no means, free from difficulty, and when it arises directly for consideration, it may require careful examination. In any event, the application of the doctrine would prima facie be limited by the conditions imposed by sec. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, which provides in sub-sec. (2) that the Court may, subject to any objection as to limitation or jurisdiction, treat a proceeding under that section as a suit or a suit as a proceeding and may, if necessary, order payment of any additional Court-fees. The restrictions indicated shew conclusively that there are weighty reasons why the validity of the sale should not be allowed to be impeached collaterally in the present suit. In the first place, in a suit for reversal of the sale, the zemindar is a necessary party, as is manifest from the provisions of sec. 14 of the Regulation. In the second place as the validity of a putni sale must be challenged in its entirety, the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit for reversal is instituted, must be determined with reference to the value of the entire putni, whereas in a suit for possession of a share of the putni taluk by the representative of the purchaser under the Regulation, it is the value of the share in controversy which determines the jurisdiction of the Court. In the third place, if a suit for reversal of the sale were now to be commenced, it would obviously be successfully met by the plea of limitation, because even if the Defendants as Plaintiffs in such a suit sought to avail themselves of the provisions of sec. 14 of the Limitation Act, for exclusion of the time during which they have defended the present suit [Jagatindra v. Dindyal

(33) and Mangu Lal v. Kandhai (34)], it could be of no avail as against the zemindar who is not a party to this litigation, while if they relied upon the provisions of sec. 18, for exclusion of the time during which they had been kept by the alleged fraud of the purchaser from knowledge of their right to ask for reversal of the sale, it could be of no avail as against the zemindar, as the latter is not a party to this suit, and as they themselves must have been apprised of the fraud, if any, before the 29th May 1906, when they filed their written statement. But even if these difficulties could be overcome, it would have to be shown that the dismissal of the previous suit against the zemindar was no bar to a second suit of similar scope and description. Apart however, from these considerations, we are unable to accede to the contention of the Respondents, that, as a matter of principle, the validity of such sales ought to be allowed to be challenged collaterally. The three decisions of the Judicial Committee to which we have already referred [Tasaddak v. Ahamed (8), Gobinda Lal v. Ramjanam (9) and Malkarjun v. Narhari (10)], undoubtedly militate against such a theory. It must further be remembered that the tendency of Courts is against collateral impeachment, except in the case of private transaction before they have passed from the domain of contract into that of judgment [Clough v. L. & N. W. Ry. Co. (35), Eastern Mortgage v. Rehati (36), Baroda v. Gajendra (37)]. For illustrations, reference may be made to Surnamoyee Dassi v. Ashutosh Goswami (38) and Gora Chand v. Makhan (39), although where a decree obtained by fraud is sought to be used against a person he is allowed, under statutory provisions (sec. 44 of the Indian Evidence Act) to shew the true nature of the decree, notwithstanding that no steps have been taken by him for reversal of the decree [Nistarini v. Nando Lal (40) and Rajib Panda v. Lakhan (41)]. In the absence of such a statutory provisions and in the face of an express statutory mode for reversal of the sale, we are not prepared to hold that it ought to be allowed to be impeached collaterally. The general rule is that a judgment rendered by a Court having jurisdiction over the parties and the subject-matter, unless reversed or annulled in some appropriate proceeding, is not open to contradiction or impeachment in respect to its validity, verity or binding effect, by parties or privies in any collateral action or proceeding [White v. Rose (42), Rogers v. Wood (43), Briscoe v. Stephens (44)]. The same doctrine has been maintained in the American Courts in numerous cases, amongst which may be mentioned three decided by the Supreme Court of the United States [Thompson v. Whitman (45), Dunham v. Jones (46) and Gunn v. Plann (47)], as also the case of International Wood Company v. National Assurance Company (48). No doubt, the position may be different when a judgment shews on its face that it is void for want of jurisdiction either of the person or the subject-matter; such a judgment may possibly be treated as a nullity and collaterally impeached by any person interested, wherever it is brought in question. But that doctrine has no application to a case like the present where the validity of the sale is plainly intended by the Legislature to be determined in a suit, properly constituted and brought in a Court of competent jurisdiction, within the time allowed by law, and against parties sought to be affected by the result. We are, therefore, of opinion, that the conclusion is inevitable that the Defendants ought not to have been allowed to challenge the validity of the sale in the present suit. We do not, however, decide whether the Defendants may not subject to the law of limitation, have some remedy on the ground of fraud if fraud is established against the purchaser at the putni sale and other persons who may have assisted him in the attainment of his fraudulent object.

The result consequently is that this appeal must be allowed, the decrees of the Courts below discharged, and the Plaintiffs awarded a decree for the one-third share of the putni taluk in dispute. In the circumstances disclosed, however, and in view of the great delay in the institution of the suit, we direct each party to bear his own costs throughout the litigation, for in deciding the question of costs, we are entitled to consider not merely the conduct of the parties in the actual litigation, but also the matters which led up to the litigation [Harnett v. Vise (49)].

HOLMWOOD, J.	}	BHAGBAT SHAHA,
IMAM, J.		Accused, Petitioner,
1912,		v.
19, April.		SIDDIQUE OSTAGAR,
		Complainant, Opposite Party

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 423 (1), (d), 522—Order under latter section if may be passed on appeal.

In confirming a conviction passed by a Subordinate Magistrate, the District Magistrate cannot pass an order for delivery of possession under sec. 522, Cr. P. C., when no such order was passed by the trying Magistrate.

This was a Rule granted on the 25th of March 1912 against an order of Mr. S. Ahamed, Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Dacca, dated the 30th of November 1911, convicting the Petitioner under sec. 448, I. P. C., and sentencing him to a fine of Rs. 50 an appeal from which order was dismissed by Mr. H. M. Cowan, Additional District Magistrate, dated the 19th of January 1912, the District Magistrate in dismissing the appeal having passed a further order for delivery of possession under sec. 522, Cr. P. C.

The facts of the case briefly stated are as follows : Complainant's employer, Ananda Sha, took possession of certain rooms of his brother's portion of the house by a Civil Court peon as a purchaser in a Civil Court auction on 13th August last.. On the same evening principal accused Bhagbat entered into the house with a number of men and caused the padlock of the door to be broken by his men and placed their females inside in spite of his protest whereon complainant called his master, Ananda, to the scene on whose opposition the accused party retired.

The defence set up by accused was that on 13th August the complainant's employer tried to take possession of the disputed rooms by a Civil Court peon. Hearing about this Bhagbat proceeded to the spot and finding the contents of the rooms removed forbade the peon to deliver possession of the disputed rooms on the ground that his father had purchased the said rooms from Gobinda Sha before Ananda's auction purchase ; that thereupon the peon went away without delivering possession. Late in the evening Bhagbat went to the spot on hearing that Ananda Sha and his men were abusing inmates of Soleman's house and taking forcible possession thereof. On having remonstrated Ananda abused him and assaulted his men. For this Bhagbat instituted a criminal case against Ananda and his men and it was alleged that for this reason this counter-case was started. Bhagbat admitted the fact of his having seen Ananda's party taking possession of the rooms by removing articles and putting a padlock through the Civil Court peon. This statement on his part according to the learned Sub-Deputy Magistrate clearly amounted to an admission of his having trespassed there and of Ananda having received the delivery of possession through the Court peon. Upon these and other findings the Sub-Deputy Magistrate found Bhagbat Sha guilty of an offence under sec. 448, Cr. P. C., and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 50.

On appeal by the accused, the District Magistrate held as follows :

"Complainant got possession of part of a bari through Civil Court. On the evening of the same day accused's party came and broke complainant's padlock and took possession. There is good evidence that accused took forcible possession after the delivery of legal possession to complainant. There is no evidence to contradict it. The appeal is dismissed. Under sec. 522, Cr. P. C., I direct that complainant be put in possession of the place of which the peon gave possession according to the auction purchase in the proceeding in the Civil Court."

Mr. J. N. Roy and Babu Bhupendra Chandra Guha for the Petitioner.

We are of opinion that this Rule must be made absolute on the ground on which it was issued. The considerations which moved the Full Bench in the case of Mehi Singh v. Mangal Khandu (1) seem to apply with equal or even more force to an order under sec. 522, Cr. P. C. It is clear that the confirming of a conviction on appeal where the Magistrate had not thought it necessary to act under sec. 522 cannot make such an order a consequential relief, or an order ancillary in character for which no separate authority is needed. Separate authority under sec. 522 was distinctly needed before any Criminal Court could have such extraordinary powers as are given thereby. The power is an unusual one. It is one certainly not inherent in the ordinary Courts of Criminal Jurisdiction and it certainly could not be exercised by any person other than the Court which convicted of an offence attended with criminal force and held independently that by such force any person had been dispossessed of any immoveable property; and that independent finding must of course be the finding of the Court of first instance. The Appellate Court cannot come to an independent finding upon a matter which is not before it in appeal. We do not think it necessary to discuss the divergence of opinion between this Court and the Bombay Court as regards the time at which such an order should be passed; but we may say that were we to agree with the view taken by the Bombay Court in Narayan Govind v. Visaji (2). The want of jurisdiction in the Appellate Court would thereby be rendered still more clear; for the Bombay Court says that an order made under sec. 522, Cr. P. C., restoring possession of immoveable property to a person who has been dispossessed of it by criminal force is an independent order, and may therefore be made subsequent to the date of the conviction of the offender and need not be made at the same time as the conviction. If that is so the Court which had the conviction before it on appeal obviously had nothing whatever to do with the order under sec. 522 and could not pass an independent order directing restoration of the property.

The Rule is made absolute and the order under sec. 522 set aside.

Rule made absolute.

addressed not to a private individual but to the representative of a large number of men (e.g., captain of a school) amounts to publication if it is opened by anybody.

The one thing required for the admission of the evidence of an expert witness as to handwriting is that the writing with which the comparison is made should be proved beyond question or doubt to be that of the person alleged.

The evidence of an expert in handwriting is inadmissible if there is no comparison with proved or admitted handwriting in open Court in the presence of the party affected.

CRESWELL v. JACKSON (1), COBBET v. KILMINSTER (2) referred to.

SHEKMUTTY PHOODKE BIBEE v. GOBIND CHUNDER ROY (3) followed.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 22nd of December 1911 against an order of Mr. J. G. Dunlop, District Magistrate of Pabna, dated the 4th of December 1911, convicting the Appellant under sec. 124A, I. P. C., and sentencing him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for 2 years.

The facts of the case are as follows :—

Babu Kshirode Chandra Sen, Head Master of the Rungpur Zillah School, got a cover bearing the post mark of Bera in the District of Pabna addressed to the Captain, Rungpur Zillah School. He opened it and found it to contain an anonymous leaflet in Bengali entitled "Matripuja." Being of opinion that it was seditious, he sent the leaflet and cover to the Magistrate. The Magistrate in his turn sent it to the Commissioner who forwarded it to the District Magistrate of Pabna. The Magistrate handed it over to the Superintendent of Police for enquiry. As the result of the enquiry, information was obtained and some house searches were made resulting in the discovery of some literature, in the possession of one Suresh Chandra Sanyal, a student of the Bera H. E. School. The leaflet and the literature discovered were sent to Mr. Charles Hardless, junior, and his opinion was obtained establishing the identity of the handwritings. Sanction was obtained and a complaint was lodged by the Superintendent of Police to the District Magistrate of Pabna against the accused for committing an offence under sec. 124A of the Indian Penal Code. The Magistrate found the accused guilty and sentenced him to two years' rigorous imprisonment.

Mr. J. N. Roy with Babu Purna Chandra Roy for the Accused.

Mr. Caspersz for the Crown.

This is an appeal from the judgment and sentence passed by the District Magistrate of Pabna upon the Appellant, Suresh Chandra Sanyal, under sec. 124A of the Indian Penal Code.

He has been convicted of forwarding a certain seditious leaflet called "Matripuja" to the Captain of the Rungpur School and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment.

There is no doubt as to the highly seditious nature of the leaflet and it is fully admitted by the defence that no question arises on this point.

We also think on full consideration of the facts that the sending of this leaflet by post addressed not to a private individual by name but to the representative of a large body of students amounts to publication and that the intention of the sender was undoubtedly to stir up disaffection to the Government among the students of the Rungpur Zillah School.

But the case entirely fails on the point of proof of handwriting and we may dispose of it quite shortly on that ground. Two Mahomedan boys who appear to be on bad terms with the accused give vague evidence as to their belief that the incriminating documents and others which were used for purposes of comprison are in the handwriting of the accused. Their knowledge of his handwriting is largely based on having seen him write on the black board at school and having overlooked his exercise books.

As to this test their evidence is discrepant and in our opinion worthless and as regards the writing in chalk on the black board the expert witness, Mr. C. Hardless, junior, himself says that such a comparison is in his opinion impossible as it obviously is.

The expert was given certain writings found in accused's possession to compare and he has stated that in his opinion all these writings are by one hand. Now although the writings appear to us to differ very considerably in character even on the points on which Mr. Hardless places most reliance we are quite prepared to receive his evidence with every respect and might have acted upon it had any document that was either proved or admitted to be in the accused's handwriting been placed in his hands. But in this case we are met with the curious anomaly that no such documents has been used for purposes of comparison.

Now it is settled law that the one thing that is required for the admission of the evidence of an expert witness as to handwriting is that the writing with which the comparison is made should be proved beyond question or doubt to be that of the person alleged.

The Statute 28 and 29 Vict., c. 18, sec. 8, lays down in express terms that the comparison by a witness of the disputed writing for the purpose of giving an expert opinion must be with any writing proved to the satisfaction of a Judge to be genuine, see Creswell v. Jackson (1) and Cobbett v. Kilminster (2), and though this condition is not expressly laid down in sec. 45 of the Evidence Act which is only a general section as to the admissibility of expert evidence yet it is clearly indicated in the Illus. (c) to the section where the comparison is assumed to be made in all cases with a document which is proved or admitted to have been written by the alleged writer of the document in question.

This Rule was taken for granted in India in what appears to be the earliest reported case after the passing of the Evidence Act, Sreemutty Phondee Bibee v. Gobind Chunder Roy (3), where the Judges, Markby and Ramesh Chandra Mitter, JJ., say that under ordinary circumstances they would assume that the comparison took place in open Court and that a comparison having been made without any objection by the party affected by it the signature on the vakalatnamah which was used for comparison must have been in fact admitted.

But on a finding that this was not so the decision of the lower Appellate Court was reversed and the Judges said that they considered, according to their experience, that a comparison of signatures is a mode of ascertaining the truth which ought to be used with very great care and caution.

It is evident that this is doubly so in a criminal case where a large quantity of apparently very different handwriting is under comparison.

The assumption here is that a notebook found in the accused's possession is entirely in his handwriting. Now there is internal evidence in the book itself that it is not and the expert was not even asked to say whether all the writing in this book was by the same hand.

Nor was he asked to make any comparison in open Court with proved or admitted handwriting which was then available.

It is claimed by learned Counsel for the Crown that the comparison made by the expert months before when the documents were first discovered and when nobody knew whether they were in the same hand or not is a strong proof of his impartiality and should give greater weight to his evidence.

But unfortunately when there is no comparison in open Court before the accused with documents proved or admitted to be in his handwriting such evidence is inadmissible and having regard to the minute and scientific investigations which are now in practice made by handwriting experts by means of photographic enlargements and detailed measurements made out of Court we must emphasize the necessity for strictly complying with the law as to what has to be done in the Court itself.

These preliminary enquiries and scientific researches may be very necessary and very desirable but they cannot be allowed to supersede or in any way take the place of comparison in open Court with proved or admitted writings which alone renders the expert's testimony admissible.

To justify our finding on this point which is of course based on wholly independent legal considerations we may remark that in this case a very remarkable instance of the danger of relying on inspection made out of Court has come to our notice.

There is an address copied into the accused's notebook at page 73 in which the word 'Rungpore' twice occurs. This has been greatly relied upon by the expert for comparison with the same word occurring on the envelope Ex. 2 in which the incriminating document was sent.

Now not only is this entry wholly unproved but it appears to us to be an interpolation in the notebook made in a different handwriting to the rest of the page and the last curve of the R is of a wholly different character to that on the envelope being curved in and rounded instead of outwards as we have written it above and as it appears on the envelope. On the other hand the unusually elongated tail of the g and the unusually short shaft of the p seem to be laboriously imitated in the notebook from the writing on the envelope and it is obvious that it could be quite possible to put matters before the expert in a private examination which were not in the original document at all and so deceive him into giving evidence in all good faith upon writing which really had no connection with the case.

We do not say that this is so in this particular case, but the suspicion that an entry such as this in the notebook prima facie arouses, illustrates the danger of substituting that which is not evidence, namely, the expert's private examination of the documents out of Court for that which the law has under the safeguards of extreme care and caution made admissible as evidence on condition that the examination is made in open Court in the presence of the party affected.

It is clear that on this ground the finding that the accused either wrote or forwarded by post the incriminating document falls to the ground. That he was in possession of highly seditious literature and that he habitually sent for, purchased and read such literature is certain and may give rise to a strong suspicion that he was engaged in disseminating such pernicious writings among his friends and associates. But he is only one of a secret society in the village of Bera which has been deposed to by the D. S. P. and the publication of this particular missive has not been brought home to him.

Whether he could have been arraigned under sec. 108, Cr. P. C., or under sec. 153A, I. P. C., it is not for us to enquire. But we have to consider whether or not there should be a re-trial in this case and we think that having regard to the fact that the accused has been 8½ months in jail as an under-trial prisoner and as a convict combined, that his conduct even if it could be shown to be criminal has been amply punished and that we may hope that he will realise the folly and wickedness of tampering with sedition, and as he is young enough to reform and become an useful member of society, that this will be a sufficient warning to him for the future, there is no need for a re-trial.

We set aside the conviction and sentence and order the acquittal and release of the accused.

Accused acquitted.

REPORTS (See Index.)

WE REPRODUCE IN ANOTHER COLUMN A VERY learned and thoughtful address by Sir John Macdonell, C. B., delivered before the First International Congress of Races on the "Relationship of International Law to the Subject Races." This eminent jurist shows how even liberal minded jurists and philosophers of the last century and their predecessors thought that the dominant races of the world had a right to domineer over other races and nationalities of the world by virtue of what they believed to be their superior civilization. Sir John points out briefly some of the inequities that have been perpetrated in different parts of the world in the name such civilization. He appeals evidently to the European nations not to wipe out all other forms of civilization from the face of the earth in the blind belief that they are inferior simply because they differ from that of their own. He further points out the fallacy of regarding communities of men as unprogressive simply because the records of their progress are unwritten or unavailable. He says with the foresight of a philosopher that people who appear on the surface to be unprogressive may one day determine the progress of the world along new lines and thus enrich mankind, and that it will be disastrous to progress and civilization to make all the races of the world conform to one single type of civilization. He therefore advocates that care should be taken to preserve to all races and nations in the world their own moral, intellectual and social ideals and institutions, and to foster and promote their development along their own national lines.

SIR JOHN CONSIDERS THAT THE ONLY MORAL justification that one nation can advance for controlling the affairs of another is that the latter is not yet fit to manage its own affairs and the relationship so arising, he regards as akin to that of a guardian and a ward. It, therefore, necessarily follows that whatever may be done by the former which is not for the benefit of the latter should be voidable and that the former must invariably act in the interest of the latter. Sir John also maintains that although a Government in the position of a guardian naturally considers itself to be the best judge with regard to the affairs of the ward yet for obvious reasons its judgments cannot in such matters be always unerring and it is but reasonable that it should make itself amenable to independent and disinterested outside influences and opinions. The step by which this is to be achieved, the learned author very properly says, is by promoting inquiry and acquisition of precise knowledge regarding the different races and nations now under tutelage, and by the establishment of societies for that purpose.

WE DESIRE TO DRAW THE POINTED ATTENTION OF the new Lord Chancellor to the neglect with which Indian Appeals are now treated in the Privy Council. It is nothing unusual to see only three members of the Judicial Committee, of whom two are usually ex-Indian Judges of no great celebrity, trying cases from India. Things are different with Colonial Appeals which are heard by a tribunal consisting usually of all the Law Lords as well as the Lord Chancellor.

THERE IS NO REASON WHATSOEVER WHY THERE should be this difference. Questions affecting property, status and personal rights of Indian citizens are by no means of less importance than those of Colonials, and to bring together all the legal talent of England to try Colonial cases and to entrust Indian cases to three Judges indifferently selected is to make a most invidious distinction. With the sole exception of Lord Macnaghten hardly any English lawyer of distinction has presided over the Board in trying Indian cases during the last and the previous sitting of the Judicial Committee. And this state of things has been regarded as highly unsatisfactory by the Indian litigants and the public alike.

WHEN INDIAN LITIGANTS APPEAL TO HIS MAJESTY in Council for justice they do so in the expectation that their grievances will be judged by a tribunal which represents the highest legal talent of England. It would be idle to contend that the highest tribunal for Indian Appeals as it has been constituted of late has in any degree come up to their expectations. Litigants and lawyers alike are disposed under such circumstances to feel more confidence in the best Judges of the Indian High Courts than on the Judicial Committee as now constituted for the hearing of Indian Appeals. It was no doubt at one time considered necessary to appoint some Judges of Indian experience to assist the English Judges on questions of Hindu and Mahomedan law and customs, but no one in India expected that the result of that would be to displace the best English legal talent. If the Board continue to be constituted as it is at present we have little doubt that the Indian public will soon lose the high regard in which the Judicial Committee has been held by them.

UNLESS THE AUTHORITIES IN ENGLAND SEE TO justice being done to India in this matter the cry may very well be raised that the final Court of Appeal for Indian causes should be in India where it would give its best and undivided attention to Indian cases alone and be more responsive to public opinion than any Court in England can be. We cannot profess to be very much in sympathy with such a cry, but if India is consistently treated with the neglect with which it has been treated by the Judicial Committee of late, and if we cannot expect a more liberal allotment of the English Law Lords than we have had of late on the Board of the Judicial Committee, we are afraid the cry, if raised would be hard to resist. We are strongly in favour of the final Court of Appeal continuing in England not merely because there we expect to have the services of the best English Judges, but we expect such Judges to be free from local prejudices.

LORD HALDANE MORE THAN ANY OTHER PUBLIC man of England is pledged to give equal justice to all the Empire and his scheme of an Imperial Court of Appeal is a practical demonstration of his faith in the true principle of the unity of the Empire in a common administration of equal justice. We trust that now that he is the Lord Chancellor of England, he will, with his well-known sympathies for India, exert his influence to secure for India equal treatment with the Colonies, at any rate in the administration of justice by the Imperial Court of Appeal.

ALTHOUGH THE JUBILEE OF THE CALCUTTA High Court was privately celebrated by His Lordship the Chief Justice at his residence on Monday last, yet the occasion has aroused an amount of public enthusiasm throughout the Presidency which is quite unique and unprecedented. In spite of adverse weather, the Chief Justice's party was very largely attended not merely because of the high regard and esteem in which this historic Court has been held by the public, but also because of the deep feeling of personal attachment that every member of the profession feels toward the Chief Justice. The party was a great success and the personal attention shown by the distinguished host to all his guests left nothing to be desired. But what was more remarkable was the number of messages of deep appreciation and unbounded confidence in the Court that poured into his Lordship's hands, in the course of the evening, from almost every district and every sub-division of the Presidency. This spontaneous expression of loyalty was quite a revelation even to those who knew that the High Court of Justice is the most popular institution amongst all the branches of British administration that exist in this country. The members of the legal profession in Calcutta received a rude shock at the announcement recently made for the dismemberment of the Calcutta High Court. They were hesitating whether they should celebrate the Jubilee of the High Court on the eve of its prospective dissolution. But encouraged by the example of their professional brethren throughout the Presidency they have decided to put out of their mind all mournful thoughts of the evil day and to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the Calcutta High Court in a manner that will make all of them feel that they too have not been wanting in their duty to her who has been truly an alma mater to them.

IT IS A GREAT PITY THAT WE HAVE NOT BEEN able to trace any record as to how the High Court of to-day was ushered into existence. The only thing we know is that after its creation it first commenced its sittings on the Original Side on the 7th of July 1862. It was created by Royal Letters Patent which was published in a Gazette Extraordinary of the 1st of July 1862. Then it quietly absorbed into itself the various jurisdictions, both English and indigenous, the Supreme Court, the Sadar Dewani and the Sadar Nizamut Adwaulats. As we have said before, no Court in India can be created to-day even by Royal Charter which would have the proud privilege of claiming such a comprehensive jurisdiction. Its history though not extending over many centuries still occupies quite a unique place in the annals of the historic law Courts of the world. How Warren Hastings laid the foundation of this Court at Murshidabad and how the English system of administration of justice came gradually to be blended with the Indo-Mahomedan system, will always form a most fascinating chapter in the history of the constitutional law of the country. Although we may not be able to point to any definite landmark when this blending commenced yet we possess definite records as to how the Supreme Court which was merged into the present High Court in 1862, was formally opened in this city in 1774, replacing the Mayor's Court and other Courts then existing.

THE FOLLOWING ACCOUNT OF THE OPENING OF THE Supreme Court at Calcutta, which we reproduce from Smoult and Ryan's Rules and Orders of the Supreme Court, will surely be found of interest by the public and the profession :—

THE OPENING OF THE SUPREME COURT.

1774.

The Hon. John Hyde, Esq.	... }

The Hon. Sir Elijah Impey and the other Judges take and subscribe the oaths of office and allegiance. The following entry appears on the rolls, signed by the three Puisne Justices.
 "The said Sir Elijah Impey Knight, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, appointed by letters patent of Our Sovereign Lord the King, under his great seal of Great Britain, dated at Westminster, the twenty-sixth day of March, in the fourteenth year of his Reign, and Robert Chambers, Stephen Cæsar Lemaistre, and John Hyde, Esquires, Justices of the same Court, appointed by the said letters patent, being here assembled, according to the direction of the said letters patent. We the said Robert Chambers, Stephen Cæsar Lemaistre and John Hyde, have now administered to the said Sir Elijah Impey, the several oaths and the declaration above written, and the said Sir Elijah Impey in the presence of us, so assembled, hath here taken, made and subscribed the said oaths and declaration respectively. In witness whereof we hereunto put our hands and do hereby record the same."

[Then the Court appointed Masters of the Court of Equity and other officers of Court who took the oaths of allegiance and oaths of office.

The report then proceeds :—]

The Court ordered* that a Mandamus should issue to Charles Sealy, late Register of the Mayor's Court, to deliver all the Records and Muniments of that Court into this Court.

The Court ordered that a Mandamus should issue to Stephen Bagshaw, late Clerk of the Courts of Oyer and Terminer and Gaol Delivery, to deliver all the Records and Muniments of the said Courts into this Court.

The Court adjourned to Monday the 7th day of November next, at eight of the clock in the forenoon.

INTERNATIONAL LAW AND SUBJECT RACES.*

[By SIR JOHN MACDONELL, C. B.]

At the outset is the question : How far, if at all, is International Law applicable to the relations between subject and dominant, between civilised and uncivilised races? According to one view, they are not in any way applicable; according to another, they are so, but only partially, and with many qualifications. I pass over as not meriting notice in this Congress the contention which is rarely nowadays made in so many words, that a high degree of civilisation carries with it a right to impose the will of the superior upon the inferior; that as between them might is right and that the former may do exactly as they think fit in virtue of their superiority.

Turning to statements less uncompromising, I proceed to cite those of one or two writers. The first is by Mr. John Stuart Mill :

There is a great difference (for example) between the case in which the nations concerned are of the same, or something like the same, degree of civilisation, and that in which one of the parties to the situation is of a high, and the other of very low, grade of social improvement. To suppose that the same international customs, and the same rules of international morality, can obtain between one civilised nation and another, and between civilised nations and barbarians, is a grave error, and one which no statesman can fall into, however it may be with those who, from a safe and irresponsible position, criticise statesmen. Among many reasons why the same rules cannot be applicable to situations so different, the following are among the most important. In the first place the rules of ordinary international morality imply reciprocity. But Barbarians will not reciprocate. They cannot be depended on for observing any rules. Their minds are not capable of so great an effort, nor their wills sufficiently under the influence of distant motives. In the next place nations which are still barbarous have not got beyond the period during which it is likely to be for their benefit that they should be conquered and held in subjection by foreigners. Independence and nationality, so essential to the due growth and development of a people further advanced in improvement, are generally impediments to them. . . . A violation of great principles of morality it may easily be; but barbarians have no rights as a nation, except a right to such treatment as may, at the earliest possible period, fit them for becoming one. The only moral laws for the relation between a civilised and a barbarious Government are the universal rules of morality between man and man (Disser-tations, iii. p. 161).

I have quoted this page as expressing the views of those—and they are many—who lay stress on the absence of reciprocity and the benefits of civilisation as justifying the application of different rules from those which are in force between civilised States.

These statements are, for several reasons, not satisfactory; if not inaccurate, they lack precision and definiteness. In the first place, the modern practice of nations and the teaching of modern writers do not, on the whole, whatever may be done on particular occasions, accord with some of these opinions. Modern text-books treat, sometimes at great length, the relations and duties of civilised States to inferior or backward races. In point of fact there has always been some recognition of duties by civilised nations to uncivilised or semi-civilised nations with which the latter have been brought into contact: recognition generally imperfect; often compatible with gross cruelty; often serving as a cover or excuse for wrong-doing. One of the chief subjects of discussion among the earliest students of International Law (e.g. Francisco Victoria and Baldasree de Ayala) was the relations and duties of the Spanish and Portuguese conquerors to the indigenous inhabitants.

Further it is to be noted that there is not a clear line of separation between civilised and barbarous nations; they often differ from each other by small degrees; the sharp distinction drawn in the passage which I have quoted from Mill between civilised nations and barbarous, does not help one in solving the actual problems, which for the most part relate to the dealings of nations with different types of civilisations, the relative value of which in the eyes of imperial observers, if such existed, might be dubious. What is the test of superiority? There is the often suggested test of proficiency in war, according to which the Turks some centuries ago were probably supreme among all nations, the Italians, contemporaries of Michael Angelo and Leonardo da Vinci, not excepted. There is the test of wealth; a test the justice of which, if applied to individuals, would be denied. There is the test of morality, the existence of a legal moral code and conformity of conduct thereto; a test the application of which, if possible, might lead to startling results. Nor is the distinction between the progressive and non-progressive races so clear to modern ethnologists as it was to those who knew little. The so-called stationary races are often merely those whose changes are unrecorded. As Professor Royce justly remarks, this test has never been so fairly applied by civilised nations as to give exact results. So long as there exists what M. Tarde calls the "irrésistible orgueil primitif que porte toute tribu, si infime qu'elle soit, à se considérer supérieure à ses voisins," the application of a well-accepted test is impossible. The superiority for which writers such as Gobineau and Houston Chamberlain claim will never be conceded. But what is clear is that the world would be poorer if one type of civilisation were to be universal; what we cannot be sure of is, that an unpromising race, if left to itself, may not be the starting-point of a development which will enrich mankind.

I am only summarising the teaching of a great majority of writers when I say that, apart from the conventions which I am about to mention, some at least of the rules of International Law are assumed by almost all writers to apply to such communities; even as to communities outside the purview of International Law, there are duties to be performed, duties which may be stated and formulated. At all events this holds good of communities with regular Governments, though with social organisations and moral ideas unlike our own.

One of the most characteristic modern developments in the relations between States generally, between dominant and subject races, is the establishment of Protectorates by powerful States over weaker, some of the latter being on a plane of civilisation equal to that of the former. Gradually are being evolved principles as to the reciprocal duties of protecting or protected States, including the treatment of the indigenous inhabitants.

[The author here refers to some treaties and conventions that exist amongst some of the Chief States of the world which would go to show that they recognise their duty to the non-dominant races but such international duty has so far been limited only with regard to three matters, namely, restrictions in respect of "slave trade," "importation of arms" and "importation of spirituous liquors."—Ed.]

It is at least plain from this brief recital of facts that there is some recognition of the duties of great States to weak and subject races; some recognition, too, of the need of joint action; some agreement as to these duties. It is no less true that these duties are still imperfectly recognised; that many points of importance are left unsettled; and that the organisation, official and non-official, needed to make them really effective is imperfect and rudimentary. The development of a code of duties of nations towards the less fortunate or less gifted, or more backward, races may require time; considering the slow rate at which the code of duties of civilised nations towards each other was worked out, it is possible that this new chapter may require much time. But some principles seem already fairly well recognised, and among them these—

1. If certain races are in the position of minors, not fit in their present condition to be their own masters, those who claim superiority and control ought to be able to justify their position as guardians. The greater the unfitness of the former, the greater the duties imposed on the latter. Every Government asserting the right to control the destinies of such races ought to show by its conduct that it is not acting towards its wards as an unjust guardian; that it is not exploiting their labour or squandering their estates. Could we say that the Native departments of all Governments with an indigenous population under their control even now satisfied the test: "The measure of your duties is their alleged unfitness"? What is no less clear is that in many respects the so called guardians are the least capable of judging fairly whether they have fulfilled such duties. No other judge may have jurisdiction; that circumstance does make them the less fallible.

2. There ought to be less of the intolerance of modern civilisation, equal to that of religious fanaticism, scarcely surpassed by any displayed by the Spanish conquerors of Mexico or Peru. If they were merciless, they had few means of carrying out their will, and they had at all events moments of contrition and doubts whether their work was altogether good in the eyes of Heaven, while the self-satisfaction of modern civilisation is rarely broken by an admission of failure. I am tempted to cite, if only as a rebuke to self-complacency which is too common on this point, a remarkable document entitled: "The true confession and protestation in the hour of death," by one of the first Spanish conquerors of Peru, named Marcio Serra de Lejesama, in 1589. Lejesama begins by declaring that he desires to relieve his mind and to give notice to his Catholic Majesty King Philip of his regret that he had taken part in the discovery and conquering of the lands of the Yncas.

"The said Yncas," proceeds the repentant Conquistador, "governed in such a way, that in all the land neither a thief, nor a vicious man, nor a bad dishonest woman was known. The men all had honest and profitable employment. The woods and mines and all kinds of property were so divided that each man knew what belonged to him, and there were no law suits. The Yncas were feared, obeyed, and respected by their subjects as a race very capable of governing. But we took away their land, and placed it under the government of Spain, and made them subjects. Your Majesty must understand that my reason for making this statement is to relieve my conscience, for we have destroyed this people by our bad examples. Crimes were once so little known among them that an Indian with one hundred thousand pieces of gold and silver in his house left it open, only placing a little stick across the door as a sign that the master was out, and nobody went in. But when they saw that we placed locks and keys on our doors, they understood that it was from fear of thieves, and when they saw that we had thieves amongst us, they despised us. All this I tell your Majesty to discharge my conscience of a weight that I may no longer be a party to these things. And I pray God to pardon me, for I am the last to die of all the discoverers and conquerors, and it is notorious that there are none left but me in this land or out of it, and therefore I now do what I can to relieve my conscience."

I may not have searched diligently enough, but in the many narratives of modern explorers, conquerors and pioneers of civilisation, I can recall few expressions of regret so deep as that of the confession by the Spanish conqueror, few cases in which the conscience of a modern explorer or promoter smites him, and he is filled with doubts whether it was right to break up tribal organisations and convert into masses of shifting atoms what were once strong cohesive organisations, the rudiments of nations, if not nations, full grown. Even when no cruelties have been practised towards native races, when on the contrary there has been a decree to deal fairly with them, the results have often been disastrous. The old tribal system is broken up, the best land is seized by settlers the natives are stinted either in regard to pasturage or hunting grounds. They are lured away by the attraction of high wages, and they become broken tribeless men, imitating the worst vices of their new masters; cut off from their old nation; the authority of their chiefs gone, no authority replacing for these children of Nature that which has been destroyed.

Some of these evils are inevitable; it is the fashion to say or assume that all of them are so.

But I am justified in mentioning certain dominant prejudices, taking many forms, which have done mischief and are still at work, in dealing with the aborigines. One of these is an undue sense—undue in any large view of the matter—of the value of the present prevalent form of civilisation. It appears in the assumption that there is one form of society to which all others must conform on pain of perishing. This prejudice makes people forget how many, different types of civilisation there have been—the Greek, the Roman, the Christian, the theocratic, the military, the industrial type—and that there has never been agreement as to their merits.

If the intolerance of civilisation, with its compelle intrare, has done harm, mischievous, too, has been the notion that the so-called uncivilised world is made up of races all of a piece; whereas under the vague description "uncivilised" are grouped a multitude of people radically different from each other; strong and weak, good and bad, progressive and stationary; some with the self-denying virtues in which are the roots of political aptitude; others unstable, egotistical, and incohesive.

3. I note a further point. That the conditions upon which treaties between civilised Governments, not uncivilised or semi-civilised communities, should be wholly different from treaties concluded between equals. I am quoting a rule of law, but one based on good sense, when I say that contracts to which minors are parties are voidable unless to their advantage. We all know how wantonly this has been disregarded; how the indigenous inhabitants have been tricked out of their lands; how a colour of legality has been given to gross frauds (Deherpe, Essai sur le développement de l'occupation, 1903, p. 76). I fully believe that such frauds are much rarer than they were—the opportunity for them now seldom occurs. But the principle above stated needs to be set down clearly.

It seems a truism to say that these races should retain their means of existence; a truism unfortunately often questioned in practice; a truism with far-reaching consequences as to the land of tribes, as to the operations of promoters, and as to the granting of concessions. This principle implies a land system made for them as well as for the whites; where they preponderate in number, one may fairly claim much more for them than for the latter.

The Act of Berlin of February 26, 1885, laid down certain useful rules (Arts. 34 and 35) as to the assumption of a protectorate over territories on the coast of the African Continent and the conditions of occupation. These rules relate only to the rights of parties to the Act; they are silent as to the rights of the indigenous population in the land. It did not condemn the doctrine that such land if not occupied by a civilised state was res nullius, or prescribe the conditions upon which treaties relating to such land should be recognised.

It might also be thought a truism, were it not so often disregarded, to say that the indigenous population should have the opportunities of development in their own way—which means education suited to their needs; no forcible conformity to one type.

5. The principle above stated implied something of reverence—at all events respect—towards these backward races; a desire to preserve their customs and law (so far as not cruel and mischievous).

So much—and it is necessarily imperfect—as to a few of the doctrines which have already obtained partial recognition, but which need explicit statement and application. Next, as to the organisation needed to give effect to them. In these days we at once think of Parliaments. But all the non-dominant races cannot have Parliaments. Yet they may have voices; not merely for the expression of political grievances, but for the maintenance and preservation of types of character and ideals; for the furtherance of national literature with racial elements; for the preservation of their institutions and monuments in art and literature; organs for the attainment of aims which the State does not necessarily secure and often destroys or imperils.

(a) First and foremost there should be fairly frequent meetings such as the present; gatherings from time to time when the whole situation may be reviewed, when people of different races may draw together, when the different forms which the same movement may take may be studied. If we must trust to public opinion, as is said, then public opinion should be enlightened by such gatherings as these. Sympathy ought to go hand in hand with knowledge, and it might be the object of such gatherings to study the scientific basis of truth, if any, underlying the theories as to race, and to discriminate between the mass of illusions and prejudices and scientific teaching. There should be more and more—and fortunately already there are many—societies representative of the interest of races. In no country, so far as I know, can Governments do all that is needed; in some they may be positively hostile to objects which certain races have much at heart. Some time ago a few of my friends formed the South African Native Races Committee. Its main object was to obtain and diffuse accurate information as to the native population of South Africa. Perhaps its chief work so far has been to bring about the formation of two similar societies in that country. Of late it has endeavoured to aid in procuring funds for the establishment of a college for South African natives. I cannot but think there is plenty of room for societies with like objects.

(b) My last suggestion is difficult to state without saying too much or too little, without seeming to question or ignore the power of diplomacy and the press. Often of late it must have been borne in upon many that it was desirable to obtain accurate information as to some of the questions with which this Congress is concerned—information not only accurate, but universally accepted as such; co-operation by inquirers whose competence or disinterestedness could not be questioned. Perhaps some day such investigators, forming a staff of trustworthy experts, will be available to throw light upon questions as to which official and non-official accounts differ.

To sum up these suggestions:—Closely connected with, if not a part of, International Law is a group of duties on the part of dominant races to those under their control or influence. These duties, now imperfectly recognised, may be made clearer; they may be enlarged; the observance of them may be made stricter by wise co-operation. Prizing and preserving diversity of race, we may attain to something like unity in spirit and policy.

Review.

A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF PARTNERSHIP. By the Right Honourable Lord Lindley. Eighth Edition. By the Honourable Walter B. Lindley, T. J. C. Tomlin, M. A., B. C. L., (Oxon) and A. Andrews Uthwatt, B. C. L., (Oxon), with an Appendix of the Law of Scotland. By J. Campbell Lorimer, LL. B., K. C. London: Sweet & Maxwell, Ltd., 3, Chancery Lane, W. C. 1912. 42s.

This standard work on the Law of Partnership has been brought up-to-date by the present editors. The Law of Partnership is one of the few branches of the law which has been codified in England, But the work had already passed through five editions before the Partnership Act was passed in 1890, and in the sixth edition the sections of the Act were incorporated with the text of the treatise which was for that purpose carefully revised but of which the general arrangement and characteristic features were otherwise preserved. Larger changes were made with the approval and assistance of the author in the following edition with a view to adapt the treatise more completely to the existing state of the law. The passing of the Limited Partnership Act in 1907 has necessitated further changes in the scheme of the treatise and these have been duly carried out by the editors in the present edition.

The work, as is well-known, is an exhaustive commentary, critical as well as explanatory, of the whole law of Partnership, leaving out of course the Law of Companies which forms the subject of a separate treatise. Clubs, sub-partnerships and even the general law relating to co-ownerships are dealt with in order more clearly to bring out the special characteristics of partnerships proper. Books I to IV deal with Partnership proper whilst Book V is devoted to Limited Partnerships, first created by the Statute of 1907, alluded to above, and which removes to some extent the inherent defects of the English law conception of partnerships. But the English Law of Partnership, in spite of the changes introduced by Legislature is still in a far from satisfactory condition. The difficulty attending Parliamentary legislation stands in the way of any systematic and radical amendment of that law. The dead weight of the Common law notion that a firm has no existence of its own apart from that of the individuals composing it, stereotyped in a long series of judicial decisions, cannot be removed except by legislative action which has yet to be taken. In India the same notions have been imported and embodied in the chapter of the Indian Contract Act which deals with partnerships. The Indian Legislature is perhaps in a better position to make alterations in the existing law of partnership for India than the English Parliament, but the demand for such changes is not even yet sufficiently insistent, having regard to the backward condition of trade and commerce in this country and India will perhaps have to wait longer for the reform than even England. The Indian Legislature has however in contemplation extensive modifications of the Companies Act. The opportunity may well be utilized to give recognition, as has been done in England, to Limited Partnerships at any rate, and it is sincerely to be hoped that the opportunity will not be messed.

As regards the work itself, it hardly requires any detailed notice. It is a standard work in general use not merely in England but also in this country, and there can hardly be any doubt that a new edition like the present will find warm welcome amongst legal practitioners all over India.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD and IMAM, JJ. RAM DAS SHA KULWAR, Petitioner v. DHURKHELU SURAHU AND OTHERS, Opposite Party. 10th June 1912.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 528—Transfer by Sub-Divisional Magistrate—Withdrawal of case and retransfer by District Magistrate.

The Petitioner had, on 29th April 1912, preferred a complaint before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Barrackpore alleging that the accused had, on the 27th April 1912, formed members of an unlawful assembly and in pursuance of the common object thereof criminally intimidated the Petitioner by coming to his shop armed with lathis and threatened to beat him. The accused were summoned for trial under sec. 147, Penal Code, and the case made over to an Honorary Magistrate, Rai S. C. Bhattacharya Bahadur, for disposal. In the course of the trial the complainant moved the Sub-Divisional Magistrate for a transfer of the case from the file of the said Honorary Magistrate and, on the 13th May 1912, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate transferred the case to the file of Babu A. C. Mandal, Honorary Magistrate, who fixed the case for hearing on 21st May 1912. On the 28th May 1912, upon the application of the accused the District Magistrate withdrew the case from the file of Babu A. C. Mandal and made over the same to Rai S. C. Bhattacharya Bahadur for trial.

The Petitioner moved the High Court against this order urging on the authority of Raghunatha,

I. L. R. 26 Mad. 130, that the order of the District Magistrate was without jurisdiction.

It is doubtful whether the decision in the matter of Raghunatha, I. L. R. 26 Mad. 130, has any application to Bengal, where the conditions are totally different and the wording of the section is perfectly clear that the District Magistrate may withdraw any case from any Magistrate subordinate to him and may inquire into or try any case himself or refer it for enquiry or trial to any other such Magistrate competent to inquire into or try the same. It does not therefore appear that the District Magistrate acted without jurisdiction, and if he had we should certainly in the exercise of our powers of revision have directed that an order precisely similar to that passed by him should issue from this Court, for the grounds given for transfer by the Sub-Divisional Officer show a great weakness and want of judgment and are not grounds upon which any complainant ought to be allowed to obtain transfer.

The application is rejected.

Revenue Sale Law (Act XI of 1859), secs. 10, 11, 53—Separate account opened in favour of shareholder owning shares in specific portion of estate—Such shareholder if purchases at revenue sale free from incumbrance—Land Registration Act (VII of 1876, B. C.), sec. 70.

MOOKERJEE AND VINCENT, JJ., (BRETT, J., contra).—Persons in whose favour the Collector has opened a separate account, though they are neither sharers in the whole estate nor proprietors of specific lands comprised therein but are shareholders in some only of the many villages comprised in the entire estate, do not, by purchase of the estate at a sale for arrears of revenue, acquire it free from incumbrances.

The privilege given by sec. 53 of Act XI of 1859 to shareholders with whom separate accounts have been validly opened under sec. 10 or sec. 11 of the Act, has not been extended to shareholders in whose favour accounts have been opened under sec. 70 of the Land Registration Act, nor can such privilege be claimed by shareholders with whom separate accounts had been opened by the Collector before the passing of the Land Registration Act in contravention of secs. 10 and 11 of Act XI of 1859.

NANHU SHAHU v. RAM PRASAD (8) approved.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 30th of November 1908 against the decree of Babu Bankim Chandra Mitter, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, of Zillah Saran, dated the 10th of September 1908.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgments.

The Appeal was heard in the first instance before BRETT and VINCENT, JJ., who having differed in opinion, the case was referred for decision to MOOKERJEE, J.

The dissentient JUDGMENTS of BRETT and VINCENT, JJ., were as follows:—

BRETT, J.—The entire Mehal Raiputti bearing Touzi No. 3143 in the Saran Collectorate was sold for arrears of revenue by the Collector, proceeding under the provisions of sec. 14, Act XI of 1859, and was purchased in the name of Defendant No. 7, Babu Gopal Dass.

Fifteen separate accounts or khatas, besides one for the residuary share, had been opened many years ago by the Collector, and Defendant No. 2 being the malik of khata No. 1 executed 3 deeds of mortgage in favour of Babu Sheo Shankar Prasad Singh, Defendant No. 1, on the 9th December 1886, 13th December 1886, and 1st July 1893, respectively. Afterwards the share in respect of which khata No. 1 had been opened was sold for arrears of revenue due on that share, and purchased by Pardip Narain Singh, Defendant No. 6, subject to incumbrances. Defendant No. 1 afterwards brought a suit on the three mortgage bonds, No. 67 of 1897, against Defendants Nos. 2 to 6 and obtained a decree by consent for Rs. 17,281-10 0.

On the 25th March 1899, the share in respect of which khata No. 4 had been opened, and which belonged to Kalika Prosad Singh, was put up for sale for arrears of revenue due on that share. No bids being offered the Collector proceeded under sec. 14 of Act XI of 1859 and put up the entire estate, No. 3143, for sale, and it was purchased by Defendant No. 7 for Rs. 1,600.

Defendant No. 1 then took out execution of his mortgage-decree obtained against the proprietors of the share in respect of which khata No. 4 had been opened, praying for sale of that share in execution of his decree. Thereupon Defendant No. 7 brought a Suit No. 51 of 1904 to have it declared that his purchase of estate No. 3143 was free of all encumbrances, and asked for a temporary injunction restraining the Defendant No. 1 from selling the share. The injunction was granted on condition of Defendant No. 7 depositing Rs. 1,454-8, being the amount of interest due on Defendant No. 1's mortgage up to 1st August 1906. In that suit Defendant No. 1 pleaded that it was incompetent as Defendant No. 7 was merely a benamidar of the two Plaintiffs. The plea was allowed and the suit was dismissed. Defendant No. 1 then drew out the Rs. 1,458-8 from deposit.

On the 2nd March 1907, Defendant No. 7 executed a deed of conveyance of the entire estate No. 3143 in favour of the Plaintiffs for Rs. 12,000, the deed to be treated either as a deed of sale or a deed of release.

Defendant No. 1 again took out execution of his mortgage-decree and the share in respect of which khata No. 4 had been opened was advertised for sale on the 5th August 1907.

Plaintiffs instituted the present suit, on the 30th July 1907, for a declaration that Defendant No. 1 is not entitled to sell the share in respect of which khata No. 4 had been opened on the ground that Plaintiffs had purchased the entire estate free of all encumbrances. They also claimed as assignees of Defendant No. 7 to be entitled to recover from Defendant No. 1 the sum of Rs. 1,451-8-0 deposited by Defendant No. 7 to cover interest on the mortgage-debt of Defendant No. 1.

The Plaintiffs' case as set out in their plaint was that as the entire estate had been sold for arrears of Government Revenue and purchased by Defendant No. 7, a stranger, and subsequently purchased from him by the Plaintiffs, the Plaintiffs acquired the estate free from all encumbrances. In the suit brought by Defendant No. 7, No. 51 of 1904, to which reference has already been made it was held that Defendant No. 7 was merely a benamidar for the Plaintiffs, but at the same time the opinion was expressed in the judgment that, as the Plaintiffs were sharers in respect of whom a separate account had been opened by the Collector under the provision of secs. 10 and 11 of Act XI of 1859, they came within the exception stated in sec. 53 of the same Act, and they purchased the estate free of all encumbrances.

This latter ground, though not expressly stated in the plaint, was the one on which the Plaintiffs relied in support of their suit in the lower Court.

Numerous issues were framed in the lower Court but those which are of importance for the purposes of this appeal are Nos. 5, 10, 11 and 6.

Issue No. 5 is as follows:—Are the Plaintiffs purchasers of the estate free from encumbrances?

Issue No. 10 runs as follows:—Were the Plaintiffs such sharers in Mehal Rai-

putti, Touzi No. 3143, before the Revenue sale, dated the 6th June 1890, as to come within the exception mentioned in sec. 53 of Act XI of 1859?

Issue No. 11 is as follows :—Was there any separate account validly and legally opened under secs. 10 and 11 of Act XI of 1859 on behalf of the Plaintiffs? If not whether the Defendant No. 1 is competent to question the validity and legality of the operation of the account effected before the Revenue sale?

Issue No. 6 is as follows :—Are Plaintiffs as assignees of Defendant No. 7 entitled to get a refund of Rs. 1,454-8-0 deposited by Defendant No. 7 in Court and withdrawn by Defendant No. 1?

The Subordinate Judge decided all these issues against the Plaintiffs.

The Plaintiffs claim to be sharers in the share in the estate in respect of which khata No. 5 had been opened by the Collector. In fact that separate account was opened on the 16th April 1872 by an order of the Collector of Saran. The original petition for the opening of a separate account was made by Ram Anugrah Singh, Rama Kanta Singh and Mussamat Sarawan Koer (apparently the widow of a deceased brother of the two first-mentioned persons). The Mehal Rai-putti, Estate No. 3143, consists of 17 mouzahs and the petition stated that Ram Anugrah and Rama Kanta were proprietors of certain shares in 15 of these and that Mussamat Sarawan Koer was the proprietor of the same share in the remaining two mouzahs. An objection seems to have been raised in the office of the Collector to the three persons joining in one petition, and accordingly an amended petition was filed, as ordered by the Collector, excluding Mussamat Sarawan Koer and on this amended petition the order was passed on the 16th April 1872 directing that the separate account be opened.

Subsequently a portion of the shares of the heirs of Ram Anugrah Singh and of Rama Kanta Singh were sold by auction in satisfaction of decrees obtained against them by the Plaintiffs, and sale certificates were obtained by them on the 13th of June 1896. The Plaintiffs appear to have been registered afterwards in the Collectorate. So far as the materials on the record go, the Plaintiffs appeared to have purchased only a portion of the shares which descended to the heirs of Ram Anugrah and Rama Kanta. That point is not clearly dealt with in the lower Court. All that the Subordinate Judge says in his judgment is that "the Plaintiffs are fractional sharers in 8 or 9 mouzahs out of the 15 or 16 included in khata No. 5." No arguments appear to have been raised on the point that the Plaintiffs were not purchasers of the entire shares of Ram Anugrah and Rama Kanta, the sharers in whose favour the separate account No. 5 was originally opened.

The learned Judge held that because Ram Anugrah and Rama Kanta Singh were persons who owned shares only in 15 or 16 mouzahs out of the 17 or 18 comprised in the mehal, and as such were neither sharers in all the mouzahs making up the mehal, nor the sole owners of the 15 or 16 mouzahs, nor even the sole owners of the 15 or 16 mouzas which go to make up with the shares of the other mouzahs the entire mehal, Touzi No. 3143, therefore they were not sharers who under secs. 10 and 11 of Act XI of 1859 could apply to the Collector to have a separate account opened in their favour. In consequence the Collector had no jurisdiction to open a separate account under secs. 10 and 11 of Act XI of 1859 with them. In support of this finding^a he relied on the decision of this Court in the case of Nanhu Shahu v. Ram Prosad (8). And arriving at these conclusions the Subordinate Judge held that the Plaintiffs not being sharers in whose favour a separate account had been legally opened by the Collector they were not entitled to claim the benefit of the exception in sec. 53 of Act XI of 1859, and that therefore their purchase of the entire estate was not free from encumbrances.

Further he held that even if the separate account opened by the Collector in favour of Ram Anugrah Singh and Rama Kanta Singh could be held to be one opened under sec. 70 of Act VII, B. C., of 1876, the Land Registration Act, they could not claim the benefit of sec. 53 of Act XI of 1859 as that section only included sharers in respect of whom separate share had been entered under secs. 10 and 11 of Act XI of 1859.

Accordingly he held that the Plaintiffs were not entitled to the declaration sought for in the suit, nor to recover from Defendant No. 1 the sum of Rs. 1,454-8 deposited by Defendant No. 7.

The suit was dismissed with costs and Plaintiffs have appealed.

It appears that separate account or khata No. 1 was originally opened on the 6th January 1872 in the name of Kishendeo Singh, who is represented in the present case by Defendants Nos. 2 to 5. This is the share against which Defendant No. 1 has obtained the mortgage-decree.

Separate account or khata No. 4 was opened on the 21st March 1872 in the name of Kalika Prosad Singh. This is the share which defaulted.

Separate account or khata No. 5 was opened on the 16th April 1872 in the names of Ram Anugrah and Rama Kanta Singh. This is the share in which the Plaintiffs claim rights by purchase.

Now rightly or wrongly these separate accounts had been opened for 35 years before the present suit was brought. Revenue had been all along paid in respect of these shares into the separate accounts and it would appear that the shares in respect of which these separate accounts had been opened, had been put up for sale, each separately, in respect of arrears due on its separate account. The proprietors of these shares in respect of which the separate accounts had been opened had dealt with them separately, and there have been transfers and alienations of the shares as shares in respect of which separate accounts have been opened.

It is first argued in support of this appeal that the Subordinate Judge was in error in holding that the order of the Collector opening the separate account No. 5 in respect of the share on which the Plaintiffs are part purchasers could be questioned after the lapse of 35 years. No authority other than the Collector had power under the law to open a separate account and the law gave him full power to open an account. If in ordering that an account be opened he committed an error in law that could not make his order bad for want of jurisdiction. In the case of khata No. 5 the record shows that the provisions of the law were fully complied with before the order was passed directing that the account be opened. The necessary notices were served and no objection was taken by any one who would at the time have been interested in opposing the application. Nor was any appeal preferred against his decision to the higher revenue authorities, as might have been done. His order therefore became final.

SYED MAHAMAD MEHDI HUSAIN KHAN v. SHEO SHANKAR PERSAD SINGH.

Furthermore if the order opening this separate account be now interfered with the orders relating to all the other accounts would be equally open to question with the result of disturbing rights long recognized and of creating uncertainty, confusion and hardship.

Undoubtedly the separate account has been opened and has been in existence for 35 years. It is impossible now to treat it as though it had never had any existence. Indeed the Defendant No. 1's own decree is based on the existence of the separate account No. 1, against the share covered by which he is seeking to enforce his mortgage-decree. That share was in fact sold for its own arrears after the decree had been obtained by Defendant No. 1.

Also it is argued that Defendant No. 1 being the transferee by mortgage of the rights of some co-sharers in the estate, it is not open to him now to question the legality of an order of the Collector which his transferors accepted and have acquiesced in for 35 years. There was a remedy in the superior Revenue Courts when the Collector's order was passed and that remedy never having been sought and on the contrary the order having been acquiesced in for 35 years it cannot now be questioned and declared invalid by a Civil Court.

It is also contended that even accepting, though not admitting, that the separate account could not have been opened under the provisions of secs. 10 and 11 of Act XI of 1859 still any defect would be covered by sec. 70 of Act VII, B. C., of 1876, and sec. 71 of that Act which makes the provisions relating to sale included in secs. 13 and 14 of Act XI of 1859 applicable to accounts opened under sec. 70 of Act VII, B. C., of 1859, would also operate to bring the sharers in respect of whom the separate share had been opened within the exception provided by sec. 53 of Act XI of 1859.

It has also been suggested that Defendant No. 1 is bound by the finding of the Court in the Suit No. 51 of 1904 to which he was a party.

As to this last contention we have only to observe that it has no weight. The suit was dismissed for other grounds and the opinion expressed by the Judge was not necessary for the decision of that suit and so cannot bind the Defendant.

The most important question is certainly whether after the lapse of 35 years a Civil Court can call into question the order of a Revenue Court, which order was originally passed with all the formalities required by the law, which was not appealed against and so became final as regards the parties affected by it, and which has been acquiesced in by the persons through whom the Defendants, who now desire to dispute the order, claim title. In consequence of that order of the Collector and of other similar orders for the opening of separate accounts in respect of other shares in the same estate rights have been lost, sold, or transferred, and to disturb the order after the lapse of so many years would be to render uncertain titles long existing and to create confusion and hardship.

In my opinion the Collector certainly had jurisdiction to open the separate account. If at the time of opening the account he misunderstood the provisions of the law, that would not necessarily make his order void but voidable by the persons affected thereby. In the present instance none of the persons who were affected by the order have ever raised any objection to it, and the question is whether the Defendant No. 1 as mortgatee of Defendant No. 2 whose share, in respect of which khata No. 1 was originally opened, has subsequently been sold, can be allowed to raise the objection in this suit.

In my opinion the order of the Collector, acquiesced in and acted on for 35 years, is not now open to question in a Civil Court, and, if it were, the Defendant No. 1 who derives his title through Defendant No. 2 who acquiesced in the order all along, cannot be allowed in this suit to dispute the legality of the order.

The contention that the order is illegal depends entirely on the decision of this Court in the case of Nanhu Shahu v. Ram Prosad (8). That decision was delivered on the 15th December 1873. The judgment states that Plaintiff comes into Court upon a statutable cause of action and that his suit must be dismissed unless he brings himself either within sec. 10 or sec. 11 of Act XI of 1859. Exactly what the cause of action was is not stated. Apparently he sued to have it declared that he had a right to have a separate account opened in respect of his share in the estate. As however he was only an 8 annas shareholder in 4 mouzahs out of the 6 which constituted the whole estate it was held that he was not "a recorded sharer of a joint estate in common tenancy with him sec. 10." It was further held that he could not come under sec. 11 because he was not a recorded sharer of a joint estate whose share consists of a specific portion of the land of the estate because he had only an undivided moiety of 4 mouzahs out of 6. If he had been joined with his co-sharers in the 4 mouzahs he might possibly have come before the Court with them as a party entitled to sue under sec. 11.

(8) 21 W. R. 38 (1869).

In the present case the original petition for opening a separate account was made by Ram Anugrah Singh, Rama Kant Singh, and Musst. Sarawan, who together, apparently as members of one family, held shares in all the mouzahs included in the estate. The name of Musst. Sarawan was withdrawn by order of the Collector on a report from an officer of his Court. In the judgment relied on, it is not stated what would be the effect if in a case like the present the Defendants had shares in 15 out of 17 mouzahs and joined in their application those co-sharers who had shares in the other two mouzahs. Apparently the application would then have fulfilled the requirements of sec. 10 of Act XI of 1859. There is nothing to support the view that shares in a joint estate held in common tenancy must have equal shares in all the mouzahs. Unequal shares in the different mouzahs might be consistent too with definite shares held in common in the whole estate.

There is no provision of the law, that I am aware of, which lays down that the shares of tenants in common must be equal, either in every one of several mouzahs making up the estate, or in the entire estate.

In these circumstances it seems open to doubt whether, on the basis of the decision relied on, the original application for the opening of the separate account did not fulfill the requirements of the law.

I am unable to agree therefore in the view taken by the lower Court that the suit of the Plaintiffs must fail because they could not be regarded as sharers with whom the Collector under secs. 10 and 11 of Act XI of 1859 had opened separate estates.

SYED MAHAMAD MEHDI HUSAIN KHAN v. SHEO SHANKAR PERSAD SINGH.

The question arises whether they are entitled to claim to come within the exception provided by sec. 53 by reason of the fact that they are only fractional shareholders of the share in respect of which the separate account was opened. There is nothing in the section to restrict the operation of the section to sharers holding the entire interest in the share and in these circumstances I see no reason to hold that they do not come within the exception.

The result of these findings is that I hold that the Plaintiffs are entitled to the relief claimed in this suit, that is to say, to have it declared that they purchased the estate No. 3140 free of all encumbrances. In these circumstances I hold that they as assignees of Defendant No. 7 are also entitled to recover from Defendant No. 1 the sum of Rs. 1,454-8 which had been deposited by Defendant No. 7 in order to obtain the injunction in this suit, with interest at 6 per cent. per annum on that account up to the date of realization.

I would accordingly set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Court and grant the Plaintiffs a decree to the above effect. Plaintiffs are entitled to costs from Defendant No. 1 in both the Courts.

As, however, my learned brother holds a different opinion, the appeal must be referred to the Hon'ble the Chief Justice under the provisions of sec. 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure in order that it may be referred to a Third Judge for hearing.

VINCENT, J.—The facts of the case which has given rise to this appeal are as follows:—Mehal Raiputti is an estate borne on the Revenue Roll of the District of Saran with a revenue of Rs. 7,236 odd. In the year 1899 fifteen separate accounts had been opened by different sharers in that estate under the provisions of secs. 10, 11, Act XI of 1859 and sec. 70 of Act VII, B. C., of 1876. One of these shares, viz., that covered by separate account No. 5 was owned by the Plaintiffs. In January 1899 separate account No. 4 fell into arrears and was put up for sale on 25th March. The highest bid for the share was not sufficient to cover the arrears and therefore the Collector ordered that the sale of the share should be stayed and the whole mehal put up to sale under sec. 14 of the Revenue Sales Act.

On 6th June 1899 the whole estate was sold and bought for Rs. 16,200 in the name of the Defendant No. 7.

The Defendant No. 1 had a mortgage-decree for Rs. 17,281 against 13 villages included in the mehal and in 1899 he advertised the mortgaged property for sale in execution of that decree.

The Defendant No. 7 then sued for a declaration that his purchase at the revenue sale was free of incumbrances and that the property could not be sold in execution of a mortgage-decree and on a deposit of Rs. 1,454 as security against any loss, the Defendant No. 7 on the 14th March 1906 secured from the High Court a temporary injunction staying the sale. That suit was dismissed as it was found that the Defendant No. 7, Gopal Das, was a pharzidar for the Plaintiffs, whereupon the mortgagee, Defendant in that suit, withdrew the Rs. 1,454 in deposit. On 2nd March 1907 the Defendant No. 7 executed a conveyance of all his rights in the mehal and the Rs. 1,454 to the Plaintiffs; and the Plaintiffs now sue for a declaration that the Defendant No. 1 has no right to sell the estate in execution of his mortgage-decree and that the purchase at the revenue sale was free of all

SYED MAHAMAD MEHDI HUSAIN KHAN v. SHEO SHANKAR PERSAD SINGH.

Incumbrances. The Plaintiffs further seek to recover from the Defendant No. 1 Rs. 1,454-8 plus interest on that sum alleging that the Defendant No. 1 wrongly withdrew that amount from deposit in satisfaction of his decree.

The real contending Defendant is Defendant No. 1. In the Court of first instance he raised a number of objections to the suit, which it is not necessary to set forth at length in this judgment, as only one point has been discussed in the argument before us.

It suffices to say that on the 10th September 1908, the Plaintiffs' suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that these Plaintiffs, who were the real purchasers at the revenue sale, had bought the property subject to incumbrances.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the Plaintiffs were co-sharers in the mehal and was therefore of opinion that their purchase was under sec. 53 of Act XI of 1859 subject to incumbrances unless it is shown that they were sharers with whom the Collector had opened separate accounts under secs. 10 and 11 of the Act. He further found that although there was a separate account opened in the name of the predecessors in interest of Plaintiffs in 1872 by the Collector for their share in this mehal, nominally under sec. 10 of Act XI of 1859, yet that account was opened without jurisdiction and that it could not therefore be said that the Plaintiffs were persons with whom separate accounts had been opened under that section.

In this view of the facts the Plaintiffs' suit was dismissed and hence this appeal has been filed.

The only point argued in the appeal is whether the purchase by the Plaintiffs through Defendant No. 7 was a purchase free of incumbrances under sec. 53 of Act XI of 1859.

Now the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is based on the wording of sec. 10 of Act XI of 1859. That section enacts that a recorded sharer of a joint estate, held in common tenancy, if he desires to pay in his share of the revenue of the estate separately may submit an application to the Collector to that effect : and the Collector may after notifying the facts in a particular manner after a period of six weeks if no objections are made, open a separate account as desired. If any objection of any kind is raised by any other co-sharer the Collector must at once refuse to take further action and refer the matter to the Civil Court under sec. 12.

Under sec. 53 of the same Act if a co-sharer in an estate purchases the estate at a revenue sale, he acquires it subject to encumbrances except in the case of sharers with whom the Collector has opened separate accounts under secs. 10 and 11 of the Act.

The Subordinate Judge finds that the predecessors-in-interest of the Plaintiffs were not in fact sharers in a joint estate held in common tenancy, because they owned shares in 14 or 15 mouzahs only out of the various villages, 18 in number, comprising the estate and were not interested in every village in the estate. The Subordinate Judge is of opinion in these circumstances that the Collector had no jurisdiction to open a separate account with the predecessor-in-interest of the Plaintiffs under sec. 10, Act XI of 1859 and that the Plaintiffs cannot be accepted as co-sharers with whom the Collector had opened separate accounts under that section there be no jurisdiction under that section and that therefore

On appeal it is argued that the expression "estate held in common tenancy" has been misunderstood by the learned Subordinate Judge, that in any case the Collector had jurisdiction to open a separate account under sec. 10 and has done so and that the order cannot be said to have been made without jurisdiction and further that, as all the sharers in the estate including the persons from whom the Defendant derives title made no objection at the time and as the separate account was opened and accepted for 27 years before the sale, the validity of the order cannot now be questioned. It is further urged that in any case the separate account could have been opened under sec. 70, Act VII, B. C., of 1876, and that it should be held to have been opened under that section if necessary and that the effect then would be the same as if it had been opened under sec. 10 of Act XI of 1859.

None of these arguments appears to me to be of very great weight. S. c. 53 of Act XI of 1859 lays down that if a sharer in an estate purchases the estate at a revenue sale, he does so subject to all encumbrances existing at the time of the sale unless the purchasing co-sharer or sharers are persons with whom the Collector has opened separate accounts under secs. 10 and 11 of the Act. Sec. 10 of the Act empowers a Collector to open separate accounts in joint estates held in common tenancy, on the application of a recorded co-sharer. If there is no joint estate held in common tenancy then, in my view of the law, sec. 10 has no application and the Collector has no jurisdiction to open a separate account under that section and if he does open a separate account without jurisdiction then it cannot be said that the separate account is one opened under sec. 10 of the Act. Before that section can apply at all it is necessary that the estate should be one held in common tenancy and if the estate is not so held the section has no application. Now Mehal Raiputti is not an estate of that description. The expression "estate held in common tenancy" is defined in sec. 30 of Reg. XIX of 1814 as meaning an estate where all the sharers have a common right and interest in the whole of the estate. Where, therefore, various co-sharers have certain interests not in the whole estate but only in particular villages in that estate it cannot be said that the estate is held in common tenancy; this view has also been accepted in this Court in the case of Nanhu Shahu v. Ram Prosad Narain Shingh (8). Mr. Justice Phear in that case says that the Plaintiff confessedly cannot bring himself under sec. 10 of Act XI because by his own representation he is only an 8 annas shareholder in 4 mouzahs out of the six which constitute the whole estate and he is therefore not "a recorded sharer of a joint estate held in common tenancy" within the meaning of sec. 10. The same view has been accepted by the revenue authorities in the Board Mis. Proceeding No. 306, dated 21st September 1876, quoted at page 19 of the Revenue Sale Manual, where Hon'ble Members of the Board of Revenue take the definition of an estate of this character as given in Reg. XIX as applicable to sec. 10 of Act XI of 1859 and state that a separate account cannot be opened under sec. 10 unless there is an estate held in common tenancy as set forth in sec. 30 of Reg. XIX of 1814.

Finally, in 1876 the Legislature recognised the difficulties that existed in regard to separate accounts in estates like the present one and sec. 70 of that Act was enacted apparently to specifically provide for the opening of separate accounts in the case of proprietors who were recorded as owning an undivided interest held in common tenancy in any specific portion of the lands of an estate but not extending over the whole estate. If there previously had been any right to open separate accounts in such cases there would have been no need for this change in the law.

In these circumstances I hold that the separate account in this estate was improperly opened under sec. 10, Act XI of 1859 in 1872 and that the Collector had no jurisdiction under that Act to open any such separate account in this estate and it cannot be said in my opinion that any separate account opened by him was a separate account opened under the provisions of sec. 10 of Act XI of 1859 and the owner of any separate account opened without jurisdiction is not in my opinion entitled to claim the benefit of sec. 53 of Act XI of 1859 which merely relates to the case of co-sharers with whom separate accounts have been opened under secs. 10 and 11.

It is true that a separate account No. 5 was opened 27 years before the sale and that the validity of the order of the Collector was not questioned but this does not in my view of the law affect the case or give validity to an order which was made without jurisdiction. Nor can the Defendants in the suit be prejudiced by any such act of the Collector.

It is then urged that as the account remained open after Act VII of 1876 was passed, it should be held to be a separate account under that section. I do not think however that this contention has any force. The separate account No. 5 was not opened under sec. 70, Act VII, B. C., of 1876 and does not purport to have been opened under that section and further no notices were issued under that section to the sharers interested in the estate after the Act of 1876 was passed. Moreover the privileges given under sec. 53, Act XI of 1859, to the owner of separate account opened under secs. 10 and 11 of that Act are not apparently extended to those who have opened separate accounts under sec. 70 of Act VII of 1876. Sec. 71 of the Act extends the provisions of secs. 13 and 14 of Act XI to separate accounts opened under Act VII of 1876 but it is at least open to doubt how far this section makes sec. 53 of Act XI apply to those who have opened separate accounts under the Land Registration Act.

In this view of the facts and the law the Plaintiffs in this suit who are co-sharers in the estate of Raiputti and bought the estate at a revenue sale not being co-sharers who have opened a separate account under sec. 10 or 11 of Act XI of 1859, purchased the estate subject to any encumbrance that there was on it and they therefore bought the share mortgaged to the Defendant subject to the lien created by that mortgage and are not entitled to any relief in this case. In my opinion therefore the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

It is true that the Defendant No. 7 had no right to withdraw the deposit of Rs. 1,454 before the sale of the mortgaged property was complete and it was found that the sale proceeds were not sufficient to liquidate his claim but this amount would be in any case payable out of the mortgaged property and the amount will no doubt be deducted from the mortgage dues when the decree is executed,

SYED MAHAMAD MEHDI HUSAIN KEAN v. SHEO SHANKAR PERSAD SINGH.

It seems therefore that it is unnecessary and would be improper for the Court to order a refund of the amount in the present suit.

HIS LORDSHIP'S JUDGMENT was as follows :—

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is a reference under sec. 98, sub-sec. (2) of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908. The reference is not strictly in form, because the learned Judges have omitted to state specifically the point of law upon which they differed. The difference between sec. 575 of the Code of 1882 and sec. 98 of the Code of 1908 appears to have been overlooked. Under the former Code, it was the appeal that was referred to a Third Judge when the Judges hearing the appeal differed in opinion on a point of law, and on such reference the whole appeal was open for argument and not merely the point of law on which the Judges had differed in opinion. Under the Code of 1908, the proper procedure is to state the point of law upon which the Judges differ; the appeal is then to be heard upon that point only and what is to be decided is not the appeal but the point of law only. In the case before me, this procedure has not been followed, but the parties are agreed that there is only one point of law involved in the appeal, upon which the learned Judges who heard the appeal in the first instance have differed as is manifest from their recorded opinions. That point may be formulated as follows :—

Is a proprietor who is not a recorded sharer of a joint estate held in joint tenancy within the meaning of sec. 10 of Act XI of 1859, nor a recorded sharer whose share consists of a specific portion of the land of the estate within the meaning of sec. 11, but is recorded as proprietor of an undivided interest held in common tenancy of a specific portion of the lands of the estate but not extending over the whole estate within the meaning of sec. 70 of the Bengal Land Registration Act, 1876, entitled to claim the benefit of the exception made in sec. 53 of Act XI of 1859, in favour of sharers with whom the Collector has under sec. 10 or sec. 11 of the Act, opened separate accounts.

My learned brother Brett is of opinion that this question ought to be answered in the affirmative. My learned brother Vincent on the other hand is of opinion that the question ought to be answered in the negative. To determine which of these two conflicting views should prevail, the provisions of the Revenue Sale Law (Act XI of 1859) and of the Land Registration (Act VII of 1876, B. C.) must be examined.

It is necessary to premise at the outset that one of the proprietors of a joint estate may be in enjoyment of his interest therein in one of three ways, namely, first, he may be a recorded sharer of the whole joint estate held in common tenancy, secondly, he may be a recorded sharer of the joint estate and his share may consist of a specific portion of the land of the estate, or, thirdly, he may be recorded as proprietor of an undivided interest held in common tenancy in a specific portion of the land of the estate but not extending over the whole estate. If his interest is of the first description, he may apply to have his share separated and a separate account opened under sec. 10 of Act XI of 1859. If his interest is of the second description, he may have his share separated and a separate account opened under sec. 11 of Act XI of 1859. If his interest is of the third description, he may have his share separated and a separate account opened under sec. 70 of the Land Registration Act. In this connection, it is important to bear in mind that under sec. 71 of the Land Registration Act, sec. 12 of Act XI of 1859 is made applicable to an application under sec. 70, and it is further provided that the effect and consequences of opening a separate account under sec. 70 shall be such and the same as are described in secs. 13 and 14 of Act XI of 1859. It is manifest therefore that the consequence of the opening of a separate account in cases covered by sec. 70 (that is, where the applicant is proprietor of an undivided interest held in common tenancy in a specific portion of the land of the estate but not extending over the whole estate) are assimilated to the consequences of opening a separate account under sec. 10 or sec. 11 of Act XI of 1859, only in so far as secs. 13 and 14 are concerned, that is, only in respect of the sale of the separated share and of the entire estate under certain specified conditions. Now, when we turn to sec. 53 of Act XI of 1859, we find that it defines the right of a purchaser at a revenue sale who is a recorded or unrecorded proprietor or co-partner. Such person whether he purchases the property at a revenue sale or acquires it by re-purchase from the purchaser, acquires the estate, to put the matter briefly, subject to all its encumbrances existing at the time of the sale. An exception however is made in favour of sharers with whom the Collector has opened separate accounts under secs. 10 and 11 of the Statute; they stand in a position of advantage which is denied to the purchaser co-partner who has not opened a separate account under either of these sections. I am not concerned with the policy of the Legislature in this respect, but it is remarkable that the privilege is not extended to persons who have opened separate accounts under sec. 70 of the Land Registration Act. Sec. 71, as I have just observed, makes secs. 13 and 14 but not sec. 53 of Act XI of 1859 applicable to the proprietor who has obtained a separate account opened under sec. 70. The inference is irresistible that the co-partner whose interest is of the description mentioned in sec. 70 and whose separate account has been opened under that section can purchase the estate at a revenue sale, only as subject to encumbrances. The question then arises, does it make any real difference if a separate account which could not be opened under sec. 10 or sec. 11 of Act XI of 1839, because the interest of the proprietor was not of either of the two descriptions mentioned in these sections, has been opened by the Collector without any jurisdiction. In my opinion it makes no difference whatsoever. The position of the proprietor who has obtained a separate account so opened in contravention of sec. 10 or sec. 11 is not identical for purposes of sec. 53 with the position of the proprietor whose separate account has been properly opened. The expression "sharers with whom the Collector has opened separate account under secs. 10 and 11" plainly means "sharers with whom the Collector has opened separate accounts acting in conformity with secs. 10 and 11." To accept any other interpretation would be to acquiesce in a fraud on the Statute. The Collector when he opens a separate account under sec. 10 or 11 performs a statutory duty; his act must be in strict conformity with the legislative provisions on the subject. If the Collector opens a separate account in clear contravention of the provisions of sec. 10 and sec. 11, in fact, if the Collector applies the provisions to cases to which the Legislature never intended that they should be applied, his act is without jurisdiction and cannot confer upon the person who obtains a separate account opened under such circumstances the statutory privilege created by sec. 53. If any authority is needed in support of the proposition that where jurisdiction is usurped in contravention of statutory provisions the act performed is a nullity, reference may be made to the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Ledgard v. Bull (1), Minakshi v. Subramania (2), Fischer v. Secretary of State (3), and of this Court in Achha Mian v. Durga Charan (4), Golab Sao v. Choudhury Madho Lal (5), Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrikah Singh (6) and Ananda Kishore v. Daijie Thakurain (7). In my opinion, the view adopted by Mr. Justice Vincent is correct, and I entirely agree in his conclusion that the question of law formulated above must be answered in the negative. This view is in accordance with that taken in the case of Nanhu Shahu

v. Ram Prosad (8), which so far as I have been able to discover has never been doubted in this Court. I observe that with reference to this decision, my learned brother Brett remarks that the judgment does not state what the cause of action was. I have accordingly examined the records of that case. It appears that an estate Chilowley consisted of six villages. The Plaintiffs were interested in an one half-share of four only of the six villages. They applied to the Collector to open a separate account for the half share of the four villages. Upon objection of the Defendants co-proprietors, the application was refused by the Collector on the 17th April 1871. On the 15th May following, the Plaintiffs sued for declaration of title and for separation of the Government Revenue of their share of the four villages. The first Court held that the suit was maintainable under sec. 12 of Act XI of 1859 and made a decree in favour of the Plaintiffs, though the revenue assigned was calculated on a basis other than that suggested by the Plaintiffs. Upon appeal by the Plaintiffs, the decree of the Subordinate Judge was affirmed by the District Judge. Upon second appeal to this Court by the Plaintiffs (which related to the amount of revenue assignable in respect of the half share of the four villages), it appears to have been argued by the Defendants-Respondents (by way of cross-objection, though a Memorandum of Cross-objection is not to be traced in the part of the record still in existence), that the suit was not maintainable under sec. 12 of Act XI of 1851, as the Plaintiffs were not entitled to have a separate account opened under either sec. 10 or sec. 11. contention and dismissed the suit. The learned Judges held that as the Plaintiffs were shareholders in some only of the villages constituting the estate, they could not claim to have a separate account opened under either sec. 10 or sec. 11. It is superfluous to add that upon a plain reading of the sections no other conclusion was possible.

Let me now consider the effect of this view of the law upon the present question. The records of the Collector, which have been called for, upon the joint application of both the parties, shew conclusively that not merely the fifth separate account, the proprietor of which purchased this estate at the revenue sale held on the 6th June 1899, but all the fifteen separate accounts had been opened during the years 1871-1874 in contravention of the provisions of secs. 10 and 11 of Act XI of 1859: the applicants were neither sharers in the whole estate nor proprietors of specific lands, but they were shareholders in some only of the many villages comprised in the entire estate, as is clearly shewn by the details of the shares and villages in respect of which the separate accounts were opened. This state of things has continued for many years, and has not been questioned by the various proprietors. The reason is obvious. When the Land Registration Act of 1876 came into force it became clear that what had been done before irregularly, because not falling within the scope of secs. 10 and 11 of 1859, might be validly done under sec. 70 of the Land Registration Act. It would have been idle, therefore, for the parties to challenge the validity of the separate accounts at any time after 1875. If objection had been taken by any of the proprietors, the then existing arrangement might have been validated by the presentation of applications under sec. 70 of the Land Registration Act. It is not right to say that the parties now attempt to invalidate what had been done at their instance during the years 1872-74, and no such question arises as was considered by this Court in Rai Mohan v. Sashanku Mohan (9), namely, the right of a proprietor to question the validity of a settlement of an estate irregularly made. If we look at the substance of the matter, the position of the parties is identical with what would have been their position if the separate accounts had been, as they could have been, opened under sec. 70 of the Land Registration Act. There is no controversy that if they be deemed to have been opened under sec. 70 of the Land Registration Act, the purchaser at the revenue sale is not entitled to claim the benefit of the exception in sec. 53 of Act XI of 1859. The conclusion follows that the view adopted by Mr. Justice Vincent in concurrence with the Court of first instance that the purchaser has acquired the property subject to encumbrances, is correct, and must be upheld.

It is satisfactory to find that this view of the law is manifestly in accord with the justice of the case. We have some indication of the value of the property, when we remember that the mortgagees advanced more than Rs. 13,000 on security of the share of the villages comprised in the first separate account which may be assumed to be worth at least that sum. The value of that share as shown by the proportion of the total Government Revenue assigned to it, is about one-sixth of the value of the entire estate. The whole estate, therefore, is worth at a very moderate estimate at least

Rs. 78,000. The purchaser has acquired it for Rs. 16,200 : the charge claimed by the mortgagee amounts approximately to Rs. 20,000 ; even if the purchaser has to pay this charge, as in concurrence with Mr. Justice Vincent, I hold that he is bound to do, he has made an excellent bargain. In fact, the very small price paid by the purchaser indicates plainly that he, at any rate, must have thought that he was acquiring the property subject to encumbrances.

The result, therefore, is that in concurrence with Mr. Justice Vincent I hold that the decree of the Subordinate Judge must be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs. The hearing-fee of the two hearings is assessed at Rs. 1,000.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM ORDER NO. 339 OF 1910.

D. CHATTERJEE, J.	MUNSAH ALI, Plain-
N. R. CHATTERJEE, J.	tiff, Appellant,
	v.
1912.	ARSADULLA and ors.,
Heard, 4 & 8, March.	Defendants, Res-
Judgment, 2, April.	pondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Chap. XIV, secs. 3, cl. (9), 161, 167—'Incumbrance,' title by adverse possession if—'Holding,' if includes under-raiyati—Under-raiyati, if may be sold under Chap. XIV, Bengal Tenancy Act—Sale of under-raiyati for arrears of rent, purchaser if can annul incumbrances.

Title acquired by adverse possession for the statutory period by a trespasser in the lands of a defaulting tenant is an incumbrance within the meaning of sec. 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

GOCOL BAGDI v. DEBENDRA NATH SEN
(1) followed.

(1) 14 C. L. J. 136 (1911).

An under-raiyat's interest cannot be sold for arrears of rent under Chap. XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act so as to attract to the sale the special consequences attached to such sales ; a purchaser of an under-raiyat's interest has therefore no right to annul incumbrances under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which applies only in cases of sales under Chap. XIV.

The word 'holding' except where it has been used in the Act expressly to include lands held by an under-raiyat has the meaning given to it in sec. 3, cl. (9) and does not include lands held by an under-raiyat. The word as used in Chap. XIV does not include such lands.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 14th of July 1910 against an order of W. S. Coutts, Esq., District Judge of Chittagong, dated the 29th of March 1910, reversing that of Babu Bissessur Majumdar, Munsif, Sadar, 1st Court, dated the 26th of June 1909.

The facts of the case were as follows :—

Somser Serang gave a dar-raiyati to Ramjan Ali, father of Defendants Nos. 3 and 4. In execution of a rent-decree against Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 the Plaintiff purchased the land. The Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were in possession of the land. The Plaintiff, though denying any right whatever in the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, had a notice served on them under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for annulling all incumbrances and subsequently brought this suit, praying inter alia for khas possession on a declaration of his right after annulling all incumbrances and further prayed that if "the Court finds any obstacle in awarding khas possession, or if it holds that the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have any protected interest a decree may be passed for the proper jama at the rate mentioned in the notice.

MUNSAH ALI v. ARSADULLA.

The Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who contested the sum, denied the Plaintiff's title as well as the dar-raiyati title of Defendants Nos. 3 and 4, alleged that the Plaintiff was a benamdar and claimed the land as their mourasi raiyati under the zemindar, they further pleaded general and special limitation.

The following issues were framed at the trial :—

First.—Is the Plaintiff a benamdar for Rahaman Ali ?

Second.—Have the Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 dar-raiyati interest in the land in suit ?

Third.—Is the suit barred by general and special law of limitation ?

Fourth.—Was the Plaintiff's alleged notice duly served ?

Fifth.—Has the Plaintiff any alleged title to the land in suit ?

Sixth.—Is the Plaintiff entitled to khas possession and mesne profits ?

Seventh.—What relief, if any, is the Plaintiff entitled to ?

The first Court found issues Nos. 1 and 4 in favour of the Plaintiff but held on issues Nos. 3 and 5 that Plaintiff's title was not proved and that his suit was barred by general limitation, the Defendants having been in adverse possession for more than twelve years.

On appeal the District Judge held in favour of the Plaintiff both on the question of title and of limitation. After referring to the title-deeds of the Plaintiff the learned District Judge recorded his findings as follows :—

"The grounds on which these have been considered to be forgeries appear to me to be most inadequate and in view of the fact that there was no necessity for their fabrication, I find that they are perfectly genuine.

"A curious point in the case of the Defendants is that they file no dakhilas to show that they paid rent or in what capacity they paid. Defendant No. 1 says the dakhilas have been burnt, but there is an admission that no rent has been paid by them to anyone for 10 years. No explanation of this is forthcoming. How or when they came on to the land is not clear and it is evident that they are trespassers.

"I find then that Plaintiff has his alleged title."

On the question of limitation the lower Appellate Court observed :—

"As to limitation the lower Court has, I think, taken a wrong view. Even if the Defendants had acquired a right by adverse possession the Plaintiff would not, I think, be barred, for "adverse possession" must be held to be an incumbrance which can be avoided by the auction-purchaser. There is no doubt about the matter in a case of a revenue sale, and the same principle must be held to apply in a case of this kind. I find then that there is no bar on account of limitation."

In this view the Court below set aside the decree of the first Court and remanded the case for decision on the other issues.

The Defendants preferred this appeal to the High Court.

Babu Dharendra Lal Kastagir for the Appellant.

Babu Girija Prosunno Roy Chowdhury for Moulvi Syed Shamsul Huda and Babu Rajendra Proshad for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Plaintiff-Respondent sued for khas possession of the lands in dispute which he had purchased at a sale held in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, MUNSAB ALI v. ARSADULLA.

The decree for rent was obtained by Ali Meah and o'hers (the heirs of one Shamser Ali), who are said to have a raiyati interest in the lands, against the Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 who it is alleged were under-raiyats under them. Plaintiff after his purchase served a notice under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for annulling the incumbrance of Defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

The Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 denied both the raiyati title of Ali Meah and others, and the under-raiyati title of Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 and set up their own raiyati right to the land.

The Court of first instance disbelieved the evidence on behalf of the Plaintiff and held that Ali Meah and others had no raiyati right and Defendant's Nos. 3 and 4 had no under-raiyati right and that their title, if any, had been extinguished by adverse possession for 12 years on the part of the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

On appeal the learned District Judge thought—he does not say in so many words—that the raiyati right of Ali Meah and others had been proved, believed the evidence adduced on behalf of the Plaintiff to show the under-raiyati title of Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 derived from Shamser Ali, and he must be taken to have found that Ali Meah and others had a raiyati title, and the Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 had an under-raiyati title. He also found that Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were trespassers and that adverse possession must be held to be an incumbrance which can be avoided by an auction-purchaser and in the result set aside the decree of the Munsif and remanded the case for decision on the remaining issues.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have appealed to this Court against the order of the District Judge and it has been contended on their behalf that adverse possession is not an incumbrance within the meaning of sec. 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. We agree however with the decision of Mookerjee and Carnduff, JJ., in the case of Gocool Bagdi v. Debendra Nath Sen (1), (where the question has been fully discussed) in holding that the word "incumbrance" as used in secs. 159 and 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act includes a statutory title acquired by a trespasser by adverse possession of the land of a defaulting tenant. But although adverse possession is an incumbrance within the meaning of sec. 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, a question arises as to whether land held by an under-raiyat can be sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent under the special procedure prescribed in Chapter XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act, so that the purchaser can annul incumbrances created by the under-raiyat.

The rights of an under-raiyat may be sold by the landlord under the Civil Procedure Code, but the question is whether such lands can be sold under the special procedure prescribed in the Bengal Tenancy Act with the consequences attached to sales held under that procedure. Sec. 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides that where a tenant is a permanent tenure-holder, a raiyat holding at fixed rates or an occupancy raiyat, he shall not be liable to ejectment for arrears of rent, but his tenure or holding shall be liable to sale in execution of a decree for the rent thereof and the rent shall be a first charge thereon. That section therefore does not provide for a sale of land held by an under-raiyat in execution of a decree for arrears of rent thereof.

• In the present case the Plaintiff wants to take possession on the ground that he has complied with the provisions of sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Sec. 167 however applies only when a sale takes place under Chapter XIV of the Act.

(1) 14 C. L. J. 136 (1911).

MUNSHI ALI v. ARSADULLA.

Now Chapter XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act makes provision only for the sale of a tenure or holding. Under sec. 3 (9) 'holding' means a parcel or parcels of land held by a raiyat. The Act makes a clear distinction between a raiyat and an under-raiyat and it would appear therefore that land held by an under-raiyat is not a 'holding' within the meaning of the Act. The word 'holding' however has been used with reference both to a raiyat and an under-raiyat in secs. 121 and 122 relating to distraint and also in sec. 113 in the amended Chap. X of the Act. In order to reconcile the use of the word 'holding' in secs. 113, 121 and 122 with the meaning assigned to it in sec. 3 (9) of the Act, and having regard to the provision contained in sec. 3 that unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context the word 'holding' is to have the meaning assigned to it in sub-sec. (9), we must hold that except where the Legislature has used the word 'holding' expressly with reference to lands held by an under-raiyat, that word must be taken to have in other sections of the Act, the meaning assigned to it in sec. 3 (9) and in that view the word 'holding' in Chap. XIV of the Act does not include lands held by an under-raiyat. That being so, the provisions of Chap. XIV of that Act do not apply to a sale of lands held by an under-raiyat.

There is no provision in Chap. XIV for the sale of lands held by an under-raiyat nor for annulment of incumbrances created by an under-raiyat. The reason probably is that an under-raiyat cannot only be ejected for non-payment of arrears of rent as provided in sec. 66, but can be ejected on the expiration of the term of a written lease, and at the pleasure of the landlord when holding otherwise than under a written lease, after service of a notice to quit. The incumbrance of the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 therefore cannot be annulled by the Plaintiff, and the claim for khas possession must be disallowed. The Plaintiff, however, prayed in the alternative that a decree for proper rent might be passed and the 7th issue raised the question 'what relief, if any, is Plaintiff entitled to.' We think that issue ought to be decided.

It is accordingly ordered that the case be sent back to the Court of first instance for disposal after deciding the issue indicated above. As the ground upon which our decision is based was not raised by the Appellants in any Court we direct that each party will bear his own costs up to this stage. Future costs to abide the result.

Hindu Law—Migration—Mitakshara or Mithila law, presumption as to applicability of—Widow's estate—Accumulations, rights of a Hindu widow to—Husband's property re-purchased out of income, if absolute property of widow—Unrealised rents, if absolute estate of the widow and assets liable for her personal debts.

by the Mithila law the presumption was that he took his personal law with him, and where he inherited property from his maternal grandfather who was governed by the Mithila law, this property equally with his paternal property would be governed by the Mitakshara law and not by Mithila law.

The true test to determine whether accumulations in the hands of a Hindu widow were her absolute property or an accretion to the husband's estate is the intention of the widow, i.e., whether she intended to treat them as part of her husband's estate or as temporary savings to be spent by her subsequently.

Where a howda which was part of the husband's estate had passed into the hands of a stranger and had been recovered by the widow out of the savings of the estate, the inference was that she intended to treat it as part of her husband's estate.

Unrealised rents in the hands of tenants cannot be treated as temporary savings by the widow on her own account but should be looked upon as an accretion to her husband's estate.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Appeal is directed against an order by which the Court of Appeal below in concurrence with the Court of first instance has allowed execution to proceed on the basis of a decree for money obtained by one Sahudra Koer, now Respondent before us, against Bhagabati Koer, on the 22nd December 1906. Bhagabati Koer was sued as the legal representative of her mother Bechu Koer and the decree directed that the judgment-debt be recovered from the assets of Bechu Koer in the hands of Bhagabati Koer. In execution of this decree, two properties have been attached, namely, first, a howdah or a seat on an elephant, and, secondly, rent due to Bechu Koer from the tenants of properties which she took by inheritance from her husband Gudar Sahai. Bhagabati Koer contends that these properties are not the assets of the estate of her mother in her hands and are not liable to be attached in execution of the decree. The Courts below have overruled this contention and allowed execution to proceed. The case has been tried on the assumption that the parties are governed by the Mitakshara Law, although they are residents of Mithila. It has been stated to us that Gudar Sahai had his ancestral home in the District of Gaya and when he succeeded by right of inheritance to the estate of his maternal grandfather in Mithila, he came to Mozufferpur and settled there. There can be no doubt that till the contrary is established, the presumption is that Gudar Sahai carried his personal law with him. [Parbati v. Jagadis (1), Ambabai v. Govind (2), Mulathi v. Subbaraya (3)]. It cannot be suggested that in respect of properties which he took by right of inheritance from his maternal grandfather, the Mithila Law is applicable, while in respect of his paternal properties the Mitakshara Law has operation. The view cannot be maintained that a person may simultaneously have two distinct and inconsistent personal laws, one governing his rights in respect of property taken by him from paternal ancestors and the other in respect of properties received by him from maternal ancestors. We must therefore decide this case on the assumption that the parties are governed by the Mitakshara Law.

On behalf of the Appellant, it has been contended that although it is established that the howdah was purchased by Bechu Koer from the income of the estate of her husband in her hands, and although the unrealised rent was the profit of the estate which she inherited from her husband, they are not assets in the hands of her daughter liable to be seized in execution at the instance of a creditor who holds a personal decree against her. In support of this proposition, reliance has been placed upon the cases of Isri Dutt v. Hansbutti Kherain (4), Sheo Lochan v. Saheb Singh (5), Bhola Nath v. Bhagabati Deyi (6) and Anunda Chandra v. Nilmony (7). In answer to this contention, it has been argued on behalf of the decree-holder Respondent that the properties in question were absolutely at the disposal of Bechu Koer and that consequently after her death they were liable to be seized in satisfaction of her personal debts precisely in the same manner as they might have been applied by Bechu Koer herself during her life-time for payment of the dues of her creditors. In support of this proposition reliance has been placed upon the cases, Brij Indar Bahadur v. Janki Koer (8), Saodamini v. The Administrator-General of Bengal (9), Akkanna v. Venkayya (10) and Subramanian Chetti v. Arunachellam Chetti (11).

It may be conceded at once that the question of the right of a Hindu widow to accumulations from the income of the estate of her husband which she has taken by right of inheritance is not altogether free from difficulty. In one of the earliest cases on the subject, Soorjeemoney v. Denobundoo (12), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee appear to have laid down that all the accumulations of a fund which had descended to a widow, from the time the estate vested in her, were absolutely her own; i.e., in her own right as distinct from the fund itself which she was entitled to hold and appropriate as a widow. In a later decision, however, Mitta Kunth Audhicary v. Neeranjan Audhicary (13), their Lordships pointed out that the previous decision was not to be regarded as conclusive or even as a direct authority upon the question. The most important decision of the Judicial Committee upon the matter is that of Isri

Dutt v. Hansbutti Koerain (4). In that case their Lordships observed that if the widow had made no attempt to dispose of the savings from her husband's estate, there was no dispute that they followed the estate from which they arose. This view had in substance been taken by this Court in the case of Bhola Nath v. Bhagabati (6), the decision wherein was subsequently reversed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee upon another point [Bhagabutee v. Bhola Nath (14)]. It has been suggested by the learned Vakil for the Respondent that the decision of the Judicial Committee in Isri Dutt v. Hansbutti (4) cannot be reconciled with the subsequent pronouncements in Sheo Lochan v. Saheb Singh (5) and Saodamini v. The Administrator-General of Bengal (9). In our opinion, there is no conflict between the principles recognised in the cases mentioned. But it may be a question of some nicety to determine in each individual case whether the property in dispute is in the nature of accumulation or is merely a saving held in suspense by the widow with intent to be appropriated for her personal use later on. In two of the cases cited at the Bar, namely, Saodamini v. The Administrator-General (9) and Subramanian Chetti v. Arunachellam Chetti (11), the widow was not in possession of the estate of her husband. That circumstance by itself was sufficient to negative any possible intention on her part to annex what was called the accumulation to the estate she had taken from her husband. The true test to be applied to cases of this description is to determine from the surrounding circumstances the intention of the widow. Did she intend to treat the disputed property as part and parcel of the estate of her husband or did she treat it as a temporary saving liable to be applied by her subsequently for her own purposes. If that test is applied to the case before us, it is obvious that the claim of the decree-holder cannot be sustained.

In so far as the first item of the attached properties is concerned, there is no doubt that it was originally a part of the estate of the husband of Bechu Koer. It had been sold and had passed into the hands of a stranger to the family. When the widow subsequently re-purchased the family howdah, the inference is irresistible that she intended to treat it as a part of her husband's estate.

In so far as the rents not realised from tenants are concerned, it has not been seriously disputed that they cannot be treated as temporary savings liable to be applied in satisfaction of any personal debts of the widow. This view may at first sight seem to militate against that adopted by Sir Charles Sargent, C. J., in Rivett Carnac v. Jivibai (15). That case, however, is distinguishable on two grounds. In the first place, the powers of a widow to deal with moveables under the Mayukha Law are not precisely on the same footing as the powers of a widow under the Mitakshara Law. In the second place, in the case before Sir Charles Sargent the rent has actually been collected on behalf of the widow by her agent; at the time of her death, it was consequently her money in the hands of her agent; no distinction could thus be drawn between the sums already expended and the balance at the hands of her agent. Under these circumstances, it was ruled that the property could be claimed by the heirs of the widow and not by the heirs of her husband.

Much reliance was placed by the learned Vakil for the Respondent upon the class of cases of which the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Beer Pertab v. Rajender Pertab (16), Brij Indar v. Janki Koer (8) and Ram Nundan v. Janki Koer (17) may be taken as the type. In this class of cases, the question for consideration related to property which had been confiscated by the Government and re-granted to one or other member of the family. The learned Vakil for the Respondent contended that as the grantee in a case of this description acquires an absolute estate, in so far as the howdah was concerned, it ought to be assumed that the widow upon re-purchase acquired an absolute interest therein. It is obvious however that there is no analogy between the two classes of cases. In the case of confiscation and re-grant by the Sovereign power, the position of the grantee depends upon the intention of the grantor as evidenced by the deed of grant. In the case before us the right of the widow must be determined from the surrounding circumstances as indicative of her true intention. We hold therefore that neither of the two properties sought to be attached by the decree-holder is liable to be attached in execution of the decree obtained by her against Bhagabati Koer to be satisfied out of the assets of Bechu Koer in her hands.

The result is that this appeal must be allowed and the orders of the Courts below discharged. The Appellant is entitled to her costs throughout these proceedings.

No. 202 OF 1911.

MUSST. DEOKALI

JENKINS, C. J.

KOER, Plaintiff,

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.

Appellant,

1912,

v.

Heard, 13 & 14, June. BABU KEDAR NATH

Judgment, 19, June. & ors., Defendants, Respondents.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), sec. 42—Declaratory decree, when should be made and when refused—Consequential relief, injunction if.

Sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act does not sanction every form of declaration but only a declaration that the Plaintiff is entitled to any legal character or to any right as to any property.

Courts in this country should see that plaints which pray for declaratory decrees only, conform to the terms of sec. 42, Specific Relief Act.

An injunction is a consequential relief.

The limit imposed by sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act is on decrees which are merely declaratory and does not expressly extend to decrees in which relief is administered and declarations are embodied as introductory to that relief. For such declarations legislative sanction is not required as they rest on long established practice. But for all that the Court should be circumspect and even chary as to the declarations it makes; it is ordinarily enough that relief should be granted without the declaration.

This was an Appeal against the decree of Babu Raj Narain Mukerjee, Subordinate Judge of Shahabad, dated the 21st of February 1911.

MUSST. DEOKALI KOER v. BABU KEDAR NATH.

The Plaintiff-Appellant instituted the present suit on the allegation that the Defendant No. 9 was the proprietor of khata No. 1 of estate Amao in the Perganah Chainpur, that he was heavily in debt and his estate in consequence frequently fell into arrears, that with a view to protect his property the said Defendant No. 9 executed a mortgage for Rs. 14,000 in favour of his relatives Joynarain and Sunder Das, ancestors of Defendants Nos. 1 to 8, without receiving any consideration and that he allowed the said Defendants Nos. 1 to 8 to obtain a fraudulent and collusive decree, that the decree was partly executed at Benares and was then transferred for execution to the first Subordinate Judge's Court at Arrah and the Mehal Amao aforesaid which the Plaintiff had purchased was attached and was advertised for sale. The Plaintiff alleged further acts of fraud and prayed :

(1) That it might be declared that the mortgage deed executed by Defendant No. 9 in favour of the ancestors of Defendants Nos. 1 to 8 was collusive, nominal, invalid, fraudulent and without consideration, that the decree passed thereon had been collusively and fraudulently obtained and was ineffectual, inoperative and invalid and that for the satisfaction of the decree the mortgaged property in question mentioned in the said decree could not be sold.

(2) That if the Court found any obstacle in granting the above relief then it might be adjudicated and declared that without the deduction of the fair value of a 3 as. shares of each of certain mouzabs which the Plaintiff alleged had been fraudulently released by accepting a deduction of Rs. 2,900 only (the value of the properties being Rs. 16,000) and excluding the same, the Defendants Nos. 1 to 8 had no right to throw the whole charge on the remaining property and to bring to sale the whole of the remaining property ; and that the decree was in consequence not fit for execution and was invalid, ineffectual and inoperative.

(3) That any other relief which the Court might find the Plaintiff entitled to be granted to her against the Defendants and that the costs of the suit with interest till realisation might be awarded against Defendants Nos. 1 to 9.

The Plaintiff treated the suit as for a declaratory decree only and paid a court-fee of Rs. 10 only on the plaint.

The Subordinate Judge upheld the Defendants' objection that the suit was barred by sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act and that the court-fee of Rs. 10 only was insufficient, inasmuch as the plaint though in form only praying for a declaration really asked for consequential relief.

The Plaintiff thereupon preferred this appeal.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Chandra Shekhar Banerjee) for the Respondents raised a preliminary objection that the court-fee of Rs. 10 paid upon the memorandum of appeal was insufficient as the suit was not of a declaratory character ; moreover, consequential relief had been prayed. Referred to the prayers in the plaint. Court-fees Act, sec. 7, cl. iv (c) and Sch. II, No 17 (iii). Thakur Prosad v. Punkal Singh (2).

Babu Lachmi Narayan Singh (with him Babu Raghu Nath Singh) for the Appellant.—The suit is a declaratory suit without consequential relief claimed, and only court-fee of Rs. 10 is payable. See Zinnatunnessa v. Girindra Nath (3), Umatul Butul v. Nanji Koer (4), Gour Mohun v. Dino

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak in reply.—The cases cited by the Appellant were not applicable.

[JENKINS, C. J.—We think so and you need not go into them.]

Sec. 42, Specific Relief Act, was the only section under which declaratory decrees could be made and the present suit did not come within that section. [JENKINS, C. J., referred to Annual Practice (1912), pp. 403-4]. The temporary injunction issued at the instance of the Plaintiff also indicated the true character of the suit.

C. A. V.

JENKINS, C. J.—This Appeal raises the question whether the lower Court has rightly held that sufficient court-fee has not been paid on the plaint. Holding that it has not, the Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit. On the appeal being opened a preliminary objection has been raised that the memorandum of appeal is insufficiently stamped. The considerations involved in this objection are substantially those which govern the appeal.

The suit has been treated by the Plaintiff as one to obtain a declaratory decree where no consequential relief is prayed; and so, she contends, the proper fee both on the plaint and the memorandum of appeal is ten rupees.

The prayers to her plaint are framed in these terms :

“(1) That it may be declared that the registered deed, dated 1st June 1896, for Rs. 14,000 executed by Defendant No. 9 in favour of the father and ancestors of Defendants Nos. 1 to 8 is collusive, nominal, invalid, fraudulent and without consideration; that the decree passed on the basis thereof which is pending execution in No. 83 of 1909 in the 1st Court of Subordinate Judge at Arrah has been collusively and fraudulently obtained and it is ineffectual, inoperative and invalid and that for the satisfaction of the said decree, the mortgaged property in question mentioned in the said decree cannot be sold.

“(2) That if the Court finds any obstacle in granting the above relief then it may be adjudicated and declared that without the deduction of the fair value of 3 annas shares of each of the Mouzahs Sudhia, Baradhi, Sirihira, Aailasi Khurd, Pakdihar, Pipra Shankarwar, Amarha, Dadwa and Bhadaura and excluding the same the Defendants Nos. 1 to 8 have no right to lay the whole charge on the remaining property in claim and to bring about the sale of the said property and such decree is not fit for execution and it is invalid, ineffectual and inoperative.”

(3) That any other relief which the Court may find the Plaintiff entitled to, be granted to her against the Defendants and that the costs of this suit with interest till realisation may be awarded against Defendants Nos. 1 to 9.”

In the view of the Subordinate Judge the prayer in the plaint, though it is in form a mere declaration, practically asks for consequential relief, and it is as a result of this view that he arrived at the decision that is now impugned.

It is a common fashion to attempt an evasion of court-fees by casting the prayers of the plaint into a declaratory shape.

REPORTS (See Index.)

WE MAY HAVE HAD OCCASION BEFORE THIS TO criticise some Privy Council decisions and take exception to them. But so far as we recollect we have never, except on a very recent occasion, had to speak of Lord Macnaghten's judgments but in terms of the highest praise. We are therefore greatly grieved to miss in His Lordship's judgment in the appeal of Clarke v. Brojendra Kishore, that remarkable mastery of the facts, that broad and equitable view of the law, that high regard for the liberty of the subject and that supreme indifference to considerations of statecraft or executive exigencies that have characterized his judgments and have secured for them the highest reputation amongst the pronouncements of the final Court of Appeal. In the judgment which it is our painful duty to criticise, we find such gross errors in the statement of facts and such questionable interpretations of the law, that had we not been assured that it was Lord Macnaghten who delivered the judgment of the Judicial Committee in this appeal, we would have been loth to believe that His Lordship could have been an assenting party to such a careless and unconvincing judgment.

AT THE VERY OUTSET OF THE JUDGMENT THEIR Lordships say that Mr. Justice Fletcher gave a decree but without costs, although reference to the first Court's judgment and decree would show that Fletcher, J., did award costs. Their Lordships then pass off some observations made by Maclean, C. J., and Harington, J., in connection with the disallowance of costs as those of Fletcher, J., quite overlooking the fact that costs were disallowed on appeal and not in the first Court. In this connection we may further mention that in expressing their "strongest reprobation" regarding "charges of personal misconduct" against Mr. Clarke, alleged to have been reiterated by the Plaintiff, their Lordships do not seem to have had due regard to the facts of the case. For, it is to be noticed that the case of the Defendant's malice was made only in the first Court. In the Appeal Court the Plaintiff no doubt filed a cross-objection questioning the findings of the first Court that the Defendant had acted in good faith and without malice. But Maclean, C. J., expressly says at the close of his judgment that this cross-objection was not pressed by the Plaintiff before them. Their Lordships Maclean, C. J., and Harington, J., in dismissing the Defendant's appeal, deprived the Plaintiff of the costs for having filed the cross-objection. The appeal to the Judicial Committee was preferred by the Defendant by special leave and the Plaintiff could not and did not file any cross appeal or cross-objection before them. Yet their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have thought fit to express the "strongest reprobation" of the Plaintiff's conduct in reiterating charges which he did not repeat before their Lordships and which he in fact abandoned at hearing of the Appeal before the High Court of Calcutta.

THEN THEIR LORDSHIPS PROCEED TO JUDGMENT on an assumption of a state of facts which we regret to find is not at all warranted by the record of the case. It is to be noted that the facts upon which their Lordships lay so much stress were considered by the Courts below as not material to the case before them. Mr. Justice Fletcher in the first Court as well as Maclean, C. J., and Harington, J., in the Appeal Court, considered it unnecessary to discuss the facts of the case prior to the shooting incident. Mr. Justice Brett alone gave a narrative of those events, according to his view of the facts. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee take their facts from Brett, J.'s dissenting judgment, and what is more, put them forward as matters which were not disputed, although Brett, J., did not himself state them as such. This mode of statement of facts in the judgment of an Appeal Court is wholly unprecedented. More extraordinary still, we find that their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, while reproducing almost in his very words Mr. Justice Brett's statement of facts, have actually left out the very expressions that would go to show that they were mere allegations and not findings. Mr. Justice Brett says "Certain Hindus, at the instigation, it is stated, of the Hindu servants of the Plaintiff and other zemindars, his co-sharers in the village, tried to prevent the sale of bideshi or foreign goods at this fair." The Judicial Committee in their judgment reproduce this sentence with the following important change. "Some Hindus, apparently at the instance of the servants and agents of the Plaintiff and his co-sharers, &c., &c." The result is that what Mr. Justice Brett had stated as a mere allegation of the defence, the Judicial Committee have put down as a judicial inference based upon undisputed facts.

AGAIN, WHILE THEIR LORDSHIPS NOTICE THE allegations of the defence as to the cause of the disturbances, they at the same time ignore the allegations of the Plaintiff, noticed in Fletcher, J.'s judgment, that "as the Defendant when he arrived at Jamalpore on the morning of April of 28th was aware that the Mahomedans had previously announced by beat of drum that the Government had given them permission to loot the Hindu's property and to marry their widows in nika form and that a large number of the Hindus were fleeing from the place in a state of panic, if the Defendant had honestly done his duty he would in the first place have tried to restore confidence to the Hindus by assuring them of the impartiality of the Government." It should be noted that the first Court did not dismiss these allegations as unfounded but on the contrary had observed that "it may be that a man of wider experience or deeper judgment would have done so. But even if I were to assume that this was the primary duty of the Defendant, this allegation against the Defendant only comes to this, viz., that he committed an error of judgment." That his Lordship did not go more fully into the allegations of the Defendant as also of the Plaintiffs with regard to the causes of the ill-feeling between the Hindus and Mahomedans at Jamalpore was because his Lordship had held in an earlier part of the judgment that "the reasons for the origin of that state (of feeling) were not material to be considered in the case." In this view the majority of the Appeal Court also agreed. From this it is clear that the narrative of facts as to the cause of the disturbance as given by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee was not undisputed, as stated by their Lordships and that, as it stands, it is a wholly one-sided statement, BESIDES THESE MATERIAL ERRORS IN THE STATEMENT of facts there are others which, though not very material to the case, are deserving of notice. For instance, their Lordships say "zemindars in that part of the country are Hindus, most of them, apparently, absentees living in Calcutta." This is neither in accordance with facts nor borne out by any evidence on the record. We are, therefore, at a loss to understand how and where their Lordships came to find the materials upon which to base such a sweeping statement.

THE ONLY FACTS THAT WERE NOT DISPUTED either before the first Court or before the Court of Appeal were stated by Maclean, C. J., in the following terms :—

For some time previous to the 28th of April 1907, the state of feeling between the Hindus and Mahomedans at Jamalpur ran very high; and there can be no doubt but that, for some days, the town had been in a condition of very great excitement. On the 28th of April 1907, the date of the search, which undoubtedly took place on the afternoon of that day, the Defendant was at Mymensingh; and in consequence of a telegram which he received from Mr. Barniville, the Sub-divisional Officer, and Mr. Luffman, the head of the police at Jamalpur, he left for Jamalpur and arrived there at about ten o'clock in the morning. He was then informed by Mr. Luffman that, on the previous evening a man, named Gendu Sheikh, had been wounded by a revolver shot; and he was also informed that the police had reason to believe that firearms were stored in the cutcheries of the zemindars. In consequence of this information the Defendant determined to search, amongst others, the Plaintiff's cutchery: and in the presence of certain gentlemen as witnesses of the search, and accompanied by Mr. Barniville, Mr. Luffman and several police, he searched the Plaintiff's cutchery in the afternoon. This is the trespass complained of. It is unnecessary to go more in detail into the facts of this part of the case, because there is no dispute as to the facts stated above. The fact of the search and that it was conducted by the order and under the directions of the Defendant is not denied. It seems, therefore, unnecessary to discuss what took place on the evening of the 27th of April or to go more minutely into the question of the excitement or the cause of the excitement and the state of feeling between the Hindus and Mahomedans at that time.

IT HAS INVARIABLY BEEN THE PRACTICE OF THEIR Lordships of the Judicial Committee not to interfere with the concurrent findings of fact of the Courts below. It is also an established practice not to allow an Appellant to make a new case in the Court of Appeal. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have in the present appeal disregarded both these rules and decided the case on a view of facts different from those concurrently found by the Courts below. The Courts below found that Mr. Clarke had made a general search for arms in the Plaintiff's cutchery. We shall show by reference to his own evidence that he himself also said that this was what he had done and intended to do. The argument on his behalf in the first Court was chiefly directed towards showing that in making this general search for arms he was justified under the Arms Act and that even without recording his reasons as required by the Act. The defence under the Criminal Procedure was treated by his counsel as of secondary importance. We shall first point out the findings of the Courts below in this respect and then examine whether the Judicial Committee was in any way justified in departing from these findings of fact and basing their judgment on an assumption of facts which, we shall show, is not supported even by Mr. Clarke's own evidence.

THE LEARNED JUDGES HERE HAD TO DEAL WITH the case which was set up by the defence and made out by evidence. As to the case made before him Mr. Justice Fletcher finds. "I am satisfied on the evidence that the search was not intended to be made under the provisions of sec. 165 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The search of the Plaintiff's and the other cutcheries was for the purpose of discovering arms generally, which sec. 105 does not authorise.

"In my opinion, the search made by the Defendant was not, nor was it ever intended that it should be, made under sec. 165 of the Criminal Procedure Code."

ON APPEAL, THE CASE WAS PUT FORWARD FOR the first time that it was not a general search for arms, but for the weapon with which Gendu was shot. On this Maclean, C. J., observed :—

"The search were undoubtedly a general search for arms, not, as is now suggested at the Bar, for the revolver with which Gendu Sheikh had been wounded." His Lordship Mr. Justice Harington also upheld the findings of fact of the Court below on this point, in the following terms :—

"Moreover, the Magistrate appears to have been searching for arms generally and not for some particular weapon."

Later on his Lordship records a still more definite finding that "it has not been shown that the search was directed for the purpose of any proceeding under the Code" (Code of Criminal Procedure).

ALTHOUGH MR. CLARKE HAD SAID, AS MENTIONED by Brett, J., in his judgment, that a search for the arms in connection with that case (Gendu Sheikh's) was equally in his mind and that he made up his mind to make the search after hearing the police officers' and the other persons' reports, yet he also said in the course of cross-examination, "there was nothing formal in my enquiry. No, I was not holding an enquiry as a Magistrate;" and when he was specifically asked with regard to Gendu Sheikh's case, he said he did not take any notice of the matter. This will appear from the following extracts from his deposition :—

Q.—The search was purely for the fire-arms ?

A.—What I chiefly wanted was fire-arms and sword-sticks. By fire-arms I mean revolver and guns. I was looking for them.

Q.—The revolver was in respect of the wound on Gendu ?

A.—The fire on Barniville and Superintendent of Police.

Q.—There was no investigation as regards that ?

A.—No. I don't think any investigation was made,

Q.—As regards Sheikh you had not taken cognizance of the matter—you know its meaning.

A.—I did not take any notice of the matter. I had not the case on my file.

In answer to a question from the Court he also said : "I was anxious to ascertain if there was a considerable store of arms there, and I was anxious to seize them if there were."

YET THEIR LORDSHIPS OF THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE find fault with the "Trial Judge and the learned Judges of Appeal" for directing their attention chiefly to what clearly appears from the foregoing extracts to have been the principal defence taken before them. The plea under the Criminal Procedure Code although taken in the written statement was, as Maclean, C. J., observes, seriously suggested as an alternative defence for the first time before the Appeal Court. So it is obviously their Lordships of the Judicial Committee who are in error in describing the alternative defence made before the Courts here as the "real defence" and basing on this view of the defence unmerited reflections on the High Court. The injustice of the remark becomes all the more glaring when we find that at the end of their judgment, their Lordships accept the decision of the First Court and the Appeal Court on the principal question that was before them as a correct interpretation of the law. With regard to Mr. Clarke's defence under sec. 25 of the Arms Act, Lord Macnaghten observes that "Their Lordships are disposed to agree with the majority of the Court of Appeal that Mr. Clarke not having complied with the preliminary condition prescribed by the Arms Act cannot defend his action under the Statute." In this matter the Judicial Committee have gone against the view of the dissenting Judge, Brett, J., and has as a matter of fact upheld that taken by the Trial Judge and the majority of the Court of Appeal. When we remember that this was the real issue over which the whole suit was fought out here, all the criticism to which the majority of the Judges of the Calcutta High Court have been subjected in connection with this case falls to the ground as utterly unfounded. No fair-minded man who would care to acquaint himself with the proceedings before them can question that in dealing with Mr. Clarke's defence they acted otherwise than with the utmost consideration and fairness.

IT WOULD THUS APPEAR THAT THEIR LORDSHIPS of the Judicial Committee have not only not shown the same regard for the facts and the evidence on the record and the real issues at the trial, as is their wont, but have also gone out of their way in the opening portion of their judgment to pass reflections on the Calcutta High Court which the closing portion of their own judgment would show to be quite unmerited. Their Lordships at the very outset say that "there has been a serious miscarriage of justice in both the Courts which dealt with the matter in India." They make these observations simply because they consider that the real defence of Mr. Clarke depended on the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Even if this were so, we fail to follow how the Judges of the Calcutta High Court are to blame if Mr. Clarke or his legal advisers did not make that case before the Trial Judge and only seriously put it forward for the first time before the Court of Appeal. We have shown by extracts from the judgments of these Courts what Mr. Clarke's real defence before them was. In the first Court he principally relied on sec. 25 of the Arms Act, and both there and in the Appeal Court it was contended on his behalf that he could under this section make a general search for arms without recording his reasons previous to the search, and that the recording of reasons was a matter of pure formality, and that acts done in pursuance of the above section were also judicial acts and were covered by the protection afforded by the "Act for the Protection of Judicial officers."

THE EMINENT FAIRNESS WITH WHICH THE ALTERNATIVE defence of Mr. Clarke under the Code of Criminal Procedure was dealt with by the High Court on appeal will also appear from the judgment of Harington, J. His Lordship notices that "in the course of the argument there was some discussion as to which of these Acts the Defendant purported to act under." On this his Lordship observes, "That, to my mind, is of very little importance. The Defendant is entitled to call in aid any Statute which justifies his action quite irrespective of whether it was present or not to his mind when he made the search." His Lordship therefore fully considered the defence set up for Mr. Clarke under the Criminal Procedure Code.

WE VERY MUCH REGRET TO HAVE TO SAY THAT their Lordships' decision even on the points of law is based on a misapprehension of the scheme of the Criminal Procedure Code as a whole and of the effects of its provisions. Now a crucial question in this case was whether Mr. Clarke was acting as a Court, for if he was not he would not be authorised to conduct a search. Their Lordships proceed on the assumption that there is no statutory definition of the word "Court" applicable to the facts of the case. In this, we venture to think their Lordships are clearly in error.

IN THE CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE OF 1872, there was a definition of "Criminal Court" and it was stated to mean and include "every Judge or Magistrate or body of Judges or Magistrates enquiring into or trying any criminal case or engaged in any judicial proceeding." In the present Code this definition has been omitted, but sub-sec. (2) of sec. 4 has been added, to the following effect: "All words and expressions used herein and defined in the Penal Code and not hereinbefore defined shall be deemed to have the meanings respectively attributed by that Code." The Penal Code in sec. 20 defines a "Court of Justice" as "a Judge who is empowered by law to act judicially alone, or a body of Judges which is empowered by law to act judicially as a body of when such Judge or body of Judges is acting judicially."

IF THE WORD "COURT" IN SEC. 96 MEANS A "Court of Justice" as it must mean, it is perfectly clear that the definition in the Penal Code will apply to this section Mr. Clarke then in doing what he did was not acting as a Court. If that is so, he could not conduct a search in person under sec. 105. Against this clear definition in the Penal Code the implication sought to be brought out of the naming of Magistrates under classes of Courts in sec. 6 is unavailing. Although it must be admitted that the language of the Code of Criminal Procedure is not always as clear as it might have been on this point, it is clear that the words "Court" and "Magistrate" are not used in the Code as interchangeable or synonymous. The word "Magistrate" has often been used to signify a Magistrate acting in his judicial capacity, but the word "Court" has never been used to signify a Magistrate acting otherwise than judicially. The effect of their Lordships' decision seems to be that the word 'Court' in sec. 96 as well as elsewhere may refer to Magistrates even when they are not acting judicially. That would be so if the words were synonymous or interchangeable. But that they are not so is abundantly clear. An indication of this is furnished by secs. 32, 33, 34, where mention is made of "Courts of Magistrates," where the expression is not surely a mere tautology.

IT IS QUITE CLEAR, MOREOVER, THAT THE MAGISTRATE has functions to perform under the Criminal Procedure Code which can in no way be described as judicial functions and in respect of which the Magistrate cannot surely be called a "Court" in any sense of the term. For instance, under sec. 45, cl. 3, the Magistrate is authorised to appoint village headmen. Under Chapter IX of the Code powers are given to the Magistrate to use civil force to disperse unlawful assemblies or if necessary cause such assemblies to be dispersed by military force. Surely these powers are not judicial powers and the Magistrate in exercising these powers does not act as a Court. Overlooking these and other provisions of the Code, Brett, J., in his dissenting judgment observed "that the terms 'Court' and 'Magistrate' are in fact synonymous" and their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have accepted that statement without question. But we have shown that the definition of "Court of Justice" in sec. 20 of the Indian Penal Code has to be read into the Criminal Procedure Code under sec. 4, cl. 2 of the latter. Thus it is clear that it is not the majority of the Judges here who were misled with regard to the definition of "Court" but it was their Lordships of the Judicial Committee who were.

REGARDING THE INTERPRETATION OF SECS. 96 and 105 of the Criminal Procedure Code with reference to Form VIII of Sch. V of the Code we are also not convinced that their Lordships of the Privy Council have been able to meet the very able arguments set forth in the judgment of Harington, J., in its most material particulars, although their Lordships have attempted to answer it generally. The plea of Mr. Clarke under the Criminal Procedure Code, on which the Judicial Committee has allowed his appeal, was that he was competent to direct the search in his presence under sec. 105 of the Code. Under that section he could do so only in cases where he could issue a search warrant. This brings us back to sec. 96, which provides as follows :—

"Where the Court considers that the purpose of an enquiry, trial or other proceeding under this Code will be served by a general search or inspection it may issue a search warrant."

THE FIRST COURT AND THE MAJORITY OF THE Court of Appeal here held that under sec. 96 the Magistrate could issue a search warrant only in connection with a judicial proceeding. Harington, J., referring to Sch. V, Form VIII, which is the only Form provided in the Code for search warrants under sec. 96, points out that the expression, "information has been laid (or complaint has been made)" in that Form as also the use of the expression "Court" in the section clearly presupposes initiation of judicial proceedings. And his Lordship finds in this case that there was no evidence of initiation of any proceeding before Mr. Clarke.

His Lordship further observed that the only sections under which the Magistrate is authorised under the Code to issue search warrants in the absence of any pending judicial proceeding are secs. 98 and 100 of the Code, and that the difference in language between these sections and sec. 96 clearly indicates that sec. 96 contemplates a judicial proceeding.

WITH REGARD TO THIS ARGUMENT THE JUDICIAL Committee refers to the expression "enquiry about to be made" in the Form VIII of Sch. V, and holds that "the form contemplates the issue of a search warrant before any proceedings of any kind are initiated and in view of an enquiry about to be made." Their Lordships consider that this disposes of Mr. Justice Harington's argument. It is remarkable, however, that in saying this their Lordships altogether lose sight of the opening words of the Form "Whereas information has been laid (or complaint has been made)," which evidently refers to sec. 190 of the Code. Any one familiar with the Code and the proceedings of Criminal Courts in this country knows that enquiries do not always commence immediately after the initiation of judicial proceedings and the necessity for the issue of a search warrant under sec. 96 may arise in the interval. The expression "about to be made" in the Form VIII, which their Lordships refer to, is obviously meant to provide for such contingencies, and there is nothing in it to justify the conclusion drawn by the Judicial Committee from this isolated expression. Taking the Form as a whole the only correct interpretation of the section and the Form seems to be that given by Mr. Justice Harington and the suggestion in their Lordships' judgment that he had not read to the end of the Form seems to be wholly unwarranted.

THEIR LORDSHIPS REFER TO THE ORDINARY POWER of Magistrates in Sch. III of the Criminal Procedure Code in support of their position that a search warrant under sec. 96 can be issued even by a third class Magistrate although no judicial enquiry may be pending before him. But if their Lordships had read up to the Part III entitled Powers of First Class Magistrates in this Schedule, their Lordships would have found that Item No. 2 under that heading authorises only first class Magistrates "to issue a search warrant otherwise than in the course of an enquiry," and that only under sec. 98. The words we have italicised show clearly that even a first class Magistrate is not authorised to issue a search warrant otherwise than in the course of judicial enquiry under sec. 96. Taking the Schedule as a whole, therefore, Item 8 of Part I of the Schedule must be read as limited to the issue of search warrants in the course of pending judicial proceedings. Otherwise, special powers of issuing search warrants conferred on higher class Magistrates by secs. 98 and 100 would be unmeaning and items Nos. 2 and 3 in Sch. III, Part III, would be superfluous.

THEIR LORDSHIPS IN INTERPRETING SEC. 96 also overlooked the provision in Sch. V, Form VIII, which requires that a Magistrate issuing a search warrant under that section must specify clearly the thing for which the search is to be made. Sec. 96 therefore cannot authorise a search for arms generally, not with reference to any particular offence, but with a view to prevent future offence or any apprehended breach of the peace. If such a search has to be made it can only be made under the provisions of the Arms Act. The majority of the Judges here were therefore entirely in the right in holding that Mr. Clarke had no valid defence under the Criminal Procedure Code and his only possible defence was under sec. 25 of the Arms Act, and that too, as the Judicial Committee agree with them in holding, was untenable.

HARINGTON, J.'s INTERPRETATION OF SECS. 96, 98 and 100 of the Code finds additional support from the language of sec. 105 itself. The use of the expression "Magistrate" in sec. 105 instead of "Court" as in sec. 96 is accounted for by the fact that it comprises within its scope not merely searches which may be directed in the course of a judicial inquiry by a Magistrate acting as a "Court" but also searches under secs. 98 and 100, which may be held by the Magistrate otherwise than in the course of a judicial inquiry, that is to say when acting in his executive capacity.

THERE IS ONE MATTER IN CONNECTION WITH THIS interpretation of the provisions of sec. 96 of the Criminal Procedure Code to which we wish to invite pointed attention. The Code which confers very limited powers on third class Magistrates could never have contemplated arming such Magistrates with the power of issuing search warrants and holding searches at pleasure, without reference to any judicial proceedings pending before them. This power they would now have under the decision of the Judicial Committee. We feel, therefore, that legislation is urgently called for to avoid the serious consequences that may not unlikely follow from their Lordships' decision.

LASTLY, WE MAY BE PERMITTED TO POINT OUT one important aspect of the case which demanded decision before the Plaintiff's case could be dismissed and this their Lordships have neither considered nor even noticed in their judgment. Assuming that Mr. Clarke had entered on the premises under the power conferred on him by law, it was found by both the Courts here that he was responsible for the use of undue violence while on the premises under the authority of law. The finding of Fletcher, J., on this point is perfectly clear. "That the search was conducted," says his Lordship, "with unnecessary damage to the property of the Plaintiff cannot to my mind be doubted for an instant." Mr. Horniman to whom his Lordship refers for a description of the damage says as follows:—

"In that building I saw a large number of chests which had been broken open evidently with great violence, unnecessary violence, I should say, most of them contained documents having the appearance of estate records, quantities of which had been tumbled out on the floor, in many cases where they had been tied up in packets, docketed, either by careless rough treatment or deliberately—I can't say, the packets had been torn open, papers mutilated, strewn about the floor. . . . hinges of the boxes had been broken where it would have been sufficient to pick or force the locks. There was a general appearance in the building of violent treatment of all its contents."

Harington, J., also finds that there was rebutted evidence of undue violence. Having regard to these findings it seems clear that even if Mr. Clarke went on the premises under authority given by law, by the doing of this "unnecessary damage" by undue violence he became liable for trespass ab initio. But even leaving alone the question of trespass ab initio there remains the further point that the Plaintiff was at least entitled to damages for the unnecessary injury actually done.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—Clinton v. J. Lyons & Co., Ltd. Before RIDLEY AND BRAY, JJ. 23rd May 1912.

Cat, injuries caused by a, principles regulating owner's responsibility discussed.—Is a cat while rearing kittens an animal feræ naturæ?

This was an action in which the Plaintiff claimed damages for injuries caused to herself and to her dog by the Defendants' cat. The Plaintiff went into the Defendants' tea shop for refreshments with her dog. There was a cat on the premises which was rearing kittens. The cat attacked the dog and also injured the Plaintiff who interfered.

(1) Did the Plaintiff take her dog on the premises by the permission of the Defendants?—Yes. (2) Or with acquiescence of the Defendants?—Yes. (3) Had the cat (to the knowledge of the Defendants), while rearing kittens, a disposition to attack a dog in her neighbourhood and a person holding a dog?—Yes. (4) Did the cat attack the dog unprovoked?—Yes. (5) Were the Plaintiff's injuries the result of the cat attacking her dog?—Yes. (6) Did the Defendants take reasonable precautions (under the circumstances) for the safety of their customers?—No. (7) Damages?—£100.

The Defendants contended that they were not liable. They pleaded that the cat was not an animal feræ naturæ and that they were not responsible for the accident which was extraordinary and could not possibly have been provided against. The learned Judges found for the Defendants. In the course of his judgment Mr. JUSTICE RIDLEY said :—

It may be observed that if the cat was to be classed as feræ naturæ, the sixth question left to the jury was not relevant, because according to Nicols v. Marsland (L. R., 10 Ex., 255) and Baker v. Snell (1908, 2 K. B., 352) a person keeping such an animal is liable for the consequences, however arising; and the case must have been put on two grounds, as it was before us—namely, first, that this cat must be classed as an animal feræ naturæ, and, secondly, that if not, still it constituted a danger against which it was the Defendants' duty to take reasonable care to protect their customers, which they had not done. As to the first point, the facts appear to me to show that the cat was not dangerous to human beings but to dogs, and that nothing would have happened had not the Plaintiff taken the dog with her into the room. It would be a strong thing to hold that a cat when vicious with dogs (because she has kittens) ceases to be a domestic animal and becomes feræ naturæ so that her owner is responsible for all eventualities, as in Baker v. Snell.

An animal may, indeed, be dangerous from a temporary cause, as was the case in Barnes v. Lucille (96 L. T., 680), but there it was shown that while with puppies that dog was dangerous to mankind, so that it was feræ naturæ. But this cat was not dangerous to mankind, nor would any mischief have happened but for the presence of the dog brought by Mrs. Clinton. Mr. McCall, however, contended that such a cat must nevertheless be accounted feræ naturæ because it is vicious towards such of mankind as are carrying dogs and must be likened to the bull which attacked a person wearing a red handkerchief—Hardson v. Roberts (6 Exch., 697). In that case the Defendant said after the accident that he knew that the bull (or a bull) would run at anything red, and that was left to the jury as knowledge of the scienter. The Court refused to interfere, saying that there was evidence for the jury, and I am much disposed to agree; for I think that a bull which is vicious to persons wearing a red tie may well attack a person without one. But the hostility of cat and dog, on the other hand, has passed into a proverb and I am not disposed to say that if a cat attacks a dog, and by accident a person who happens to be there, the cat is therefore dangerous to mankind. I think the cat is not to be classed as dangerous to mankind, but that the bull is.

Giving the best consideration to the matter that I can, I have come to the conclusion that the Defendants are not answerable for what happened, because it was not an ordinary consequence of their act, there being no evidence that they had any reason to expect it.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—Upton v. Henderson. Before Mr. JUSTICE EVE. 26th April 1912.

Covenant executed by a co-Respondent not to go during a period of 15 years within a radius of 10 miles of the Plaintiff's house.—Is it against public policy or in restraint of trade or personal liberty?—Is it a penalty?

This was an action for an injunction to restrain the Defendant from breaking a covenant and for carrying it out. The Plaintiff presented a petition for divorce from his wife, to which the Defendant was a co-Respondent. The Petitioner was desirous of reclaiming his wife and of putting her beyond temptation, and the Defendant was not averse to entering into some arrangement with that object in view. The Plaintiff, with a view to protecting his wife in the future, made a stipulation that the Defendant should covenant that he would not during a period of 15 years come within a radius of ten miles of the Plaintiff's mansion-house upon any pretext whatever without the consent of the Plaintiff. In order to secure the performance of the covenant the Plaintiff insisted on security being given, and £3,000 was paid to the trustees, which, on breach of the covenant, was to be held by them upon trust for the Plaintiff.

The first defence, which went to the whole cause of action, was that the covenant was void as being against public policy. It was said that the sum of £3,000 was damages for a wrong, but the facts as stated clearly disposed of that contention. If the Defendant abided by his covenant, not a penny-piece would he have to pay. So far from being damages for a past wrong, the payment of the £3,000 depended entirely on the conduct of the Defendant. Then it was said that the covenant was contrary to public policy, because the effect of it was to exclude the Defendant from a certain area, and that was a restraint of any trade which he might wish to follow. As a rule covenants in restraint of trade were contrary to public policy, but there were numerous exceptions to the rule. No doubt a covenant which contained no reference to trade might be a colourable device and void as being in restraint of trade. But there was no such case here. The deed contained a stipulation to be found in many separation deeds, and if the Defendant's contention was right, all those stipulations were void as being in restraint of trade. It was impossible to apply the rule to a covenant of this nature. In the present case, where the honour of the wife was to be protected, it seemed highly desirable to exclude the Defendant from the area.

Then it was said that the covenant was void as infringing the liberty of the subject. The liberty of this particular subject seemed to be something like license. There were numerous cases in which persons bound themselves to remain in particular places, but it could not be said that such contracts were against public policy. The defence therefore on the ground of public policy failed.

That being so, and the breach of the covenant being admitted, was the Plaintiff entitled to an injunction? It was said that he was not entitled to both an injunction and the £3,000, and the case of General Accident Assurance Corporation v. Noel (1902, 1 K.B., 376) was cited in support of that contention. But that case was not in pari materia with the present case. Some people were apt to disregard injunctions, and to make an injunction effective against such persons it was advisable to obtain security. Here the parties clearly intended that if there should be a breach of the covenant, all interest of the Defendant in the £3,000 should cease. The Plaintiff therefore was not put to an election, and was entitled, subject to the third point, to an injunction and the £3,000.

Thirdly and lastly, it was said that the £3,000 was a penalty, and that inasmuch as it would become payable if the Defendant went a few yards inside the area, it was one which the Court would not enforce, because no real damage could be done by such a breach. There was no substance in that contention. All the Court had to do was to direct execution of the trust, and it was not for the Court to vary the trust. That defence therefore failed. The result was that the Plaintiff was entitled to an injunction and an order on the trustees to pay the fund to the Plaintiff.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before BRETT, and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1243 OF 1909. YUSUF GAZI, Plaintiff, Appellant v. ASMAT MOLLAH AND OTHERS, Respondents. 13th June, 1912.

The suit was for declaration of the Plaintiff's right by purchase to, and the recovery of possession of, 13 plots of land.

The Plaintiff's case was that the lands in suit were held by Defendant No. 26, under Defendant No. 27 at a yearly rental of Rs. 184, that in execution of a rent-decree against the said jama, it was sold off and purchased by the Plaintiff on 15th May, 1905, free from all registered and notified incumbrances, that the Plaintiff got symbolical possession of the same through the Court, on 20th May 1906, that when on 25th June 1906 the Plaintiff went to take possession of the lands he was resisted by the principal Defendants Nos. 1 to 25 who claimed the lands under a jama under Defendant No. 26, that thereupon the Plaintiff served a notice under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act through the Collector to cancel the said Defendant's incumbrance, if any, which was duly served, on 9th December 1906, and that therefore the Plaintiff was entitled to khas possession of the same ousting the Defendants.

The Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 only contested the suit, pleading inter alia that the Plaintiff had no right or cause of action; that limitation barred the suit as brought by the Plaintiff; that the notice under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was not legal and valid and was not legally and properly served.

The Court of first instance disallowed all the objections of the contesting Defendants and decreed the suit. That decree was set aside on appeal. The Plaintiff therefore appealed to the High Court.

Held—That the words “date of the sale” in sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act meant the “actual date of the sale” and “not the date of the confirmation of the sale.”

That the words “has notice” in sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act meant “has knowledge or information.”

MUSST. DEOKALI KOER v. BABU KEDAR NATH.

Where the evasion is successful, it cannot be touched, but the device does not merit encouragement or favour.

The history of decrees merely declaratory is interesting, and a consideration of it may help to a solution of the question involved in this appeal. Such decrees are an innovation, and they first obtained authoritative sanction in England by sec. 50 of the Chancery Procedure Act, 1852. Before this it was not the practice of the Court in ordinary suits to make a declaration of right except as introductory to relief which it proceeded to administer (Seton on Decrees).

Seven years later, India followed suit with sec. 15 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1859, where it was enacted that no suit shall be open to objection on the ground that a merely declaratory decree or order is sought thereby, and it shall be lawful for the Civil Courts to make binding declarations of right without granting consequential relief. By Act X of 1877, the Civil Procedure Code of that year, this section was repealed, but its place had been already taken in anticipation by sec. 42 of Act I of the same year, the Specific Relief Act. That section provides as follows :—"Any person entitled to any legal character, or to any right as to any property, may institute a suit against any person denying, or interested to deny, his title to such character or right, and the Court may in its discretion make therein a declaration that he is so entitled, and the Plaintiff need not in such suit ask for any further relief :

"Provided that no Court shall make any such declaration where the Plaintiff being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so."

It is in this section (apart from particular legislative sanction) that the law as to merely declaratory decrees, applicable in the circumstances of this case, is now to be found.

The terms of the section are not a precise reproduction of the provision contained in the Act of 1859 and the English law : in one direction they are more comprehensive, in another more limited. It is common tradition that the section was designed to be a substantial reproduction of the Scotch action of declaration ; but whether this be so or not is of no great moment. We have to be guided by its provisions as they are expressed. The section does not sanction every form of declaration, but only a declaration that the Plaintiff is entitled to "any legal character or to any right as to any property : " it is the disregard of this that accounts for the multiform and at times eccentric declarations which find a place in Indian plaints.

If the Courts were astute—as I think they should be—to see that the plaints presented, conformed to the terms of sec. 42, the difficulties that are to be found in this class of cases, would no longer arise. Nor would Plaintiffs be unduly hampered if the provisions of sec. 42 were enforced, for it would be easy to frame a declaration in such terms as would comply with the provisions of the section where the claim was one within its policy.

Now what are the declarations that are sought in this case? None relate to the Plaintiff's legal character, so only those are permissible which relate to "any right as to any property." Of the declaration in the first prayer of the plaint, none as expressed is a declaration of this character : it may be that the proposition at which the Plaintiff aims is in some measure involved in those declarations, but that is not what is sanctioned by sec. 42.

MUSST. DEOKALI KOER v. BABU KEDAR NATH.

The second prayer is open to the same comment. The third prayer expressly seeks relief, though it is general in its terms. I fail then to see how this is such a suit as sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act contemplates, and if it is not, then it is not "a suit to obtain a declaratory decree where no consequential relief is prayed," as sanctioned by law.

The proceedings of this suit confirm this view, for the Plaintiff has successfully sought an interim injunction restraining the Defendants, and at this moment the Defendants are restrained by an injunction from pursuing the rights they assert to be theirs.

That an injunction is consequential relief is, I think, clear; the language of the Specific Relief Act favours that view, and it is one that has the sanction of Indian decisions and also of the Court of Chancery in Marsh v. Keith (1).

I would only add this, that the limit imposed by sec. 42 is on decrees which are merely declaratory, and does not expressly extend to decrees in which relief is administered, and declarations are embodied as introductory to that relief. For such declarations legislative sanction is not required: they rest on long established practice. But for all that the Court should be circumspect and even chary as to the declarations it makes: it is ordinarily enough that relief should be granted without the declaration.

The result then is that the preliminary objection to this appeal must prevail. But we will give the Appellant an opportunity of making up the deficiency of court-fees, provided she pays the required balance within one month from this date. If that be done, then it will be open to the Appellant to ask us to make a similar order in reference to the plaint.

Haji Buxsh Elahi v. Durlabh Chandra Kar.

June of each respective year as the latest day of the payment of rents of all descriptions of tenures in Khas Mehal Panchannagram, in default of which payment on or previous to that date tenures in arrears in that mehal will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder" :

Held—That the 28th June 1903 was the first date under the Notification and the Statute when the default, such as would enable the "tenure in arrears" to be sold, arose in respect of the amount payable under the kabuliyat on the 28th June 1902.

The sale in this case which took place in March 1903 was therefore illegal and liable to be set aside.

General considerations or administrative rules not having the sanction of the Statute, such as Rule 7 of Part III, c. 16, of the Survey and Settlement Manual, could not operate to vary the contract of the parties and the statutory provisions applicable thereto.

DURLABH CHANDRA KAR v. HAJEE BUX ELLABI (2) reversed.

These were two consolidated Appeals from two judgments* and two decrees, of the High Court at Calcutta, which set aside two decrees of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, in Bengal.

The Appeals arose out of two suits instituted in the Court of the said Subordinate Judge in respect of two holdings situate within an estate known as Khas Mehal Panchannagram, included in the Revenue Roll of the Collectorate of the 24-Pergunnahs. These holdings were sold for arrears of revenue, alleged to be due in respect of them, and were bought by the Respondent on the 16th of March 1903. The Suit No. 17 of 1904 was brought by the Appellant to set aside the sale, and Suit 46 of 1904 was filed by the Respondent as the purchaser at the revenue sale for possession of the holdings.

The Subordinate Judge had decreed Suit 17 of 1904, and dismissed Suit 46 of 1904. These Appeals were filed in the ordinary course, and the question for determination in them was whether the revenue sale was held without jurisdiction, and was, therefore, invalid in law.

The facts of the case, now material, may be shortly stated as follows :—

On the 18th February 1874 one Bhagaban Chandra Banerji took a settlement from the Collector of the 24-Pergunnahs of the said holdings and executed a kabuliyat in favour of Government in the following terms :—

"I accept Rs. 14-0-11 pies as the annual jumma of 12 bighas 18 cottahs 4 chittacks of land measured and specified above. I shall pay the said jumma in the Collectorate within the 28th day of June every year. If I do not pay, it shall be realised by the Government according to law and to that I shall not be able to raise any objection whatever. To this effect, I, of my own will and accord, execute this kabuliyat."

On the 27th of March 1902 a son of Bhagaban Chandra Banerji sold the said two holdings to the Appellant for Rs. 16,000, and put him in possession thereof. After the purchase an agent of the Appellant tendered on or before 1st of January 1902 the revenue for the two holdings, but his tender was refused on the ground that there was an order of the Collector not to accept rent from unregistered proprietors.

Haji BUKSH ELAHI v. DURLAV CHANDRA KAR.

The Appellant thereafter on the 29th of April 1902 applied for registration of his name and it was registered in due course in respect of both the holdings. The Appellant also applied for the redemption of the holdings on payment of the proper fees.

On the 16th of March 1903 the two holdings were put up for sale, on account of an alleged default in payment of Government revenue for the June instalment of 1902, and were sold to the Respondent for Rs. 3,320.

The Appellant appealed to the Commissioner of Revenue to set aside the sale, but his appeal was dismissed on the ground of limitation.

The two suits out of which the present Appeals arose were then instituted.

On the 25th of July 1905 the Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment in the two suits, which were tried together. He observed that the most important question in the two cases was whether under the provisions of secs. 2 and 3 of Act XI of 1859, the sales in question were valid. The kabuliyats executed by Bhagaban Banerji showed that he bound himself to pay his rents on the 28th of June of every year in one instalment, so under sec. 2 of the Act the rent for 1902 was not in arrear until the 1st of July of that year.

The Subordinate Judge also referred to a special notification in respect of Panchnagram holdings, issued by the Board of Revenue on the 6th of October, 1871 and which is quoted in their Lordships' judgment, and made the following comments on the notification:—

"I think this notification of the Board of Revenue purporting to have been done under sec. 3 of Act XI is not strictly in accordance with the law. Under sec. 3 the Board can fix the dates for payment of arrears of revenue in default of which payment the estate in arrear shall be sold. But I think it cannot fix the date of payment of revenue in default of which payment the estate is liable to be sold.

"Now an estate is not in arrear till the first of the month next succeeding to that when the rent is payable. In the present case the rent for 1902 was payable on the 28th of June and the tenure could not be said to be in arrear before the first of July 1902. The Board's notification fixed the 28th of June for payment of rent, in default of which payment the tenure would be sold. So in the present case the tenures could not be sold till the 28th of June, 1903, there being only one date fixed in the year for payment of rent. See the observations of the learned Judges in the case of Harkho Singh v. Bunsidhur Singh (3). There was therefore no arrear due for June 1902 or Ashar 1309. And the sales held, I think, were held without jurisdiction."

In the result the Subordinate Judge held that the sales in question were invalid in law, and should be set aside.

The Respondent preferred an Appeal to the High Court at Calcutta in Suit 17 of 1904, which was registered as Appeal from Original Decree 347 of 1905. In Suit 46 of 1904 he also filed an Appeal to the District Judge of Alipur. The latter Appeal was transferred to the High Court and was registered as Appeal from Original Decree 183 of 1906. In the Appeal 347 of 1905 the present Appellant filed cross-objections under sec. 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure to the decree of the first Court.

The Appeals were heard together by two learned Judges (Harington and Holmwood, JJ.) of the High Court who on the 18th of February 1908 delivered their judgments,* by which they decreed both the Appeals. Referring to the arguments put before them, and the judgment of the first Court, they expressed themselves in the principal judgment as follows :—

“The argument is ingenious but in our view it is not sound.

“The settlement is made on February 18th. Therefore in case of an ordinary contract of lease the annual jumma would be payable on February 18th in each successive year, but under Rule 7 of Part III, C. 16 of the Survey and Settlement Manual a settlement of revenue should ordinarily take effect from the beginning of the financial year next after that in which the proceedings of the Settlement Officer have been completed. If that Rule be applied the settlement dates from April the 1st, 1874, and the jumma would ordinarily be payable on April 1st each year.

“If it were ordinarily payable on April 1st each year, then the latest day of payment under the Board's Proclamation of 1871 is June 28th.

“In our opinion the undertaking in the kabuliyat does not have the effect of extending the time for the payment of the revenue, but is nothing more than a promise by the tenant that he will pay the revenue ordinarily payable on the first day of the financial year by the latest day of payment as fixed by the Board's Proclamation.

“Sec. 2 of the Act of 1859 is clearly applicable to monthly instalments and in revenue-paying estates and does not apply to a yearly jumma of tenures such as the one now under consideration.

Hence these appeals.

Sir R. Finlay, K. C., and Mr. Ross for the Appellant.—The sale was held without jurisdiction. The meaning of the kabuliyat is plain. It accepts the jama and fixes the date of payment and provides that in default the arrear will be realized according to law. There were no kists. The law is laid down by Act XI of 1859. Under the terms of the kabuliyat the revenue was payable on the 28th June 1902, and it could not possibly be “in arrear” till after that date.

Sec. 2 defines the word “arrear” of revenue. Read with sec. 3 and in the light of the preamble to the Act of 1859, the view of the Subordinate Judge that the estate was not in arrear till the 1st of July following was right. The Board of Revenue certainly had jurisdiction to fix dates of payment by the notification but the jurisdiction was to fix a day after the estate had fallen in arrears. There being in fact no arrear at the time of the sale the sale was absolutely void. Reference was made to Harkhoo Singh v. Bunsidhur Singh (3).

[LORD ATKINSON.—The date of payment is within the 28th June.]

Sir R. Finlay.—Yes. I do not know what the word was in the vernacular, but any way, it means “on or before the 28th.”

The High Court has relied on the Survey and Settlement Manual. Rule, 7, Pt. III, Ch. 16. That has no application.

Haji Buksh Elahi v. Durlav Chandra Kar.

Here the kabuliyat alone is evidence of the terms of the lease. It would be monstrous hardship if the estate were sold two days after the date fixed. The Act intended that there should be a further notice before such a serious step as sale was taken.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Brown for the Respondent.—Act XI of 1859 does not apply to this case. It is confined to estates paying Government revenue. The present case relates to a tenure which is not a mehal and would not come within the Act. The sale here was held under sec. 11, Act VII of 1868 (B. C.). Sec. 1 of this Act defines "revenue" which has a far greater import there than in the Act of 1859. The Board of Revenue fixed the latest day of payment in 1871. The words "in the manner prescribed in sec. 3 of Act XI of 1859" in sec. 11 of Act VII of 1868 (B. C.), simply mean "according to the manner prescribed by that section, i.e., by the notification, etc., which regulated the procedure of the sale. But the right to sell the tenure here accrued under the provisions of sec. 11, Act VII of 1868 (B. C.). The procedure regulating the sale under the Act VII of 1868 was the same as provided by Act XI of 1859. The kabuliyat was executed subject to the terms of the notification. It means that the tenure would be sold in default of payment on or before the 28th June.

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—You say that sec. 2 of Act XI of 1859 has no application at all.]

Mr. L. DeGruyther.—Yes.

The word "arrear" in sec. 11 for all practical purposes means "due and unpaid" or "due and recoverable." The date of payment is fixed by the Tenancy Acts which governs the relationship of

The fair test to apply is—Could an action for recovery of rent have been brought? I submit it could be. Further, the notification, dated the 6th October 1871, was published prior to the settlement and the kabuliyat. The settlement was made with reference to the notification. When the kabuliyat was executed it must be presumed that the parties did so with full knowledge of the notification. Then again, the word in the kabuliyat is "within." It is advisedly used. It was meant to enable the Court to sell the tenure on the 28th. Our cause of action accrued after the sunset of the 27th and the right to sell on the 28th.

[LORD SHAW.—Is it an arrear or is it not during the course of the day?]

Mr. DeGruyther.—I submit it is. There can be no question that the word is "within." It was an official translation and the practice of the Board has been to take as final the translation certified as correct by the Registrar of the High Court. Sec. 2, Act XI of 1859, deals with cases where payments are made by instalments. It does not apply to annual payment. The result of the construction put by the Subordinate Judge would be that the arrears would not be recoverable before two years. It is quite unreasonable to believe that the Legislature ever intended that. Reference was made to Mahomed Jan v. Munshi Ganga Bishun Singh (4).

Mr. Ross replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SHAW.—These are consolidated Appeals from judgments and decrees of the High Court at Calcutta, which set aside two decrees of the Subordinate

Haji BUKSH ELAHI v. DURLAV CHANDRA KAR.

Judge in the Second Court of 24-Pergunnahs, in Bengal. The question for determination by the Board is whether a certain sale of holdings for arrears of revenue, made to the Respondent on the 16th March 1903, should be set aside.

On the 27th March 1902, the Appellant purchased these holdings for Rs. 16,000 from a son of Bhagaban Chandra Banerji. By the kabuliyat executed in the year 1874 by Bhagaban, who was thus the Appellant's predecessor in title, it was stipulated as follows:—"I shall pay the said jumma in the Collectorate within the 28th day of June every year." The holdings were Government tenures in Dihi Panchannagram in the District of Twenty-four-Pergunnahs, and it is not disputed that such tenures came under the Act XI of 1859 by virtue of the provisions of Act VII of 1868*. By sec. 2 of the former Act an arrear of revenue was described thus:—

"If the whole or a portion of a kist or instalment of any month of the era, according to which the settlement and kistbundi of any mehal have been regulated, be unpaid on the first of the following month of such era, the sum so remaining unpaid shall be considered as an arrear of revenue."

It seems accordingly hardly to admit of dispute that, if this section applied the rent payable under the kabuliyat on the 28th June 1902 was not in arrear till the 1st of July thereafter.

Statute having thus made clear what was to be considered an arrear of revenue, and at what date a past due payment was to be "considered as an arrear of revenue," namely, on the first of the month following that in which the payment fell due, the further question is this, viz.:—Was this sale conducted in accordance with the procedure prescribed by Statute for the sales of property in respect of unpaid arrears of revenue?

While, as stated, it was admitted that these tenures were brought under the Act of 1859 by the Statute of 1868, it was nevertheless contended that there was some distinction to be made with reference to procedure and with reference to what constituted "arrears." The contention is important and was ably presented, but, in their Lordships' opinion, it is without foundation. The Act of 1868 above referred to extends the word "revenue" so as to include "every sum annually paid to Government by the proprietor of any estate or tenure in respect thereof." As to the attempt to differentiate procedure under the two statutes, the answer to that seems sufficiently contained in sec. 30 of the later Act, which provides that it shall be read with, and taken as part of, the former. The date when a past due payment was to be considered arrears having accordingly been settled by sec. 2 of the Act of 1859, as quoted, their Lordships cannot agree with the judgment of the High Court, which introduces a reference to "the settlement" having been made on 18th February. Therefore, say the learned Judges:—

"In the case of an ordinary contract of lease, the annual jumma would be payable on 18th February in each successive year; but under Rule 7 of Part III, c. 16, of the Survey and Settlement Manual, a settlement of revenue should ordinarily take effect from the beginning of the financial year next after that in which the proceedings of the settlement officers have been completed. If that rule be applied, the settlement dates from April 1874, and the jumma would ordinarily be payable on 1st April each year."

The statements and considerations here given do not appear to their Lordships to bear upon the present case. Whatever might be the ordinary date of payment, or, secondly, whatever might be the date

* Of the Bengal Council.—Ed.

Haji BUKSH ELAHI v. DURLAV CHANDRA KAR.

when "the settlement" is made, or, thirdly, whatever be the provisions of the Survey and Settlement Manual, it does not appear to their Lordships legitimate, by reason of any one or all of these things, to vary the actual date of payment in the kabuliya in the present case, which is the 28th June, or the actual date when a past due payment should be considered as an arrear, which is by the Statute of 1859 the 1st July 1902. No variation of the contract of parties and the statutory provisions applicable thereto is possible by reason of general considerations or administrative rules which have not the sanction of Indian Statute. In the words of Lord Watson, in Balkishen Das v. Simpson (1), referring to the Act of 1859:—

"The Act does not sanction, and by plain implication forbids, the sale of any estate which is not at the time in arrear of Government revenue. The whole clauses of the Act of 1859, in so far as these relate to sales or to their challenge at the instance of the proprietor, as well as the provisions of sec 2 of Bengal Act 7 of 1868, are framed upon the express footing that they are to be applicable to the sale of estates which are in arrear of duty."

The date when by Statute accordingly this revenue was considered in arrear was the 1st July 1902. At what date was default made in paying that arrear of revenue, so as to entitle a sale of the estate to be made? This, which appears to their Lordships to be the real question in the case, is clearly answered by the Act of 1859 itself and by the notification which followed thereon. By sec. 3 of the Act, "The Board of Revenue at Calcutta shall determine upon what dates all arrears of revenue, and all demands which by the Regulations and Acts in force are directed to be realised in the same manner as arrears of revenue, shall be paid up in each district under their jurisdiction, in default of which payment the estates in arrear in those districts, except as hereinafter provided, shall be sold at public auction to the highest bidder." In compliance with this section, the Board of Revenue on the 6th October 1871 made and duly published a notification that it—

"has determined and fixed the 28th June of each respective year as the latest date of payment of the rents of all description of tenures in Khas Mehal Panchannagram, in default of which payment on or previous to that date, tenures in arrears in Mehal will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder."

Bearing in mind that the whole provisions with regard to sales are, in the language of Lord Watson, "framed upon the express footing that they are to be applicable to the sale of estates which are in arrear of duty," and that this tenure could not be considered in arrear until the 1st July 1902, it appears fairly clear that the 28th June 1903 is the first date under the Proclamation and the Statute when there has arisen such a default as would enable that "tenure in arrears" to be sold. It so happens that the payment in the present case is not a monthly, but an annual payment, and it further happens that the payment fell to be made on the 28th June 1902. The Statute having by plain implication forbidden the estate to be considered in arrear until the 1st July, it appears to follow that the date fixed as that on which tenures in arrear will be sold must be the succeeding 28th June, namely, in the year 1903. This estate, however, was sold in the previous month of March, and their Lordships agree with the view of the Subordinate Judge in thinking that the sale is accordingly invalid. In the language of the learned Judge—

"The Board of Revenue are required, under sec. 3 of the Act, to determine on what date arrears of revenue shall be paid up, in default of which payment the estates in arrear shall be sold at public auction."

Their Lordships agree with the view that the notification must, having regard to this section of the Statute which authorised it, be applied to the present estate as fixing the 28th June 1903 as the date on which, if the arrears are not paid up, the estate can be sold. If, in cases such as the present, this holds up the power of sale until nearly a year's revenue stands in arrear, that matter, including the question whether more than one date for payment of arrears should be set up as periods of default, is one for the consideration of the Legislature and the Board of Revenue.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the Appeal should be allowed, the judgment and decree of the High Court reversed, and those of the Subordinate Judge restored, the costs of the suit and of the Appeal being borne by the Respondent.

No. 2032 OF 1909.

JENKINS, C. J.	AYENNUSSA BIBI,
N. R. CHATTERJEE, J.	Plaintiff, Appellant,
1912,	v.
Heard, 28 and	SHEIKH ISUF and
29, March.	others, Defendants,
Judgment,	Respondents.
29, March.]

Co-sharers—Possession by one tenant in common when adverse to others—Non-participation of profits for a long time, effect of.

In order to establish adverse possession by one tenant in common against his co-tenants, there must be exclusion or ouster and the possession subsequent to that must be for the statutory period.

Mere non-participation of rents and profits would not necessarily of itself amount to exclusion, but such non-participation or non-possession may in the circumstances of a particular case amount to an adverse possession.

What the circumstances may be which may have to be considered in determining the question of ouster, discussed.

This was an Appeal preferred against the decree of Babu Pran Krishna Biswas, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Dacca, dated the 24th of June 1909, confirming that of Moulvi Abdul Khaleque, Munsif of Munshigunge, dated the 11th of February 1909.

The Plaintiff-Appellant, who was the Defendant-Respondent's sister, sued the latter for a certain share in certain lands which she alleged formerly belonged to their father of which she alleged she inherited a share on the death of her father and another on the death of her mother.

The Defendants set up various pleas in defence including that of limitation.

The Munsif found that only some of the plots in suit really belonged to the father of the Plaintiff and the Defendants, that the Plaintiff's claim as her father's heir was barred by limitation but that with regard to her claim as her mother's heir, the latter died within 12 years of the suit and as to this she was entitled to a decree for a half anna share of the said plots.

Both parties appealed. The Subordinate Judge dismissed both appeals. On the question of limitation raised in Plaintiff's appeal, he observed as follows :—

"The next objection of the Appellant is that the Munsif is wrong in holding that her claim as her father's heir is barred by time. The father, as I have said, died more than 40 years ago. The Plaintiff was married in her father's life-time and for some 9 or 10 years after that she used to run away from her husband's house and come to her father's and she lived there for the most part during those years. But after that, when she became a mother, she is living continuously at her husband's, only occasionally coming to her paternal bari on a short visit to her mother and brother. The brother has got his name registered in the sherista of the zemindars and he is alone paying rent and cultivating the lands, taking the produce, for the last 30 years or more. I do not believe for a moment that the Plaintiff's husband and sons cultivated these lands along with Defendant No. 1 and used to get a share of the produce. The evidence on this point is utterly worthless and does not deserve notice. It is urged by the Appellant's pleader that the Defendant never set up an adverse title to these lands to the knowledge of the Plaintiff. But when the Defendant is in sole possession for such a length of time and is alone taking the produce to the exclusion of his sister, it cannot be said that he is in possession not only on his own behalf but on behalf of his sister also. I think that the Plaintiff's claim as her father's heir was properly held to be barred by time.

"One of Plaintiff's sisters died some years ago and the Plaintiff contends that her mother got a portion of her deceased daughter's share and thus she was the owner of more than 2 annas. But the claim of that daughter also was barred for the same reason as applies to the case of the Plaintiff and the mother could not get any share as that daughter's heir.

The Defendant No. 1 is the sole owner of that daughter's share as he was in sole possession and the lower Court properly held that the mother's share was only 2 annas and the Plaintiff is entitled to a fourth of this share."

Both the appeal and cross-appeal are dismissed with costs.

Babu Ramesh Chandra Sen for the Appellant contended that the parties being co-sharers, the Defendant No. 1's possession did not become adverse to his sisters merely because he had alone enjoyed the profits for a long time; and on the other hand, if his possession was adverse, as he possessed the lands on behalf of his mother as well as for himself the mother had also a share in the title which he had thus acquired by adverse possession, so that the Plaintiff as one of the heirs of the mother was entitled to a share in that title. Under sec. 28 of the Limitation Act the Plaintiff's title is extinguished and in this country adverse possession for 12 years has always been held to confer a good title on the person in adverse possession for that period. So if the Plaintiff lost her title by the adverse possession of the mother and brother, she gets part of it back as the mother's heir. But in this case the Defendant's possession really never became adverse as no distinctly hostile title was openly set up by the brother. Ujvalbi Bibi v. Umakanta Karmokar (5) and Jogendra Nath v. Baladeb Das (6). The question whether possession under certain circumstances is adverse or not is not a mere question of fact, it is a mixed question of law and fact which can be gone into in second appeal. Luch- meswar Prosad Singh v. Manowar Hossein (7). The rule laid down by Lord Mansfield in the case of Doe Dem Fishar and Taylor v. Prosser (1), applied in Gangadhar v. Parashram (3), was that it was for the jury to say whether from the length of possession by one co-sharer an actual ouster could be presumed. But so long as it is possible to presume that the sisters allowed the brother out of natural love and affection to enjoy all the profits, the brother's possession will not be presumed to be adverse to the sisters. This is specially so in the case of females in this country. Abdool Hossain v. Lall Chand (8). Of course there may be cases where a presumption of ouster at some previous time may arise from length of possession but then all the other surrounding circumstances must be considered and not merely the length of possession. Moreover, if the suit is to be held to be barred by limitation it is not sufficient merely to hold that the Defendant's possession is adverse, it must be found that it has been adverse for 12 years or more before suit. As for Tasarunnissa's share, if at the date of her death, the Defendant No. 1 had not already been in adverse possession for 12 years or more, her title was not extinguished and the mother became one of her heirs and the Plaintiff is entitled to a share in that also. So unless the Defendant No. 1's possession had become adverse 12 years before her death the Plaintiff's claim with respect to that cannot be barred by limitation.

Babu Surendra Nath Guha for the Respondent-Defendant No. 1 who was called upon to reply on the question of limitation and Defendant No. 1's adverse possession only and not on the question whether the mother acquired a title by adverse possession which she transmitted to her heirs, relied on Gangadhar v. Parashram (3) and Bandacharya v. Shrinivasacharya (4).

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

JENKINS, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for exclusive possession of land on partition, and the real question in dispute between the parties is what is the amount of the shares of the respective litigants. This, as the case has been placed before us, depends solely and exclusively on the question how far Defendant No. 1 can claim the benefit of the statute of limitations. The claim under the statute of limitations arises as follows:—Defendant No. 1 is the brother of the Plaintiff, and on their father's death, which occurred many years ago, the property devolved on the father's widow, his son Defendant No. 1 and three daughters of whom the Plaintiff is one. It is the case of Defendant No. 1 that he has been in exclusive possession of the land in dispute from his father's death, or at any rate, in possession to the exclusion of his sisters, and on that ground he claims to have acquired a title by adverse possession, urging that their interests have become extinguished by virtue of sec. 28 of the Indian Limitation Act. Both the lower Courts have decided in his favour, and from the decree of the lower Appellate Court the Plaintiff, one of the sisters, has preferred the present appeal.

It is urged that there are no materials on which the lower Courts were entitled to hold that there was an adverse possession by Defendant No. 1. The law on the subject I take to be well settled. In order to establish adverse possession by one tenant-in-common against his co-tenants there must be exclusion or ouster and the possession subsequent to that exclusion or ouster must be for the statutory period. The findings of the lower Appellate Court would go to satisfy these conditions, but I do not read the judgment of the Subordinate Judge as satisfying both those conditions, that is to say, first of all, that there has been an exclusion, and, secondly, that subsequently to that exclusion there has been an adverse possession for the statutory period of twelve years and upwards.

Accepting this statement as the legal position, the only other question that arises is what is sufficient evidence of exclusion. To my mind this must depend upon the the circumstances of each case. I am prepared to repeat what I have said in a previous case that mere non-participation in rents and profits would not necessarily of itself amount to an adverse possession, but such non-participation or non-possession may in the circumstances of a particular case amount to an adverse possession. Regard must be had to all the circumstances, and a most important element is the length of time. In this connection I cannot do better than refer to what was said by Lord Mansfield and the other Judges in Doe v. Prosser (1) and the statement of the law by Lord Denman in Culley v. Doe dem Taylerson (2). For convenience of reference I may say that quotations from these cases may be found in Gangadhar v. Parashram (3) and Bandacharya v. Shrinivasacharya (4). that have to be taken into consideration appear to me to be these among others,—the relationship of the parties, their position, the mode of life in the particular community to which the parties belong, the character of the property and other circumstances of a similar character. What has to be seen is whether, having regard to the long possession and to all the circumstances, it can be said that there has been such an exclusive possession or perception of profits by the brother in this case as to afford an indication of a denial of the rights of the other co-tenants, and whether on the facts as found it would be right and reasonable to hold that there had been not only an exclusion of the co-tenants but an exclusion so distant in date as to justify the view that there had been twelve years' adverse possession on the part of Defendant No. 1 at the time when this suit was instituted.

There is a subsidiary point in this case which has to be considered. It is urged on the part of the Plaintiff that in addition to the share to which she succeeded as part of her mother's original share, the mother's estate was augmented by a portion derived by her from a predeceased daughter. When that daughter died does not precisely appear. The Plaintiff stated that she died 5 or 6 years ago; we are told that the evidence is that she died 15 years prior to the institution of the suit. Now, with reference to this daughter and the share alleged to have been derived by the mother, it will be necessary for the Court to consider whether at the date of the daughter's death, there had been twelve years' adverse possession against the daughter in the sense that I have indicated, for if there had been none, then the daughter's share was not extinguished and a portion of it came to the mother and from the mother there would be a devolution in respect of it on the Plaintiff, for it is not suggested that there was any adverse possession on the part of Defendant No. 1 against his mother.

We think that in the circumstances the proper course will be to send down the following issues for determination by the lower Appellate Court : (1) Whether having regard to all the circumstances it is to be inferred that there was an exclusion by Defendant No. 1 of the Plaintiff and her deceased sister, (2) If so, whether by adverse possession, (a) the Plaintiff's right to her share and (b) Tasarunnissa's right to her share became extinguished. This must be decided on the record as it stands and the return should be made within two months.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 10th of June 1910 against the order of Mr. F. Roe, District Judge of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 9th of May 1910.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Mr. J. W. Chippendale for the Appellant.

This Appeal is against an order of the District Judge of 24 Pergunnahs, dated the 9th May 1910, dismissing an application made by the Petitioner-Appellant to be declared an insolvent. The learned Judge has disposed of the application after examining the applicant alone and his judgment which is very brief is as follows :—
“The application is refused with costs. The property transferred to the mother is worth more than the debts and there is a legal presumption that the transfer was fraudulent. If the mother succeeds in establishing her right against the creditors, the debtor may apply again to be declared insolvent.” The Petitioner, the original applicant, has appealed and the appeal has been opposed by the creditors who opposed the original application.

In support of the Appeal, reliance is placed on the decisions of this Court in three cases reported in 15 Calcutta Weekly Notes and on another case reported in I. L. R. 32 Allahabad. The cases in 15 Calcutta Weekly Notes are Uday Chand Maity v. Ram Kumar Khara (1), Sheikh

SHEIKH GOLAM RAHMAN v. SHAIKH WAHED ALI.

Samiruddin v. Srimati Kadumoyi Dasi (2) and Kali Kumar Dás v. Gopi Krishna Ray (3) and the Allahabad case is Girwardhari v. Joy Narain (4). Relying on these decisions, it is contended on behalf of the Appellant that the learned District Judge was not justified in dismissing the application in the way in which he has done. It is contended that on an application for adjudication being made by a debtor, he is entitled to be adjudged an insolvent and that, under sec. 15 of the Act, the learned Judge cannot deal with the case in the way in which he has done in the present instance and dismiss the application on the ground that it may not have been made in good faith. We do not think it necessary to express any opinion on the broad contention which has been advanced before us but we would observe that the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court have noticed that an Insolvency Court has inherent powers to dismiss an application if it is not made with a bond fide view of obtaining an adjudication, but for an inequitable or collateral purpose; and it seems open to question whether, if on the facts before the Court it is clear to the Judge that the applicant is not an insolvent, the Court is, under the law, bound to adjudicate him an insolvent. But, in the present case, the learned Judge has really not gone into the application at all and we think, in consequence, that the case must be sent back for retrial. The evidence as recorded does not support the conclusion that the applicant is able to pay his debts nor is there anything to show on the face of the judgment that the grounds on which possibly the learned Judge might have arrived at the conclusion that the application was not bond fide are made out. In these circumstances, we think the Appeal must be decreed, the judgment and order of the lower Court must be set aside and the case sent back to that Court for decision according to law. Cos's will abide the result. We assess the hearing-fee in this Court at two gold mohurs.

Where at the trial of a gomastha for criminal breach of trust under sec. 408, Cr. P. C., the Magistrate having suggested that the matter should be settled out of Court the accused executed out of Court a mortgage bond in favour of his master for the amount embezzled, and the prosecution was dropped and the accused was acquitted or discharged, though the withdrawal of the prosecution was not mentioned in the mortgage bond as forming part of the consideration :

Per CARNDUFF, J.—It is against public policy to compound a criminal case which is declared to be non-compoundable by the Criminal Procedure Code and an agreement to that end is wholly void in law.

WILLIAMS v. BAYLEY (2) referred to.

The circumstance that the Magistrate wrongfully suggested or sanctioned the compromise makes no difference.

COLLINS v. BLANTERN (6) relied on.

SHEIKH NUBBEE BUKSH v. MUSST. BIBEE HINGON (1) not followed.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 15th of November 1909 against the decree of Mr. F. Roe, District Judge of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 1st of June 1909, confirming a decree of Babu Basanta Kumar Pal, Munsif of Basirhat, dated the 23rd of December 1909.

The Defendant was the Plaintiffs' tehsildar and was suspected of embezzling a large sum of money and was arrested by order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Basirhat. This case was subsequently transferred by the order of the High Court to Baraset. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Baraset before whom the case was pending for trial suggested that the case was one which might properly be settled out of Court. Accordingly the Defendant after consultation with his legal adviser entered into an agreement to pay Rs. 800 to the Plaintiffs in instalments, the whole sum being charged on Defendant's property. The present suit was instituted to recover Rs. 700, the balance left after an alleged payment by the Defendant of one instalment of Rs. 100 only. The defence inter alia was that the Defendant had been induced by undue influence to execute the mortgage and that no portion of the amount mentioned in the bond was due from him to the Plaintiffs. The Munsif upon the evidence found that the Defendant had not been induced to execute the bond by undue influence and he further held that there was consideration for the bond and in that view he decreed the suit.

On appeal the plea of undue influence was abandoned and the only point argued was that the agreement resulting in the bond was contrary to public policy and hence the bond was not enforceable. The District Judge upon this plea observed that the Magistrate charged with the maintenance of the criminal law in this case virtually told the Plaintiffs "the criminal law will be satisfied if your servant makes restitution to you"; and accordingly the Plaintiffs accepted from their servant not immediate restitution but an assurance of ultimate restitution. In such circumstance the learned District Judge held that his conscience felt no repugnance to such an agreement and he failed to see any danger to the public good in it. He also relied on Sheikh Nubbee Buksh v. Musst. Bibee Hingon (1) and affirmed the decree of the Munsif. The Defendant preferred this Second Appeal.

certain moneys collected in the course of his duty. The Magistrate before whom the case was being tried, suggested, after having drawn up a charge, that the matter was one which might appropriately be settled out of Court. Accordingly the matter was settled out of Court. The Appellant executed a mortgage bond for the amount embezzled, and, though the withdrawal of the criminal prosecution is not mentioned in the instrument as forming part of the consideration, the prosecution was in fact dropped by the Respondent after the execution of the deed, and the Appellant was then acquitted or discharged. The suit out of which this appeal arises, was afterwards brought upon the mortgage bond executed in the circumstances just described, and it has been decreed by both the Courts below. The Defendant has now preferred this Second Appeal to the High Court.

In my opinion, the Appeal clearly must be allowed. The lower Appellate Court has held that no general rule as to what is, or what is not, contrary to public policy can be, or has been, laid down, and, relying on Sheikh Nubbee Buksh v. Musst. Bibee Hingon (1), has declared that its conscience felt no repugnance towards the agreement between the Respondent and the Appellant, and that it entirely failed to see any danger to the public good therein. Now, the case cited by the learned District Judge stands, as far as I know, absolutely alone, and it appears to me to run counter to the trend of all authority. It is a case, moreover, of 1867, that is to say, at a time when the law on the subject had not been codified by the Indian Contract Act of 1872 and when the Code of Criminal Procedure in force contained no provision such as that to be found in sec. 345 of the present Code for the compounding of offences. The law, therefore, as to when there might be a compromise in a criminal case was not settled, and the law as to agreements contrary to public policy was probably equally unsettled. Now, we have for our guidance sec. 345 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1898 and sec. 23 of the Indian Contract Act of 1872 with its Ill. (h), and there can, so far as I can see, be no doubt as to what the legal position is.

The broad principle is laid down by Lord Westbury in Williams v. Bayley (2), and the learned District Judge has himself referred to that decision, although he seems to have failed to appreciate its effect. If a criminal case is declared to be non-compoundable, then it is against public policy to compound it, and any agreement to that end is wholly void in law. Criminal breach of trust is (see sec. 345 of the present Code of Criminal Procedure) non-compoundable, either with or without the sanction of the Court. Keir v. Leeman (3), which was affirmed by the Exchequer Chamber in Keir v. Leeman (4), and followed by the Court of Appeal in Windhill Local Board of Health v. Vint (5) is ample authority for holding the view that the circumstance that the Magistrate wrongfully suggested or sanctioned the compromise makes no difference whatever. And the principle, established by Collins v. Blantern (6) that illegality may be pleaded as a defence to an action on a bond, has been so often recognised and is so well settled that it would be useless to enter into any discussion regarding it.

This Appeal, therefore, must be allowed, the decrees of the Courts below discharged and the Respondents' suit dismissed with costs throughout.

CHAPMAN, J.—I agree but desire to carefully confine my reason for holding that the bond was void to the ground that the consideration for the bond was found by the lower Court to be a promise to withdraw from the prosecution in a case the compromise of which is expressly forbidden by the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Appeal allowed.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal on behalf of the Plaintiff in an action for rent. The sole point in controversy relates to the rate at which the Plaintiff is entitled to realise rent in view of sec. 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Plaintiff is an occupancy raiya and the Defendants are under-raiyas under him. The Defendants were on a previous occasion sued in ejectment; they then pleaded that they held these lands on payment of rent at the rate of Rs. 10 a year. On the present occasion the Plaintiff claims at the rate of Rs. 14 a year. The defence is that under sec. 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act he is not entitled to claim rent at a higher rate than Rs. 3-5-7. This contention was overruled by the Court of first instance and a decree was made at the rate of Rs. 10 a year. Upon appeal the District Judge has allowed the contention of the Defendants to prevail. The question raised is apparently one of first impression and the solution must depend upon the true construction of sec. 48.

The Plaintiff has an occupancy holding which contains 12 kauris and 13 gundas of land. In his lease, the lands are classified and rent is assessed at rates varying from Rs. 2-4 to Re. 1 a kauri, the aggregate rent is stated to be Rs. 21-14 a year. The Defendants have taken a lease of one of these plots only, the rent whereof was assessed at Rs. 2-4 a kauri in the lease of the Plaintiff. The contention of the Defendant is that under sec. 48, cl. (b), the Plaintiff is not entitled to recover rent at a rate in excess of Rs. 2-13 a kauri. In our opinion there is no foundation for this contention.

Sec. 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides that the landlord of an under-raiyat holding at a money-rent shall not be entitled to recover rent exceeding the rent which he himself pays by more than 25 per cent. It will be observed that the section does not expressly mention the land held by the under-raiyat, but the meaning plainly is that the landlord of the under-raiyat who holds under a money-rent is not entitled to recover rent exceeding by more than a quarter the rent which he himself pays in respect of the land let out to the under-raiyat. It has not been disputed that in cases in which the land comprised in the holding of the raiyat is of different qualities and there is no indication to show at what rates the various classes of lands were assessed, sec. 48 cannot be made applicable, if only a part of the land has been sublet to an under-raiyat. But the learned Vakil for the Respondent has suggested that where, as here, on the face of the lease of the raiyat the rates at which the different classes of land were assessed can be determined, the under-raiyat is not bound to pay more than 25 per cent. of the rent assessed with respect to the parcels in his possession. This argument, in our opinion, is based on a fallacy. It cannot be affirmed that the under-raiyat pays so much rent for any particular parcel. No doubt for the purposes of the assessment of the aggregate rent, certain rates were taken as the basis of the calculation by the superior landlord. Nevertheless the raiyat holds the entire land of the holding for the aggregate amount. If he fails to pay any portion of this rent, the entire holding is liable to be sold, and he cannot clearly save any particular parcel out of the holding by payment of the rent assessed upon the land comprised therein. In our opinion, sec. 48 applies to cases in which the land held by the raiyat is co-extensive with the land held by the under-raiyat. The section was never intended to apply to cases of the class now before us.

We may add that in the course of the argument at the bar, reference was made to the decision of Mr. Justice Geidt in the case of Akhil Chandra v. Amjad Ali (1), where a question similar in scope to the one before us, appears to have been raised but not decided; that judgment, so far as it goes, supports the view we take.

The result therefore is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Court below set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs in this Court.

Appeal allowed.

(1) S. A. 415 of 1903, unreported, by Act III, B. C. of 1897), sec. 44—Distinction between gaming and wagering—Cotton gambling not a game of contest.

RAM PRATAP NEMANI v. KING-EMPEROR.

No form of betting or wagering without instruments other than rain-gambling is an offence as created by Act IV (B. C.) of 1866. Apart from legislation, rain-gambling is gaming only when a complete apparatus is used for the purpose, otherwise it is not.

Gaming is playing at any game, sport, pastime or exercise, lawful or unlawful, for money or any other valuable thing which is staked on the result of the game, i.e., which is to be lost or won according to the success or failure of the person who has staked.

QUEEN v. ASHTON (3), LOCKWOOD v. COOPER (4) referred to.

Wagering which includes betting is making a contract on an unascertained event past or future (in which the parties have no pecuniary interest other than that created by the contract) by which the parties are to gain or lose according as the uncertainty is determined one way or another.

CARLILL v. THE CARBOLIC SMOKE BALL CO. (5) referred to.

Cotton gambling is betting pure and simple. Books, papers, notice boards and lists of prices furnish evidence of gambling but are not instruments of gaming.

This was a Rule granted on the 6th of May 1912 against the order of Mr. E. Keays, 2nd Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, dated the 6th of May 1912, convicting the accused who took part in a certain form of gambling which has become well-known in Calcutta as "cotton gambling" under sec. 44 of Act IV of 1866 (B. C.), and sentencing them to one month's rigorous imprisonment each.

The facts of the case so far as they are material for this report appear from the judgment.

Mr. B. C. Mitter, Standing Counsel with Mr. S. Roy, appeared to show cause.

Messrs. Jackson, St. John Stephen C. R. Dass and K. N. Chaudhuri with Babu Monmatha Nath Mukherjee appeared in support of the Rule.

[HOLMWOOD, J.—The question before us is purely one of law. To all intents and purposes cotton gambling does not come within the purview of Act IV of 1866. The question here is whether it is a gaming or wagering. Wagering has not been penalised in Bengal.]

Mr. Mitter—My contention is that it is gaming and not wagering.

[HOLMWOOD, J.—How can you say that after what the Bombay High Court had decided in Queen-Empress v. Narottamdas Motiram (1) about rain-gambling?]

That stands on a different footing. Rain-gambling does not depend on the manipulation or anything done by the parties.

[HOLMWOOD, J.—Nor does it here.]

In gaming they required some instruments whereas in wagering one need not have anything at all. Now the question arises what are the instruments here. He relied on the case, Anonymous Reference by the Recorder of Rangoon (6), which was a case of lottery. The present case was much stronger. The Legislature has by implication accepted the construction of law in Anonymous Reference by the Recorder of Rangoon (6), for when an exposition of law has been made and in subsequent legislation that is not reversed, the presumption is that the Legislature knows it and has impliedly given sanction to it.

[HOLMWOOD, J.—Mr. Justice Stephen says in Hari Singh v. Jadu Nandon Singh (2), that although contest is not necessary, a complete apparatus used for the purpose is necessary. Here there are no instruments at all. These papers and books are purely evidence and not instruments.]

Referred to the meaning of "gaming" according to the dictionary and said that it meant an agreement between two or more persons to risk any money in a contest or chance of any kind when the one must be a loser and the other a gainer. He also cited Tollett v. Thomas (7).

Mr. Jackson in reply pointed out that the intention to commit a wrong might be no element of a wager. He cited authorities and relied mainly on the following cases: In re Hallett's Estate (9), Queen-Empress v. Govind (10), Queen-Empress v. Kanji (11), Emperor v. Iri-bhovandas (12), Emperor v. Jusab Alli (13).

Cur. Adv. Vult.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The question upon which this Rule was issued is whether a certain form of gambling which has become well-known in Calcutta as Cotton Gambling comes within the provisions of sec. 44 of Act IV of 1866, as amended by Act III of 1897 (B. C.).

We may safely say at the outset that this is a pure question of law, and has nothing to do with the nature and effect of the particular form of gambling now under consideration, which may be, and in our opinion is, a most pernicious form of gambling, and yet may not be rendered penal by the Act under which these convictions have been held.

The offence which is created by sec. 44 of the Calcutta Police Act is that of owning or keeping, or being employed in, a common gaming house, or advancing or furnishing money for the purpose of gaming with persons frequenting that house.

The question then that arises in this case is whether the premises in which the Defendants carried on this cotton gambling is a "common gaming house" within the definition given in the Act. That definition is: "The words 'common gaming house' shall be taken to mean any house, room or place in which cards, dice, tables or other instruments of gaming are kept or used for the profit or gain of the person owning or using such house, room or place, whether by way of charge for the use of the instruments of gaming, or of the house, room or place or otherwise." (Sec. 3, Act IV of 1866). By Act III (B. C.) of 1897, the following was added to the definition of "common gaming house," in sec. 3 of the Calcutta Police Act, 1866: "or in which rain-gambling, that is to say, wagering on the occurrence or non-occurrence of rain, is carried on for the profit or gain of any such person as aforesaid;" (2) after the said definition was inserted: "gaming" shall include rain-gambling, "instruments of gaming" shall include books or registers in which rain-gambling wagers are entered, all other documents containing evidence of such wagers, and anything used as a means of rain-gambling. Clearly, therefore, by this enactment, the Legislature declared that it was doubtful whether rain-gambling came within the scope of the Act before this amendment, and if it was doubted there could be no conviction.

In the year 1889, the Bombay High Court had held in the case of Queen-Empress v. Navottamdas Motiram (1), that Bombay Act IV of 1887, a similar Act to the Calcutta Police Act, did not apply to betting and that there was no law in India which made betting illegal. There is a distinction between betting and gaming, and to constitute a game there must be a contest and an active participation of certain persons is also necessary. Merely watching the rainfall was no contest and no active participation taken by the bettors. Rain betting is, therefore, not a game, and the place where it is carried on is not a "common gaming house." In the year 1904, seven years after the amending Act III of 1897 dealing with rain-gambling had been passed, this ruling was considered by a Bench of this Court in the case of Hari Singh v. Jadu Nandon Singh (2), where it was held that the machine known as "little horses" was an instrument of gaming, and that the act complained of was done in a public place.

These, as pointed out by Ghose, J., were the only points for decision, and he held that the question decided in the Bombay case, which was much pressed before this Court, was not in point, as it certainly is not, if the ratio decidendi is confined to the dicta which we have cited above from the placitum. But it was pointed out in a concurrent judgment by Stephen, J., that the Bombay Court had gone further, and he felt bound to express doubts which he felt as to the soundness of the judgment in Queen-Empress v. Navottamdas Motiram (1).

We do not quite follow him in his dictum that a more satisfactory distinction between gaming and betting is to be found by considering the popular rather than the scientific use of the word "game."

He lays down, as all the cases have laid down, that the Gambling Act has nothing to do with betting or wagering which may be considered synonymous terms. It is concerned only with gaming. It would appear, therefore, that all forms of betting and wagering which do not depend on the manipulation of instruments of gaming are excluded from the Act. He clearly holds that apart from legislation, rain-gambling is gaming if a complete apparatus is used for the purpose, otherwise it is not. Here we are in entire agreement with him, and we are not prepared to hold that the Bombay case, so far as it decided that a special apparatus consisting of a gutter and a rain gauge used for the purpose of gambling and for no other purpose is not an instrument of gaming, was rightly decided.

But we cannot agree that the difference between gaming and betting depends on the event on which the bet is made. Betting must always be on an uncertain event, and betting in itself, apart from stakes being laid on a particular game or instrument of gaming in a public place, is not penal. Playing cards for money, whatever the game, is not penal, unless the game is played in a public place. Playing with cards, dice or money is penal, if done in a public place, whether it is ostensibly for money or not. It may be that horse-racing, if it degenerates into nothing but an occasion for betting, becomes gaming, but that is because the race-horses may, as Stephen, J., points out, then probably become instruments of gaming. We do not say that they do, but the criminality, if any, lies not in betting but in placing stakes publicly upon instruments of gaming for the pecuniary benefit of those who keep the racing establishment.

The offence as created by the Calcutta Act is a purely technical one and nothing has ever been done on this side of India to include any form of betting or wagering without instruments in the offence, except in the single case of rain-gambling without a machine, and in order to include this, extraordinary legislation has had to be undertaken to make the books and registers in which rain-gambling wagers are entered, and all other documents containing evidence of such wagers, instruments of gaming.

This they could not possibly be except for this express enactment, for evidence of a transaction cannot be the causa causans or instrument for carrying out that transaction. This has a most important bearing on this case, since, as we shall presently see, the only alleged instruments of gaming produced in this case are the books and papers, notice boards and lists of prices, which furnish evidence of the gambling upon cotton quotations, which is the subject of this Rule.

This distinction between gaming and wagering is clearly laid down by certain English authorities and though the English statutes do not apply in this country the distinction between wagering and gaming which has never been defined in any Indian Act may very well be gathered from the considered findings of English Judges.

Gaming is playing at any game, sport, pastime or exercise, lawful or unlawful, for money or any other valuable thing, which is staked on the result of the game, i.e., which is to be lost or won according to the success or failure of the person who has staked. Queen v. Ashton (3), Lockwood v. Cooper (4). Wagering, which includes betting, is making a contract on an unascertained event past or future (in which the parties have no pecuniary interest other than that created by the contract) by which the parties are to gain or lose, according as the uncertainty is determined one way or the other, Carlill v. The Carbolic Smoke Ball Co. (5). The general effect of the legal meaning of these terms as interpreted by the Judges is well set out by Mr. C. F. Craes, the well-known authority on the interpretation of statutes, whose remarks we may adopt as expressing our own view on the subject. "It is somewhat difficult," he says, "exactly to define or adequately to distinguish these terms of allied meaning. The word 'game' is applicable to most pastimes and many sports irrespective of their lawful or unlawful character. 'Gaming' is now always associated with the staking of money or money's worth on the result of a game of pure chance or mixed skill and chance, and 'gambling' has the same meaning with a suggestion that the stakes are excessive, or the practice otherwise reprehensible, while 'wager' and 'wagering' are applied to money hazarded on any contingency in which the person wagering has no interest at risk, other than the amount at stake. Betting is usually restricted to wagers on events connected with sports or games, and 'lottery' applies to speculation to obtain prizes by lot or chance."

We mention this last because reference has been made at the Bar to the case of Anonymous Reference by the Recorder of Rangoon (6), dated July 28th, 1869, upon Act III of 1867, an Act which contained similar provisions to Act IV of 1866. There it was held that lottery tickets, by reference to which it is to be decided whether the holder or purchaser wins the whole or any part of any stake, are instruments of gaming, similar to cards. This is not a judicial decision, inasmuch as no specific case was before the Court, but any dictum of Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., and Dwarka Nath Mitter, J., carries with it weighty authority. But all that this amounts to is that a lottery is a game, inasmuch as an apparatus (usually a barrel) containing numbers corresponding to the tickets purchased by the shareholders is used for drawing and the drawers are players who are on the same footing as persons drawing from a pack of cards to see who gets the highest or lowest card. But we may accept this dictum without in any way impinging on the facts of this case. So it was held in Tollett v. Thomas (7) that a "pari mutual" for registering bets is an instrument of gaming; but it has never been held that a betting book or a notice in the newspapers giving the odds are instruments of gaming, though it has been held under a special Statute which has no application to India that boards showing the odds at race-courses are instruments of gaming. Now what are the facts here? People are invited to bet on the odds offered by the Defendant, who is pro tanto a book-maker, on certain figures. They can choose any figure from 1 to 10 or any combination of figures and they can wager any sum from 2 annas up to

Rs. 10, receiving a voucher in return on which is entered in one column the amount they have paid and in an opposite column the amount they will win if the result of the quotations for the day divided by 5 ends in the figure they have selected.

Exhibit 2 is one of these voucher books, and in the examples we have seen as much as 40 to 1 is given by the book-maker and the system seems perfectly open and above-board.

Five quotations appear to be received daily, two from New York, and two from some other American market, and there is one quotation which is known as 'spot,' but this is immaterial, as they are all of a similar character. At 12 o'clock daily the result of the addition of these five quotations divided by five is posted on a board, and those who have betted on the winning digit get the sum marked on their voucher. The odds given are so liberal that at first sight it would appear a very advantageous business for the bettors, but it is alleged in Exhibit 15, an extract from the Empire newspaper, dated February 17th, 1912, that wholesale cheating goes on in this respect, the winning number being surreptitiously changed, if too much money has been laid on it. How far these allegations are true, we are unable to say, but the allegations, as well as the article in which they are exhibited, are wholly irrelevant for the purposes of this case. What is charged in the newspaper is cheating and there is no charge of cheating before us, and it has been held on the highest authority in England and India, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Ramlol Thackoorsey Das v. Soojunmull Dhoondumull (8), that the question whether frauds might be committed or attempted from the desire of gain in such speculations was irrelevant, if the wager in question is not in itself illegal, and that it was for the Legislative Council in Calcutta to consider how far it may be conducive to the benefit of our Indian Empire to legislate on English lines against such wagers.

The judgment was pronounced by Lord Campbell in February 1848 and appears to have been speedily followed by the enactment of Act XXI of 1848, entitled an Act for avoiding wagers, which was passed by the Governor-General in Council on the 10th October 1848. This Act opens with the words: Whereas it is expedient to discourage gaming and wagering for money—thus making a clear distinction between the two, and it proceeds to make all agreements by way of gaming or wagering null and void. Its only other section abolishes the trial of issues on feigned wagers for ascertaining any disputed facts.

Having clearly recognised this distinction, the Legislature in India has made gaming in public places penal, and has, intentionally we must presume, refrained from passing any penal legislation against wagering or betting.

Finding that the system pursued in this cotton gambling appeared to be pure betting, we, at an early stage of the hearing, asked the learned Standing Counsel to have produced before us the exhibits to which Roman figures are attached which were alleged by him to be instruments of gaming. It was his first contention that the house was an instrument of gaming, but this proposition carries its own refutation on the face of it. The house is the place which is alleged to be a common gaming house and it has to be proved that (1) instruments of gaming were supplied for money or money's worth in that place, and (2) that that place is a public place. Now the alleged instruments of gaming are Exhibits 1 to 9 and they may be briefly described as follows:—

Exhibit 1 is a tin board hung up in the room containing the day's cotton figures. This is no more an instrument of gaming than the original telegram or an extract from a newspaper would be.

Exhibit 2: A similar wooden board hung up outside the premises in the open street and not challenged by the police authorities for several months.

Exhibit 3 is a canvas sign-board showing the name of the firm.

Exhibit 4 is a board showing the odds on a series of figures.

Exhibit 5 is a small board for writing the figure of the day. When seized this had on it 10/11.

Exhibit 6 is a small tin ticket with 9, the winning digit on it.

Exhibit 7 is a board giving the odds on place-betting.

Exhibit 8 is a board giving the odds on mixed double and triple events.

Exhibit 9: A box containing Rs. 410.

Every one of these things is exactly what may be found on the stall of any book-maker at the races, and though such boards may have been declared illegal in England, they have certainly not been made penal by any statute in force in Calcutta. What the effect of the introduction of the word "wagering" into the Bombay Act may be, it is not for us to enquire. They are mere evidence of gambling and are on exactly the same footing as the books and papers used for recording the bets.

In the case of rain-gambling these

REPORTS (See Index.)

WE HAD NOTICED SOME TIME AGO IN THESE columns the movement that has been gaining ground in England for bringing legal relief within the reach of poor people. Voluntary societies have been organised by young lawyers for giving legal advice and bringing legal remedies within their reach. We were apprehensive at first that the activities of these societies would go to increase litigation in the country. But we are glad to find that these poor men's lawyers not only protect the rights of the poor, but also discourage frivolous litigation. Their work is naturally meeting with general appreciation. We publish in another column a leading article from the Times which notices the excellent work that is being done by these societies. This leading English journal suggests that in England the Scotch system of helping poor men to avail themselves of legal remedies should be adopted and we see no reason why something similar may not be done in India. As the system is sufficiently explained in the article we would invite attention to it and commend it as a practical means of bringing justice within the reach of the humblest and the poorest of citizens.

IN MARKED CONTRAST WITH THE MOVEMENT IN England we find that some people in this city who are equally keen about bringing legal remedies within the reach of all at a moderate cost advocate the setting up in Calcutta of Courts of a lower status with judges of an inferior type dealing out justice to its citizens at a breakneck pace. Or in other words the suggestion is that there should be a City Court which, we presume, would be but a Small Cause Court of a magnified type with only higher jurisdiction. No one in England would ever dream of suggesting that the jurisdiction of the High Court should be ousted from the city of London and replaced by that of inferior Courts. But there are a class of people both here and in England who are for reducing everything in India to a lower level and, curiously enough, with the avowed object of securing efficiency.

THEY ARE BLIND TO THE FACT THAT JUDGES of inferior qualification will neither be able to dispose of contested cases any quicker than High Court Judges of much greater ability nor would the public be satisfied with the quality of justice that they would get from inferior Courts. It is a well-known fact that a contested case is disposed of on the Original Side of the High Court much more speedily than in any mofussil Court. So the remedy lies not in reducing the status of the Court or the qualification of the Judges but in cheapening the legal procedure. We would not at all object if strict limitations were imposed in respect of lawyers' fees and measures were adopted for the strict enforcement of rules or regulations that may be made in this behalf. We had in these columns complained last year about high fees. There are indications already that people are coming to realize that they have been appraising legal advice and services at a fictitious value and fees are already falling on the Original Side. We think much more may be achieved by Judges not observing any distinction between juniors and seniors and taking their cases and argument at their real worth. If this is done legal fees would soon automatically come down to a reasonable level.

WE HAVE SHOWN IN OUR LAST ISSUE BY REFERENCE to the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure itself how the interpretation put upon secs. 96 and 105 of the Code by the Judicial Committee in Clarke v. Brojendra Kishore Roy Chowdhury (16 C. W. N. 865) is not warranted by either the spirit or the language of the provisions of the Code or its Forms and Schedules. If the Hon'ble Judges of the Calcutta High Court had alone and for the first time held that the power under sec. 96 of the Code of issuing search warrants must be exercised by a Magistrate acting as a Court and in connection with a judicial proceeding, the question might have been open to doubt and the dictum of the Judicial Committee would, perhaps, have caused less surprise. But referring to the judicial interpretation placed on the section during a period extending to nearly half a century, we find a perfect unanimity amongst all the High Courts in India in this respect.

IN THE CODE OF 1861, THE USE OF THE EXPRESSION such thing in the corresponding section served to indicate that the search was to be for a specific thing. Seton Karr and Hobhouse, JJ., in Queen v. Syed Hossain, (1867) 8 W. R. Cr. 75, held that the section contemplated the production of some specified object such as a blood-stained knife, a forged document, which might be deemed essential to the conduct of an enquiry and conviction of the accused. The learned Judges observed that "It could scarcely have been the intention of the Legislature to empower Police officers or other underlings to make harassing domiciliary visits." In re Ahmed Mohamad, (1887) I. L. R. 15 Cal. 109, although Norris and Ghose, JJ., were only incidentally called upon to consider the validity of a search warrant under sec. 96, there can be no question from their observations that the issue of a search warrant was, in their opinion, a judicial act and such warrants could only be issued after judicial enquiry, upon proper materials and for specific things.

IN THE MADRAS HIGH COURT THEIR LORDSHIPS Sir Arthur Collins, C. J., and Mutusami Ayyar, J., in Queen-Empress v. Mohuni of Tinupati, (1889) I. L. R. 13 Mad. at p. 20, laid down the law with regard to the issue of search warrants under sec. 96 of the Code in the following terms:—"The Magistrate is entitled, in our judgment, to act upon information which he considers credible provided that there is a complaint before him and the complainant is examined by him in solemn affirmation in the manner prescribed by the Code of Criminal Procedure."

THE BOMBAY HIGH COURT ALSO FOLLOWED THIS Madras decision in the case of Harilal Buch, (1897) I. L. R. 22 Bom. 949. Parsons, J., says at p. 956, that there must be a complaint on oath. In this case the information had been conveyed by a telegram and his Lordship held that the telegram could not be regarded as a legal information as contemplated by the expressions "information has been laid (or complaint has been made)" in Sch. V, Form viii. The only information upon which the Magistrate can act under the Code . . . is a complaint . . . as to which see sec. 4 (a) and sec. 200," (C. Cr. P. 1882). Or, in other words, the complaint must be in writing signed by the Magistrate and the complainant. This decision was followed by the Calcutta High Court in the case of Rash Behari Mondal (12 C. W. N. 1075 at p. 1079) in 1908, where Stephen and Holmwood, JJ., held that the District Magistrate on receiving information of the commission of an offence cannot issue search warrant under sec. 96 (1) of the Code before he has acted judicially upon the information so received. Thus it will be seen that all the leading High Courts in India have uniformly held for nearly half a century that the issuing of a search warrant is a judicial act and that Magistrates should not issue such warrants or hold searches themselves before recording a judicial proceeding and satisfying themselves that there are good grounds for the issue of search warrants.

IT IS A WELL-KNOWN CANNON OF INTERPRETATION of statutes that when any provision of a statute has been interpreted by the superior courts in a particular way and the Legislature in amending the statute from time to time, have not interfered with the interpretations in any way, it is to be presumed that the Legislature has accepted that interpretation as the correct interpretation of the law. The Madras and Bombay interpretations above referred to were given prior to the amendment of the Code in 1898 and it must be presumed that the Indian Legislature has regarded them as the proper interpretation of sec. 96 of the Code. In this connection, we may quote the high authority of Lord Justice James in Ex parte, Campbell, in re Cathcart, L. R. 5 Ch. Ap, p. 703. At p. 706, His Lordship concludes the judgment by saying:—

"Where once certain words in an Act of Parliament have received a judicial construction in one of the Superior Courts, and the Legislature has repeated them without any alteration in a subsequent statute, I conceive that the Legislature must be taken to have used them according to the meaning which a Court of competent jurisdiction has given to them."

THE EVIDENT OBJECT OF THE CODE OF CRIMINAL Procedure in providing that search warrants under sec. 96 may only be issued by Courts or Magistrates acting judicially is that the Magistrates should not act hastily or thoughtlessly in the matter. It is a very large power and may be used to the great annoyance of people against whom such processes may be issued. It is highly desirable in the public interest that if any informer or other evil-minded person negligently, falsely or maliciously sets the law in motion, the person who may be harassed in this way ought to have his legal remedies against such person. If the Magistrate records the information or complaint on oath as the law provides, there would be chance of the process being abused. A man whose house may be unnecessarily searched would in such case have his remedies against a man who falsely accused him before a Magistrate. We fail to see how public safety would suffer if Magistrates performed their duties in accordance with the law. When the Judicial Committee is of opinion that in making a general search even for concealed military stores under the Arms Act a Magistrate must record his grounds of belief before holding such searches, surely, searches under the Code of Criminal Procedure must not be of a more urgent nature so as to justify any searches without recording any proceeding as is required by the Code.

IN THE JUNE NUMBER OF THE Columbia Law Review, a writer (Henry Winthrop Ballantine) discusses the subject of "Martial Law" in regard to which there seems to be no difference between the English and the American standpoints. He divides the subject into two parts: I. Martial Law in times of peace. II. Martial Law in times of War. Upon the first topic, the writer vigorously combats the opinion of Holmes, J., which prevailed in the Supreme Court in Moyer v. Peabody, (1909) 212 U. S. 78, who observed: "When it comes to a decision by the head of the State upon a matter involving its life, the ordinary rights of individuals must yield to what he deems the necessities of the moment. Public danger warrants the substitution of executive process for judicial process." This, the writer points out, is opposed to what has up till now been regarded as a fundamental principle of English Constitutional law, viz, that a Military Commander may be held accountable after the exigency has passed, either by prosecution in the Criminal Courts or by civil action at the instance of the parties aggrieved, and compelled to show reasonable ground for believing that the infringement of personal and property rights was demanded by the occasion.

OR, IN OTHER WORDS, AS THE AUTHOR SAYS LATER ON, "the jurisdiction of the Courts is merely postponed not ousted. The exercise of the supreme force of the State is at all times guided by law, not by executive discretion, and remains subject to judicial investigation and review." The true view, the writer concludes, is that "during a riot or other disturbance, militia men and their officers are authorised to act merely as a body of armed police with the ordinary powers of police officers. Their military character cannot give them indemnity for unreasonable excess of force. The Governor of a State, as Commander of the militia is merely the Chief Conservator of the Peace, and entirely destitute of power to proclaim Martial Law, (so that such proclamation or command alone should take the place of a Statute) punish criminals or subject citizens to arbitrary military orders which he unreasonably believes to be demanded by public emergency."

WITH REGARD TO THE SUPPOSED SPECIAL APPLICABILITY of Martial Law in times of War, (due, it may be, to foreign invasion or to civil disturbance) the writer states the correct view of the law to be that "Citizens cannot be arrested, deported, imprisoned or put to death by arbitrary military authority when war is raging any more than during a state of peace and the fact that the Courts are closed or that a proclamation of Martial Law has been made will not justify a resort to the arbitrary unregulated exercise of military power." In this connection, the writer notices the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Ex parte D. P. Marais, L. R [1902] A. C. 109; S. C. 6 C. W. N. lvii, where the Judicial Committee held that Martial Law having in fact been declared (during the Boer War) in certain districts of the Colonies of Natal and Cape Colony, the Courts ought not to go into the question of the necessity of such proclamation or enquire into the acts of the military authorities in pursuance of it. The decision really amounted to holding that when actual war is raging Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to deal with military action and that a state of war exists whenever the military authorities choose to say so. This decision, the writer notices, was not based on the ground that the constitution does not follow the flag into foreign dependencies nor that the authority of Parliament had been exercised to supersede the established course of justice, nor that these districts were enemy territory in military occupation. The writer agrees with Sir Frederick Pollock who trenchantly observed that the decision misquotes and judicially repeals the Petition of Rights.

NO ONE WHO HAS STUDIED ENGLISH CONSTITUTIONAL law carefully will seriously question the soundness of the views expressed by the writer on both points. But that the latest pronouncements of the highest Courts of the United States as well as of the British Empire should be in opposition to those views is significant as indicating the reactionary tendencies of the Courts which must in course of time yield to the dictates of reason and give effect to the considered opinion of jurists. The writer summarises his conclusions on this branch of the subject in the following words:—

The doctrine that when once the status of actual war is established by proclamation or otherwise, the Civil Courts have no more jurisdiction of military action toward citizens, is based on a misconception of the maxim "Inter armis silent leges," which means merely that between enemies the law of war, a branch of International Law, governs combatants and non-combatants; it clearly does not mean that on the occurrence of war, the Government of England, of the United States, or of a State can by proclamation be converted into a military despotism.

In a garrisoned city, held as an outpost of loyal territory, or in home districts threatened or recently evacuated by the enemy, military necessity for the public defence would certainly justify all temporary restrictions on the liberty of citizens essential to military operations, such as the extinguishment of lights, the requiring of military passes to enter or depart, and the quelling of public disorder. But the prosecution and punishment of persons suspected of conspiracy, sedition, or disloyal practices, and of treason itself, belong to the tribunals of the law, and not to the sword and bayonet of the military. Where the army is not invading enemy territory of a recognized belligerent, but is in its own territory, the military authorities remain liable to be called to account either in habeas corpus or any other judicial proceeding for excess of authority toward citizens, no matter whether it occurred in propinquity to the field of actual hostilities or while the Courts were closed, or after a proclamation of Martial Law.

COMMISSIONS FOR THE EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES IN CRIMINAL CASES.

Criminal Courts are sometimes called upon to decide whether a particular witness should not be allowed to be examined on commission. The matter seems to be one which deserves careful consideration and it may be useful to examine the law on the subject.

In the first Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV of 1861) there was no provision for the issue of a commission for the examination of a witness in a criminal case. The Code of 1872 (sec. 330) for the first time provided for the issue of a commission under certain circumstances to a District Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class in whose jurisdiction the witness might be, but the power to issue such commissions was given to High Courts and Courts of Sessions only. This Code was amended by Act XI of 1874 and power was given to the High Courts to issue commissions to Police Magistrates (corresponding to the present Presidency Magistrates) for the examination of witnesses within the local limits of their Ordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction. The High Courts Criminal Procedure Act was passed in 1875 to regulate the procedure of the High Courts in the exercise of their Original Criminal Jurisdiction and sec. 76 provided for the issue of commissions by High Courts for the examination of witnesses. In 1877 the Presidency Magistrates Act was passed and it gave power to Presidency Magistrates to issue such commissions (secs. 157 and 158). The Criminal Procedure Code of 1882 which practically repealed the whole of the High Courts Criminal Procedure Act and the Presidency Magistrates Act consolidated the various provisions of the law relating to commissions (Chap. XL, secs. 503—508) and authorised a District Magistrate to issue a commission in addition to the Courts already empowered under the Acts which this Code superseded. Doubts have however been expressed as to the power of a Presidency Magistrate to issue a commission for the examination of a witness within his own jurisdiction (Hem Coomari Dass: I. L. R. 24 Cal. 551 : s. c. 1 C. W. N. 333).

By successive legislation the power to issue commissions has been extended to different Courts but the ground on which alone a commission can issue, namely, that the attendance of the witness in question cannot be procured "without an amount of delay, expense, or inconvenience which under the circumstances of the case would be unreasonable" has been the same throughout in the various enactments and it has all along been left to the discretion of the Court to decide whether the exemption from attendance at Court should be allowed to a particular witness or not.

The question becomes one of very great importance if the witness in whose favour such an exemption is asked for is a purdanashin lady.

The system of purda which is peculiar to this country makes it derogatory for a lady of position to appear in Court for examination as a witness and the first question that arises is, can a purdanashin lady summoned as a witness in a criminal case claim, as a matter of right, exemption from appearing in Court? The answer must be in the negative.

Some confusion has been caused by the erroneous report of a case decided by the Calcutta High Court published in I. L. R. 4 Cal. 20 (In the matter of Huro Sundary Chowdhurain). The headnote runs thus:—"A purdanashin woman summoned as a witness in a criminal case has a right to be exempted from personal attendance at Court and to be examined on commission." In this case the High Court on being moved made an order directing the Magistrate to issue a commission for the examination of the petitioner, Haro Sundary, but the learned Judges nowhere in the judgment reported laid down a broad proposition as to the right of a purdanashin lady in these matters. This case can be cited only as an instance in which the High Court on the application of a purdanashin lady directed the lower Court to issue a commission for her examination.

We next proceed to consider the point that has arisen for judicial determination from time to time, namely, whether the inconvenience to which a purdanashin lady is likely to be put if compelled to appear in Court is such as may justify a Judge or Magistrate in making the exemption contemplated by sec. 503, Cr. P. C., on the ground that the inconvenience "under the circumstances of the case would be unreasonable."

Although our Courts have always shown the most anxious consideration for the peculiar customs prevailing in the country we do not find in the reports any other instance except the one already noted (I. L. R. 4 Cal. 20) in which a commission was issued for the examination of a witness on the ground of her being a pardanashin lady, although in every case the lower Court was directed to make special arrangements for the examination of such a witness.

Not long after the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Huro Sunday's case the High Court at Allahabad had to consider the application of a pardanashin lady who being a complainant in a criminal case prayed for being examined on commission in support of the charge brought by her (In the matter of Faridunnissa, I. L. R. 5 All. 92). In disposing of the application Straight, J., observed:—"I always have been and always shall be, to the fullest extent possible, consistently with common sense, ready and willing to make every concession I can, in the administration of justice, to the customs and prejudices of Hindus and Mahomedans alike. . . . I admit to the full the necessity for still preserving a tenderness and sympathy for ideas and notions some of which to the European mind might seem absurd, and indeed it is my duty to do so."

The application for the issue of a commission was however rejected on the ground that "the fact of her being a person who had set the criminal law in motion materially altered her position" as regards the question under consideration. Nevertheless the Magistrate was directed to "allow her to be brought into his room at the Court-house in her palki and if this was not feasible to make such other arrangements as might enable her to remain in it and strictly preserve her privacy and subject her to the least inconvenience or annoyance for the purpose of recording her evidence according to law in the presence of the accused after identification by some approved female witness."

The next case was in the Calcutta High Court, (In the matter of the petition of Din Tarini Debi, I. L. R. 15 Cal. 775). The Petitioner, a respectable Hindu lady with a considerable income from zemindary and other sources living at a distance of thirty-seven miles from Calcutta, was summoned by the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta to give evidence before him in Court in a certain case. She applied for the issue of a commission but the Magistrate refused to make the order prayed for. The learned Judges while observing "that in matters of procedure the customs and habits of the people should be taken into consideration" did not make any order for the issue of a commission but directed the Magistrate to examine the Petitioner in a house to be taken by him, not far from the Court-house.

In Basanti Bihi, I. L. R. 11 All. 69, Straight and Tyrell, JJ., remarked "Although there is no provision in the Criminal Procedure Code which protects pardanashin ladies from appearing in a Court of Justice, nevertheless it is very undesirable to compel the attendance of such persons." The lower Court was directed to make arrangements so as to take the lady's evidence either in an empty Court-room in the presence of himself, the accused and the pleader for the prosecutor or if no empty Court-room was available, in the Magistrate's own private room or some other room in the Court building.

An order similar to that made in Din Tarini Debi, I. L. R. 15 Cal. 775, for the examination of the witness in a house taken by her, not far from the Court, was passed in the case of Hem Coomari Dassi, I. L. R. 24 Cal. 551: S. C. 1 C. W. N. 333, which has already been referred to in another connection. In this case their Lordships considered the legality of giving directions to the lower Courts for making special arrangements and held that it was quite within the province of the High Court, having regard to the powers conferred by the Charter, to direct the Magistrates as to the mode in which the evidence of a particular witness might and should be taken.

In this state of the case law which seems to lay down that a pardanashin lady as such is not entitled to the benefit of a commission, witnesses of this particular class must find themselves at a peculiar disadvantage. It would be impossible for any one acquainted with the habits and customs of the people of this country to conceive of anything more inconvenient for a pardanashin lady than to appear in a Court in the midst of surroundings to which she is quite unaccustomed and one is surprised to find that the words "inconvenience which under the circumstances of the case would be unreasonable" have not enabled Courts, not usually inclined to disregard the peculiar conditions of life in this country, to make the concession contemplated by the section in favour of this class of witnesses. The wording of the section (503) may be plain enough but the case-law on the subject which undoubtedly shows that in its practical application considerable difficulty has been experienced renders it necessary that the Legislature should recast it so as to give greater protection to witnesses of the pardanashin class.

The Indian Law Commissioners in their report, dated the 14th October 1837, after remarking that "law-givers ought not to disregard even the unreasonable prejudices of those for whom they legislate" suggested that "the peculiar state of public feelings in this country may render it advisable to frame the law of procedure in such a manner that families of high rank may be dispensed as far as possible from the necessity of performing acts which are here regarded, however unreasonably, as humiliating;" and the Legislature has expressly recognised the existence of a strong feeling in Indian society against pardanashin ladies appearing in public by exempting, as of right, women who according to the customs and manners of the country ought not to be compelled to appear in public, from personal appearance in Court in civil cases (sec. 132, Civil Procedure Code.)

No doubt in criminal cases a complainant and an accused occupy peculiar positions and it may be desirable to compel their appearance in Court in all cases without exception but so far as witnesses are concerned the law should be uniform in regulating the procedure in Civil and Criminal Courts.

The question of inconvenience from the point of view of witnesses in general apart from any custom in any particular society came up for consideration in Empress v. R. P. Counsell, I. L. R. 8 Cal. 896. In this case an application was made by one Mrs. Dunne, a resident of Darjeeling, who was one of the material witnesses for the prosecution in a case pending in the High Court in its original criminal jurisdiction, for the issue of a commission for her examination on the ground of her old age and ill health, but Wilson, J., refused to make the order prayed for. In Empress v. Balgangadhar Tilak, I. L. R. 6 Bom. 285, the High Court, however, directed the examination by commission of a witness who was a Government servant and who had executed a recognizance to appear and give evidence for the prosecution in a criminal trial to take place in the High Court Sessions but was ordered to a distant station on public service and could not with due regard to the public interests return to Bombay in time for the trial.

Another question of considerable importance, namely, the admissibility of evidence taken on commission issued by a Court other than that in which the evidence is sought to be used arose in the case of Queen-Empress v. A. M. Jacob, I. L. R. 19 Cal. 113, in which the accused was tried in the High Court Sessions before Mr. Justice Wilson on the prosecution of H. H. the Nizam of Hyderabad on a charge of criminal breach of trust. In this case during the course of the preliminary enquiry the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta issued a commission for the examination of the Nizam. The commission after execution was duly returned to the Magistrate and in the High Court the prosecution sought to put it in but was not allowed to do so, Wilson, J., holding that the evidence taken under that commission was admissible only in the enquiry before the Magistrate and not in the subsequent trial. The point has now been settled by the addition of cl. (2), sec. 507 in the Code of 1898, which provides that any deposition taken under a commission, if it satisfies the conditions prescribed by sec. 33 of the Evidence Act, may also be received in evidence at any subsequent stage of the case before another Court.

POOR SUITORS.

(From the Times, 24th June 1912).

It is an old saying that our Courts of Justice are open to all comers, but only in the same sense as are the best taverns or hotels. The suitor as well as the traveller or guest must pay, it may be, much and often. At each stage or step in litigation the State takes toll; there are fees to be paid; and he must find at his own expense remuneration for counsel, solicitors, and witnesses. Some Judges—for example, LORD LANGDALE—have condemned this system; justice ought, in their view not to be thus sold; the State ought not to impose taxes upon those who seek its aid. As far back as 1495 some measures were taken for the relief of poor suitors; and there exist ways and means of suing, as it is called, in forma pauperis. A statement of facts upon which the litigant relies is prepared; the opinion of counsel, founded upon that statement, to the effect that the suitor has reasonable grounds for bringing an action, is produced; and the Court exempts him from the payment of fees. It also assigns to him a counsel and solicitor. It is universally agreed that this system is very faulty. It permits the bringing of totally unfounded claims; for there is no examination of the truth of the statement submitted to counsel, which may be a tissue of falsehoods, and is at best pretty certain to be highly coloured. The system excludes many of those who might fairly be relieved from payment of fees. They may not be able truthfully to swear that they are not worth more than £25, though they may be quite unable to prosecute an action at their own expense. Often poor suitors have in their mind a lawyer not with the best professional reputation, who takes up the case with some sinister object in view or solely with an eye to his own interest.

The defects of this system have been among the causes which have created the "poor man's lawyer." In several parts of London and elsewhere young barristers and solicitors are doing excellent work in advising the poor whose rights are in question. Very often their influence is exercised in discouraging or stopping frivolous litigation, often in writing letters to the persons from whom redress is sought with good effect, and often in advising as to the proper legal remedies. In quiet ways an immense amount of excellent work is done by poor men's lawyers. But more than the voluntary efforts of private societies or individuals is needed; and the system which has existed in Scotland in one form or another since 1424 is a model well worthy of study. For centuries it has been the duty and privilege of young advocates and writers to the signet to give their services to poor suitors and to carry out a system based upon the principle "See that such as are in need and necessity have right," one which assumes that poor suitors have a call upon the services of counsel and solicitors in their early professional days and which has, by almost universal testimony, worked well. It prevents miscarriage of justice and the stifling of well-founded claims; it supplies an admirable school and training to the young lawyer; it enables him to put his foot on the first step of the ladder of advancement. "The agents for the poor," appointed under statutory powers, are a part of the Scotch system of procedure of which all concerned are justly proud. They work in connexion with the legal dispensaries, which act as advisers and conciliators, and with good effect. From the latest report of the Edinburgh Legal Dispensary it appears that in 1910-11 and 1911-12 1,290 and 1,180 clients were seen and received advice, with the result in a large number of cases of an amicable settlement.

It has long seemed to many English lawyers that the time has come for remodelling, in the light of the experience of other countries, the existing very imperfect rules as to pauper litigation. Some progress has been made in devising the outlines of a new system. Though the suggested rules have failed so far to recommend themselves to the whole Bar, the avowed objections relate for the most part to points of detail, as to which there may well be differences of opinion. The main idea of those who have put forward proposals on the subject is that there should be lists of solicitors and counsel willing to inquire into and report upon the application of any one to take proceedings as a "poor person," as well as lists of solicitors and counsel willing to assist those who have been permitted to sue in forma pauperis. The applicant will make, it is suggested, his request in a prescribed form, and his case will be sent for inquiry and report to one or more of those who are on the official lists. Their report, if favourable, will be submitted to the Court, which, if satisfied, will admit the applicant to the privileges of a poor suitor, and will assign to him a solicitor and a counsel. Under the present rules the applicant must swear that he is not worth more than £25—a limitation which is generally believed to operate unfairly. The nature of the proposed litigation ought not to be lost sight of. It may be of such a character that A. possessed of £50 to £70, is as little able to pursue his action in the ordinary way as B. worth only £20, whose remedy happens to be simple. Some persons might think that no hard-and-fast line as to means should be drawn. Others might suggest a sum far in excess of the present figure. Few, if indeed any, would say that it should be retained. Difficulties and differences of opinion arise when the question of costs to be allowed in the event of the pauper litigant succeeding is considered. Not a few would cling to the present practice according to which no remuneration for counsel or solicitors is recoverable; they dread the effect of a system under which the remuneration of the solicitor might depend upon results. Many points of detail call for careful study. The application of the proposed system to district registries and circuits presents difficulties; and it may be necessary, in order to complete the machinery, to appeal to the Treasury for assistance. But it will be a pity if dissension as to minor matters or intemperate or simulated desire for perfection at the outset should wreck a scheme which has so much to recommend it.

MAXWELL ON THE INTERPRETATION OF THE STATUTES. Fifth Edition. 1912. By the late F. Stroud. Sweet & Maxwell, Ltd., 3, Chancery Lane, London. Price 25s.

A work of this kind could not have been placed in abler hands than that of the late Mr. Stroud, the well-known author of the Judicial Dictionary, for bringing it up to date. The scheme of the work has been kept to the lines of the original work and the editor has added recent cases for further illustrating the principles. A work of established reputation of this kind does not afford much scope for any detailed review. To illustrate the clear terms in which the reasons of interpretation has been formulated in this work, we shall only refer to the question which has been brought to the fore by the recent Privy Council decision in Mr. Clarke's case as to what provisions of a Statute must be regarded as mandatory and what only directory. The law is thus explained at p. 599 of this edition. "Where powers or rights are granted with a direction that certain regulations or formalities shall be complied with, it seems neither unjust nor inconvenient to exact a rigorous observance of them as essential to the acquisition of the right on the authority." The Judicial Committee in Clarke v. Brojendra Kishore (reported in this issue) have affirmed the truth of this proposition by expressing their agreement with the majority of the Judges of the Calcutta High Court that the Magistrate, Mr. Clarke, not having recorded the grounds of belief prior to entering upon the premises of the Plaintiff, as is required by the Indian Arms Act, his entry and search for arms in the Plaintiff's premises could not be justified under that Act.

A HAND-BOOK OF CRIMINAL CASES. Being a reprint of Criminal Cases reported in the Indian Law Reports, 1907 to 1911. Compiled by Manibhai Vasantji Desai and Kishorabhai Ajubhai Patel. Baroda. 1912.

The book is what it purports to be—a verbatim reprint, not merely of the judgments reported in the Indian Law Reports for the years mentioned, but of the head-notes also and in many cases of the statement of facts as well. More consideration appears to have been shown in respect of the abstracts of argument which (so far as we have been able to examine them) have not, it appears, been similarly "lifted." But in reprinting the report of Emperor v. Abani Bhushan Chackerbutty, I. L. R. 37 Cal. 845, we notice that whilst the main argument of counsel for the accused and the Crown are omitted the former in reply is faithfully reported as citing the case of In re Alagirisawmy. This strikes us as somewhat clumsy even for an increasing class of publishers who make it their sole business to appropriate and utilize for their own profit the result of trouble and expense incurred by others. The publishers of this work very appropriately express their obligations to their printers through whose labours alone this work has come into existence.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before CARNUFF and CHAPMAN, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER No. 195 OF 1910. BENODE BEHARI BHADRA, Decree-holder, Appellant v. RAM SARUP CHAMAR, Judgment-debtor, Respondent. Heard, 21st and 25th June. Judgment, 25th June 1912.

Appeal, maintainability—Old and new Code of Civil Procedure—Execution sale, setting aside of—Fraud.

The appeal arose out of an application made on the 23rd July 1907 to set aside a mortgage sale under the provisions of secs. 244 and 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Petitioner was a minor and his allegation was that the deceased judgment-debtor (his father) died within 10 or 12 days after the date of the sale and that as such, by reason of his minority, he was not bound to make his application within the period of three years under Art. 178, Second Schedule of the Limitation Act. The sale took place on 17th September 1900.

The Court of first instance set aside the execution sale on the 6th July 1908, on the ground of fraud and material irregularity in publishing and conducting it. On appeal, the order was reversed and the case was remanded on the 6th November 1908 for further consideration. On remand the application was dismissed by the Court of first instance on the 12th June 1909. There was an appeal, and on the 29th January 1910 the original order was once more set aside and the case again remanded. The present second appeal was against the remand.

Held—That no second appeal lay.

That the words "present right of appeal in sec. 154 of the Code of Civil Procedure meant a right existing on the 1st January 1909 to appeal against a particular order passed under the former Code and subsisting on that date."

The provisions of sec. 6 of the General Clauses Act are limited by sec. 154 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885, sec. 87, cls. (2) and (3)—Non-transferable holding, mortgage of—Abandonment—Re-entry—Mortgage suit—Decree—Possession.

The Defendants were formerly the tenants of the Plaintiff in respect of a non-transferable raiyati holding. In 1897, the Defendants mortgaged the holding by way of conditional sale and put the mortgagee in possession. The Defendants then left the village without making any arrangement for the payment of the rent due to the Plaintiff. On the 7th Falgun 1306 (1900), one Nalin Nath executed a kabuliya in the Plaintiff's favour for a term of 5 years which expired before the present suit was brought. Two days after he acquired the mortgage interest from a mesne assignee and he then entered into possession of the holding. He remained in possession till the year 1904 when the Defendants brought a suit against him to redeem the mortgage. In that suit they were successful and upon payment into Court of the sum due upon the mortgage they were restored to possession. The Plaintiff then brought the present suit to recover possession on the footing that the Defendants had abandoned the holding and that as against him they had no right to evict Nalin Nath and take possession themselves. The first Court dismissed the suit holding that there had been no abandonment and that the relationship of landlord and tenant between the Plaintiff and the Defendants had never ceased and still subsisted. The lower Appellate Court came to a different conclusion. It found that the evidence established an abandonment of the holding by the Defendants in 1897 and upon that basis it made a decree in favour of the Plaintiff. The Defendants appealed to the High Court.

Held—Notice to the Collector under cl. (2) of sec. 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is important for the purpose of the suit which the tenant is allowed to bring under cl. (3) but is not essential to complete an abandonment and a landlord who has not given such notice is still at liberty to prove that an abandonment has in fact taken place.

Ram Pershad v. Jarwahid (12 C. W. N. 902) followed.

Whatever rights the Defendants might have had against Nalin Nath, as between the Plaintiff and the Defendants, the possession of Nalin Nath should be treated as possession of the Plaintiff and not of the Defendants. As against the Plaintiff the Defendants by their own act deprived themselves of the title which they once had and were in no better position than trespassers.

The payment of the mortgage debt did not give the Defendants any sort of equity against the Plaintiff.

have been specially made instruments of gaming by the Legislature in Act III (B. C.) of 1897, and it is, therefore, clear that they are excluded from the operation of the Police Act in the case of cotton gambling. To sum up, therefore, we find that this cotton gambling is not a lottery, it is not a game or contest, and it is not a form of gambling in which instruments of gaming are kept or used for the profit or gain of the person owning or using the place.

It is betting pure and simple, and if it gives rise to all the evils which are ascribed to it by the learned Magistrate, in his very thoughtful judgment, it is, as Lord Campbell said, for the Legislature to consider what measures should be taken to put a stop to it. Under the law as at present constituted, we are unable to find that any offence has been committed within the meaning of sec. 44, Act IV of 1866, as amended by Act III (B. C.) of 1897 and we accordingly make the Rule absolute, set aside the conviction and sentence, and direct that the Petitioner be acquitted and released. This judgment will govern Rule 637 which was issued on the same grounds.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 4, 36, 96, 105, 177, Schs. III, V, Form viii—

Search, Magistrate when may make—"Court," includes every Magistrate—Indian Arms Act (XI of 1878), sec. 25—Search for arms if may be made without specifying grounds—Judicial Officers Protection Act (XVIII of 1850), Magistrate issuing search warrants if protected by.

Where an offence against public tranquility was committed in a sub-division and the District Magistrate who was present there made a search of the cutcheries towards which the offenders were alleged to have fled, Held—That the District Magistrate was authorised by sec. 105 read with secs. 96, Sch. III and Form viii of Sch. V of the Criminal Procedure Code to hold the search.

The word 'Court' in sec. 96 includes every Magistrate and every Magistrate has the power to issue search warrants and make searches though the proceeding in connection with which the search is made may not yet have been instituted.

Semble—A Magistrate cannot make a search for arms under sec. 25 of the Indian Arms Act without complying with the preliminary condition laid down in that Act.

Semble—A Magistrate who makes a general search of a house in view of an enquiry under the Criminal Procedure Code acts in the discharge of his judicial function and may therefore claim the protection of Act XVIII of 1850.

These were two consolidated Appeals from two decrees of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, Appellate Civil Jurisdiction, dated the 20th of February 1909, which affirmed two decrees of the High Court in the exercise of its Extraordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, dated the 19th of June 1908.

The suit giving rise to the Appeal No. 65 of 1911 was instituted on the 25th of July 1907 in the Court of the 3rd Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh by the Respondent Brojendra Kishore Roy Chowdhury as Plaintiff, against the Appellant Loftus Otway Clarke as Defendant. The plaint alleged that the Respondent was a zemindar and had considerable zemindari property within the sub-division of Jamalpur in the District of Mymensingh and one of his principal zemindari cutcheries (places of business) was situated in the town of Jamalpur which is the headquarters of the said Sub-Division of Jamalpur; that the Appellant who was a member of His Majesty's Indian Civil Service was, at the time of the matters therein complained of, the District Magistrate of Mymensingh; that on the 28th April 1907 the Appellant accompanied by Mr. J. J. Barniville, the then Sub-Divisional Officer of Jamalpur, Mr. M. L. A. Luffman, the then District Superintendent of Police, Mymensingh, and other Officers and followed by a number of armed policemen and a number of Mahomedan rowdies carrying lathies (sticks) wrongfully trespassed into and invaded the Respondent's said cutchery where under the orders of the Appellant and in his presence those who accompanied him forcibly, wantonly and wrongfully broke open and smashed boxes and chests in the said cutchery, searched the contents thereof and in carrying out the search scattered destroyed and mutilated valuable zemindari papers and documents belonging to the Respondent; that the Appellant acted wrongfully and maliciously without any reasonable or probable cause and had no lawful excuse or justification or authority for so acting; and that by reason of the Appellant's acts therein complained of, the Respondent had been greatly humiliated in the estimation of the public and in particular of his tenants in the District of Mymensingh and had suffered damages. The Respondent prayed for a decree for Rs. 10,500 as* damages particulars of which were given in the plaint.

The Appellant filed his written statement setting out at some length what occurred at Jamalpur prior to the 28th of April 1908. He admitted that the search was in fact made and that it was made by his orders and under his directions but he pleaded that he was authorised to make the search under the Code of Criminal Procedure, secs. 94, 96, 105 and 165 or in the alternative under the Indian Arms Act, sec. 25 and that he was not liable to be sued by virtue of the provisions of the Act for the Protection of Judicial Officers. He denied that he acted maliciously or wrongfully or that any unnecessary or unavoidable force was used in making the search or that any damage was done to any place, box or thing in the said cutchery.

By an order, dated the 29th January 1908, the suit was transferred to the High Court at Calcutta.

After recording the oral and documentary evidence adduced by the parties Mr. Justice Fletcher who tried the suit delivered his judgment and passed a decree on the 24th of July 1908 awarding the Respondent Rs. 500 as damages and costs of the suit.*

Against the decree passed by Mr. Justice Fletcher the Appellant filed his Memorandum of Appeal and the Respondent filed his cross-objections. The Appeal and the cross-Appeal were heard by Maclean, C. J., Harington and Brett, JJ., of the High Court sitting in its Appellate Civil Jurisdiction who delivered their judgments on the 12th January 1909† the majority dismissing the appeal without costs.

The Appellant thereupon applied for leave to Appeal to His Majesty in Council but the High Court refused his application on the 13th of July 1909 on the ground that the case did not comply with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure to entitle him to a certificate under it.*

By an order of His Majesty in Council made on the 30th of June 1910 on the petition of the Appellant it was ordered inter alia that the Appellant should have special leave to appeal on his undertaking to abide by any order as to costs that their Lordships might see fit to make upon the hearing of his Appeal.

The suit in the Appeal No. 66 of 1911 was instituted on the 25th July 1907 in the Court of the 3rd Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh by the Respondent Srimati Bisweswari Debi Chowdhurani as Plaintiff against the Appellant Loftus Otway Clarke as Defendant. The allegations made and the reliefs sought by the Plaintiff as well as the Appellant's defence were similar to his defence stated in paragraph 4 hereof. The parties appear to have agreed to treat the suit in Appeal No. 65 of 1911 as a test case and the decrees and orders in this case were the same mutatis mutandis as those in the test case.

Sir E. Richards, K. C., with Mr. Brown for the Appellant submitted that the search in question did not constitute an actionable trespass. The Appellant's defences to the action were three, namely, (1) that being a District Magistrate of Mymensingh he acted under the powers conferred upon him by law and particularly by secs. 94, 96, 105 and 165 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; (2) in the alternative by sec. 25 of the Indian Arms Act, 1878; and (3) that he acted in discharge of his judicial duties and within the limits of his jurisdiction and was protected by the provisions of Act XVIII of 1850. Both Courts have found that the Appellant's act was bona fide and that there was no improper motive or malice in his conduct. The facts of the case were correctly stated in the judgment of Brett, J. Briefly stated, a riot had taken place in which 3 or 4 revolver shots were fired, one Moslem was wounded and serious breach of the peace was threatened. The District Superintendent of Police and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate reached the spot and report was made to them that the assailants had taken refuge in the Respondents' cutcheries, they called upon the men to open the cutcheries but they refused and fired shots instead, the Appellant received a wire—"Serious riot just, averted, come at once," he went immediately and heard all that had occurred. Under these circumstances the Appellant ordered and conducted the search complained of. There can be no doubt that the Respondents would not have produced the revolvers which had been used if a summons to produce them had been served upon them under sec. 94, Cr. P. C. At least the Appellant had reason to believe that. He therefore acted under sec. 96, Cr. P. C. The section is wide enough and empowers a Court to issue a search warrant or to conduct a search even when there is no trial or proceeding before that Court: sec. 105, Cr. P. C. The whole scheme of the Code is not to narrow the power of the Court but to widen it. The word "Court" and "Magistrate" are interchangeable in the Act.

Sir E. Richards.—No, there are classes

* 13 C. W. N. 1127 (1909).

of Courts described in the Act, and their powers are specified. Sometimes "Court" is used as in sec. 104 and sometimes "Magistrate" as in sec. 105. There is this distinction that when "Magistrate" is used the High Court and the Court of the Sessions Judge, etc., are excluded. Further, under the provisions of secs. 154, 155, 156 and 157, Cr. P. C., the Police has to send a report of every cognizable offence to a Magistrate, and under sec. 159. The Magistrate "may direct an investigation or if he thinks fit at once proceed to hold a preliminary inquiry into the case." The Appellant had received such a report. It was a verbal report which would be covered by the sections. A written report was not essential. Then again the District Superintendent of Police could make the search under sec. 165, Cr. P. C. The Appellant did little more than stand there although we do not deny that the Appellant did make the search. A cognizable offence had been committed. It was essential to arrest the criminals who had used the firearms and it was also necessary to prevent a further breach of the peace or commission of the crime. The District Magistrate is also a police-officer. Sec. 4 of the Police Act read with sec. 165, Cr. P. C., puts general control of the Police of the district under the District Magistrate.

Secondly, as to sec. 25 of the Arms Act (XI of 1878) it was not essential that the Appellant should make a record of the reasons for the search. The making of such a record was not a ground of jurisdiction. The record was meant for the information of the Executive Government. It was not intended for the protection of the subject. If it were, some form of record would have been provided. Sec. 26 of the Act shows that it was not meant for the protection of the subject as the Local Government can search without recording any reasons. The decided cases show that the provision was merely directory and not a condition precedent to the Magistrate's taking action. Reference was made to The Liverpool Borough Bank v. Turner (1), The Margate Pier Company v. Hannam (2), The King v. John Patteson (3); Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes (4th Edn.), p. 556.

Thirdly, in any case he was protected by sec. 1, Act XVIII of 1850. The functions both of the Police and the judiciary are combined in India in the person of the District Magistrate. The Appellant acted on a police-report and the information of the wounded man (Genda). At any rate he bona fide believed that he had jurisdiction to act as he did. He was acting in the discharge of a judicial duty. It was a judicial act. The cross-examination of the Appellant as to the nature of the act was very unfair. It ought not to have been allowed. Whether it was a judicial act or not is a matter of law and not of evidence. Throughout the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1908, the word "Magistrate" is convertible for a "Court." Vide secs. 32, 35, 36, Sch. 5. The Appellant proceeded under the Code. It must therefore be a judicial act. It has been held that an issue of a search warrant is a judicial act. Midland Railway Company v. Walton (4), Lea v. Charrington (5), In re Ahmed Mahomed (6). Even if a record of the reasons was a condition precedent under sec. 25 of the Arms Act, since the act itself was a judicial act the Appellant was possibly mistaken in his view. In any case he was protected. Seshaiyanger v. R. Raghunath Row (7).

Mr. Brown followed.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. (with Mr. J. M. Parikh).—There are concurrent findings of fact as to what the Appellant did at the search. He admits that he did not take cognizance of any case or offence. The only offence that was committed was in relation to Genda, who was wounded. The report of that offence was not sent by the Police prior to the 2nd May long after the search. As to the firing of the revolvers at the crowd or the officers nothing was done. No proceeding or inquiry regarding it was ever instituted. There was consequently no offence of which the Appellant could have taken cognizance under the terms of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—What was the Appellant doing then ?]

Mr. DeGruyther.—He wanted to search the houses of the Hindus purely as an administrative measure. He did not exercise any judicial judgment. He might possibly have done so, but as a fact he did not. Secs. 96 and 165, Cr. P. C., do not apply. Under sec. 96 it was essential that some proceeding must be pending before the Magistrate. Nor was action taken under sec. 165, Cr. P. C. Fletcher, J., found as follows:—"I am satisfied on the evidence that the search was not intended to be under the provisions of sec. 165. The search was for the purpose of discovering arms generally." This finding was affirmed by the Chief Justice and Harington, J., and the Appellant's evidence fully supports that finding. The case should therefore be governed by the ordinary law. The Appellant must justify his act by which he caused injury to another man's property by proof of some particular authority. All criminal proceedings under the Code are divided into four heads:—(1) investigation, (2) inquiry, (3) trial and (4) other proceedings. Before an act can be judicial, proceedings must commence before a Court or Magistrate in one or other of the ways provided by Ch. V (B), secs. 190—195, Cr. P. C. An investigation under the Act can be done by the Police only, and the Appellant had not taken cognizance of any offence under sec. 190 or sec. 200.

Mr. DeGruyther.—No, my Lord.

Mr. DeGruyther.—It is defined by sec. 4.

[LORD MACNAGHTEN.—It is not an exhaustive definition.]

If a Magistrate takes cognizance of any offence he must proceed under sec. 200. If he takes cognizance of his own knowledge or suspicion under sub-sec. 1, cl. (c), sec. 190, he must inform the accused that he is entitled to have the case tried by another Court, sec. 191. Further proceedings then follow as provided by sec. 200. In sec. 94 the word "such Court" means a Court sitting in a judicial capacity after having taken cognizance of an offence under sec. 190. It does not apply to a Magistrate who has not taken cognizance of an offence.

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—What is the use of a Magistrate then? A District Magistrate is responsible for the peace of the District.]

Mr. DeGruyther.—Yes, but he must act under the powers given to him by the Legislature. Sec. 96 must be read with sec. 94 which is limited to cases before the Court and in which a summons will not be effective. The Court must be seised of some inquiry, trial or proceeding. This view is supported by Rash Behary Lal v. Emperor (8).

[LORD MACNAGHTEN.—There was no inquiry of any sort in that case.]

Mr. DeGruyther.—The ground of decision was that he was not seised of the case, Re Hari Lal Buch (9).

[LORD MACNAGHTEN.—There again no inquiry seems to have been made by the Magistrate.]

Mr. DeGruyther.—The Appellant himself says he was not making any inquiry.

Mr. DeGruyther.—Becoming seised of the case under sec. 190, and thereafter issuing a summons or a warrant against the accused.

A "Court" under sec. 96 means a judicial officer sitting as a Court. If that were not the meaning of the section the Appellant would not have brought to his aid Act XVIII of 1850. It is true that a District Magistrate is both a judicial and executive officer. But he has no power to search for arms generally. This is not a case of searching for arms in a particular offence. The Appellant admits he was making a general search. He searched several places. A Magistrate's power to search is limited to some case he is seised of. A District Magistrate undoubtedly had wide powers of a general search for arms under the Arms Act. But the Appellant himself admits that he did not think of the act at the time. If he really had information about the arms he was bound to exercise a judicial discretion and to record the reasons for the search. Sec. 25 of the Arms Act lays it down in clear terms that he must first make a record. Even Brett, J., finds that this defence was an after-thought. Sec. 26 does not require a record for a subject has no remedy against the act of the Supreme Government.

Act XVIII of 1850 is not applicable. The Appellant did not act as a "Court," and his act was therefore not a judicial act. Reliance was placed on Doswell v. Impey (10).

[LORD MACNAGHTEN.—If the Appellant bond fide believed that he was doing a judicial act in making the search, will he be protected?]

Mr. DeGruyther.—I submit not. The act must be a judicial act. Sinclair v. Broughton (11), Houlden v. Smith (12), Mitchell v. Foster (13).

Sir E. Richards replied.—The definition of "inquiry" is not exhaustive. In sec. 96 "any inquiry" is sufficiently wide. Sec. 159 deals with preliminary inquiry only. The word "cognizance" is not limited to the ways in which a Court can take cognizance of an offence prescribed by sec. 190. "Cognizance" means "applying one's mind to a matter." The protection given by Act XVIII of 1850 is wider than what was given by 11 and 12 Vic., Ch. 74.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—The pecuniary amount involved in this Appeal is comparatively trifling. But the case is one of grave importance, and their Lordships are compelled to add that, in their opinion, there has been a serious miscarriage of justice in both the Courts which dealt with the matter in India.

In April 1907, Mr. Clarke, the Appellant, was the District Magistrate of Mymensingh, an extensive district in the Province of Bengal. The principal suit, the result of which governs this consolidated Appeal, was brought by the first Respondent, as Plaintiff, claiming damages for trespass on the allegation that Mr. Clarke had illegally and wantonly searched his cutchery, and that Mr. Clarke had not only acted illegally, but that he had acted out of personal malice and ill-will. The suit originally brought in the Court of the third Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh was transferred, at the Plaintiff's instance, to the High Court in its Extraordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction. It was tried by Fletcher, J. He found in favour of the Plaintiff and gave a decree for Rs. 500, but without costs. Costs were not awarded to the successful Plaintiff on account of the charge of personal misconduct which his Lordship held to be unfounded and grossly improper. Mr. Clarke appealed to the High Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction. The Plaintiff filed cross-objections reiterating his charge of personal misconduct. The Court of Appeal, consisting of the late Chief Justice and Harington, J. (Brett, J., dissenting) dismissed the appeal but without costs.

The result is that a Magistrate placed in a very difficult position and called upon to act on a sudden emergency has been adjudged guilty of trespass and subjected to a fine though he seems to have acted properly, with courage and good sense, and strictly in accordance with the powers committed to him.

The facts of the case are not really in dispute.

Jamalpur is a sub-division of Mymensingh. The zemindars in that part of the country are Hindus, most of them, apparently, absentees living in Calcutta. The bulk of the population is Mahomedan. For some time before the occurrence which led to this suit, owing, it was said, to the measure known as the Partition of Bengal, there had been a good deal of disaffection and excitement in the district, and the relations between the Hindus and the Mahomedans were dangerously strained.

On the 21st of April 1907 there was a large fair or mela held at Jamalpur. Some Hindus, apparently at the instance of the servants and agents of the Plaintiff and his co-sharers known collectively as the Gouruckpur (? Gouripur) zemindars, tried to prevent the sale of bideshi or foreign goods. The Mahomedans resented this attempt. There were serious disturbances out of which there sprang up a bitter feeling between the Hindus and the Mahomedans. On the evening of the 27th of April some Hindus dressed or supposed to be dressed in Mahomedan clothes were observed wandering about the town. They were followed by a band of Mahomedans. The Hindus turned on the men following them and fired three or four revolver shots and a Mahomedan was wounded. An uproar followed. Mr. Barniville, the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Jamalpur, and Mr. Luffman, the District Superintendent of Police, who were then in the Dak bungalow, hastened to the scene of disturbance. They met some Mahomedans carrying away the wounded man, and they received information that the persons who had committed this offence had fled in the direction of the cutcheries of the Gouruckpur (sic) zemindars. These cutcheries appear to be close together in an open piece of ground. Hard by is a temple of Thakurani Doya Moyee. An excited crowd of Mahomedans was collected there apparently bent on attacking the cutcheries. The Sub-divisional Magistrate and the District Superintendent of Police found 40 or 50 men armed with lathies. After they had disarmed them they were told that armed men were concealed in the temple. They went there. They found the doors locked and were refused admittance. The Sub-divisional Magistrate ordered the persons inside to open the doors assuring them of protection. In response several shots were fired from inside, and a man was wounded slightly. The two officers then withdrew after dispersing the Mahomedan crowd outside.

The Sub-divisional Magistrate wired at once to the Commissioner of the Division and the District Superintendent of Police sent a telegram to Mr. Clarke to the following effect :

"Serious riot just averted, come at once."

Mr. Clarke received this telegram at 2 a.m. on the morning of the 28th of April. He started for Jamalpur by the first train, and arrived there at 10 a.m. On his arrival he found the following telegram from the Commissioner headed "Urgent":—

"Barniville has wired for available armed police by special train, saying serious disturbance impending. What do you know? Can you send Gurkhas from Mymensingh to be replaced if required by men from here.—Dacca."

Mr. Clarke, who had spent most of his time after the mela disturbance between Jamalpur and Mymensingh, and knew the state of feeling in the district, took counsel with the Superintendent of Police and the Sub-divisional Magistrate. From what he heard and from what he knew himself he came to the conclusion that it was his duty to search the cutcheries. And accordingly he did so, accompanied by the Sub-divisional Magistrate, the Police officer, and a force of police. The Plaintiff's cutchery was found locked. It seems that the jamadar in charge of the building had locked it up, and left at 1 p.m. There was no one on the ground to open the doors. So the doors were forced open. Boxes in the cutchery were also opened and their contents taken out. The actual search within the building was made by the police, but Mr. Clarke had charge and direction of the whole proceeding. He remained outside.

There was nothing of an incriminating nature found in the cutcheries.

The question and the only question on this appeal is whether Mr. Clarke was authorised by law to make the search. That depends on the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure and on nothing else.

It cannot be denied that a serious offence had been committed against the public tranquility and that under the Code of Criminal Procedure* (which defines offences against the public tranquility and is summarised in Chapter viii of Sch. II of the Code†) every member of the unlawful assembly from which the shots proceeded was equally guilty of the offence. Nor can it be disputed that it was the duty of the District Magistrate to enquire into that offence.

Now sec. 177 of the Code provides that every offence shall ordinarily be enquired into, and tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction it was committed. Mr. Clarke, by virtue of his superior rank, superseded the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Jamalpur, and properly assumed jurisdiction there.

An enquiry under the Code is a proceeding distinct from a trial. There is no definition of the word "enquiry" in the interpretation clause, sec. 4. But there is this explanation of the term as used in the Code :—

"(4) 'Enquiry' includes every enquiry other than a trial conducted under this Code by a Magistrate or Court."

Sec. 36 is in the following terms :—

"All District Magistrates, Sub-divisional Magistrates, and Magistrates of the first, second and third classes have the powers hereinafter respectively conferred upon them and specified in the third schedule. Such powers are called their 'ordinary powers.'"

Sch. III, referring back to sec. 36 defines the "ordinary powers" of Provincial Magistrates beginning with Magistrates of the third class. Every Magistrate of a higher class is invested with all the "ordinary powers" of a Magistrate of the class immediately below that to which he belongs, with further powers appertaining to Magistrates of his own grade.

Among the "ordinary powers" of a Magistrate of the third class specified in Sch. III is :—

"(8) Power to issue search warrants. Sec. 96."

In sec. 96 the following provision occurs :—

"Where the Court considers that the purpose of any enquiry, trial, or other proceeding under this Code will be served by a general search or inspection, it may issue a search warrant."

Then sec. 105 provides as follows :—

"Any Magistrate may direct a search to be made in his presence of any place for the search of which he is competent to issue a search warrant."

It seems clear from these sections and Sch. III that Mr. Clarke was authorised by the Code to direct a search of the Plaintiffs' cutchery in his presence if he considered it advisable to do so.

Now the learned Trial Judge disposes of Mr. Clarke's defence in rather a summary manner. Beyond referring to sec. 105 he does not consider or refer to any one of the sections on which the defence is based, nor does he deal with Sch. III at all. All that the learned Judge says on this part of the case is this :—

"It is obvious in the present case the Defendant was not competent to issue a search warrant under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. The Defendant was not acting as a Court within the meaning of sec. 94 of the Criminal Procedure Code, as there was no proceeding pending before him."

On appeal the late Chief Justice and Harington, J., took the same view and dealt with the matter much in the same way. After citing sec. 105 the learned Chief Justice proceeds as follows :—

"The Magistrate can only act under this section where he is competent to issue a search warrant. That takes us to sec. 96. That section applies to the issue of a search warrant by the Court. Here the Defendant was not acting as a Court and all that sec. 105 enacts is that instead of the Court issuing a search warrant the Magistrate may direct a search to be made in his presence. It is reasonably obvious why this power is given to a Magistrate, but the section does not assist the present Defendant."

The opinion of Harington, J., is to the same effect. He says :—

"In my opinion sec. 96 only authorises the Magistrate to issue a search warrant when sitting as a Court, i.e., when some proceeding under the Code has been initiated before him. And this view is strengthened by the form of the search warrant given in Sch. V which recites that information has been laid or complaint has been made."

If his Lordship had read to the end of the form in Sch. V he would have seen that it disposes of his theory altogether. The form contemplates the issue of a search warrant before any proceedings of any kind are initiated and in view of an "enquiry about to be made."

It would seem that the Trial Judge and both the learned Judges who formed the majority of the Court of Appeal were misled by the use of the word "Court" in sec. 96. For the sake of brevity the Code uses the terms "Court" and "Magistrate" generally if not always as convertible terms. Sec. 6 headed "Classes of Criminal Courts" enacts that :—

"Besides the High Courts and the Courts constituted under any law under this Code for the time being in force there shall be five classes of Criminal Courts in British India, namely :—

- I. Courts of Session.
- II. Presidency Magistrates.
- III. Magistrates of the First Class.
- IV. Magistrates of the Second Class.
- V. Magistrates of the Third Class."

Sec. 36 taken in conjunction with Sch. III places the matter beyond all doubt. The ordinary powers of all Provincial Magistrates are declared to be those "hereinafter conferred upon them and specified in the third schedule." That means : conferred upon them by the Act and specified in the third schedule to the Act. As appears by the schedule the power to issue search warrants is specified among the "ordinary powers" of all Provincial Magistrates, but the only section conferring the power is sec. 96 to which the schedule itself refers.

It seems to their Lordships therefore clear that what Mr. Clarke did was warranted by the Code. If that be so there is an end of the case.

Two other points were discussed by the Trial Judge and the learned Judges of appeal at much greater length than the ground on which the real defence to the action was based. It seems that the Defendant or his advisers not content with relying on the Code of Criminal Procedure, unwisely perhaps, prayed in aid sec. 25 of the Indian Arms Act, 1878, and also Act No. XVIII of 1850, entitled "an Act for the protection of Judicial Officers." The one seems inapplicable ; the other in the present case wholly unnecessary. Their Lordships are disposed to agree with the majority of the Court of Appeal that Mr. Clarke not having complied with the preliminary condition prescribed by the Arms Act cannot defend his action under that Statute. On the other hand they have no doubt that Mr. Clarke in directing a general search of the Plaintiff's cutchery in view of an enquiry under the Code of Criminal Procedure was acting in the discharge of his judicial functions, and they think that if it had been necessary he might have appealed for protection to the Act No. XVIII of 1850.

Their Lordships think that there was no foundation for the suit. Mr. Clarke's action under the circumstances was quite justified. The charge of personal misconduct advanced and reiterated without any shadow of proof deserves the severest reprobation.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that this Appeal ought to be allowed, the order of the Court of Appeal discharged, and the suit dismissed with costs in both Courts.

The Respondent must pay the costs of the Appeal.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Babu Kshetra Mohun Sen for the Appellants.

Babu Bepin Behary Ghosh for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal on behalf of two of the Defendants in a suit for an injunction to restrain them from passing water from their land to the land of the Plaintiffs, as also for recovery of damages. The Plaintiffs are the owners of two parcels of land which adjoin a third parcel owned by the Defendants. Towards the south of this property there is a tank not owned by either of the parties to the suit. The case for the Plaintiff is that the Defendants have lowered the level of their own land with the result that the water from this tank passes to the land of the Defendant's and subsequently overflows into the lands of the Plaintiffs. The question, therefore, arises whether upon these facts the Plaintiffs are entitled to a mandatory injunction against the Defendants to compel them to raise an embankment for the benefit of the Plaintiffs and also to recover damages already caused. The learned Vakil for the Plaintiffs-Respondents has contended upon the authority of Rylands v. Fletcher (1), that the Defendants have no right to bring water upon their land which may subsequently flow out and cause damage to the land of the Plaintiffs. The principle deducible from that decision is that the occupier of land who brings or keeps upon it anything likely to do damage if it escapes is bound at his peril to prevent its escape and is liable for all the natural and probable consequences of its escape even if he has been guilty of no negligence. In our opinion, this principle cannot be applied to the circumstances of the present case. It is not disputed, and it cannot be seriously disputed, that the Defendants have not used their land in any artificial or unusual manner. They lowered the level of their own land so as to make it culturable, and they were amply within their rights in what they did: Smith v. Kenrick (2). It cannot be suggested that they had recourse to any artificial structures for the purpose of storing water in their land, Hurdman v. N. E. Ry. Co. (3), Broder v. Saillard (4), nor can it be suggested that they have forced water from their land into the land of the Plaintiffs, Whalley v. Lancashire, etc., Ry. Co. (5). Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that the Plaintiffs are not entitled to an injunction, as against the Defendants, to compel the latter to raise a barrier for their protection. In support of this view reference may be made to the case of Nield v. London and N. W. Ry. Co. (6), where it was ruled that an occupier is not bound to prevent damage to his neighbour by the natural escape of flood water from higher to lower levels. As Bramwell, B., observed:—"The neighbour is not entitled to say 'you have caused me an injury in law.' The law allows what may be termed a kind of reasonable selfishness in such matters. It says 'let every one look out for himself and protect his own interests.'" If this view were not adopted the result would be that a man could not reasonably use his property lest some neighbour of his might complain that he had caused him an injury. The true principle is that where the owner of land, without wilfulness or negligence, uses his land in the ordinary manner, though mischief thereby accrues to his neighbour, he is not liable for damages, but if with a view to use the land in an unusual manner, he brings upon his land water which would not naturally have come upon it, he will be liable for damages for the escape of the water into the land of his neighbour. This doctrine was recognised in the case of Hodgson v. Mayor, etc., of York (7), see also Chasemore v. Richards (8). We are of opinion therefore that although the Plaintiffs may have suffered damage, no legal right of theirs has been infringed and they have no cause of action against the Defendants.

The result is that this Appeal is allowed, the order of the Subordinate Judge discharged and the decree of the Court of first instance restored with costs both here and in the Court of Appeal below. We assess the hearing-fee in this Court at two gold mohurs.

HARINGTON, J.—This is an Appeal by the Plaintiff whose suit for enhancement of rent has been dismissed by both the Court of first instance and the lower Appellate Court. The facts are that the Plaintiff and the Defendants are howladars, the Plaintiff having six annas of the howla and the Defendants ten annas. The Defendants took the undivided six annas of the howla from the Plaintiff as his tenants and it is in respect of this undivided six annas of the howla that the Plaintiff seeks to obtain an enhancement of rent. The Munsif and the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court held that the Plaintiff was not, in respect of this undivided six annas, the landlord of a holding held at a money rent by an occupancy raiyat within the terms of sec. 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; and on that ground, amongst others, dismissed the suit of the Plaintiff.

Now, on behalf of the Appellant it is contended, first, that this issue has been previously determined in favour of the Plaintiff and that therefore under the rule of res judicata the Court was not entitled to dismiss his suit on this ground ; and, secondly, it is argued that the Plaintiff was the landlord of a holding within the terms of sec. 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Now with regard to the first question, a suit was previously brought and it was held that in that suit the landlord was entitled to bring his action ; but the suit was dismissed on the ground that the rent which it was sought to enhance was not lower than that of the surrounding lands. Therefore judgment was given in favour of the Defendants, although the Defendants' objection to the competency of the suit was in fact overruled. In my opinion the rule of res judicata does not apply to such cases. The judgment was passed in favour of the Defendants, and it was not open to them to appeal against the view of the Munsif who overruled the contention urged by them. If we were to hold that the rule of res judicata applied it would come to this, that the Defendants were bound by the decision of the first Court and were debarred from appealing against the view expressed against them because the decision was in their favour—the principal point which the Court decided against them not being a ground on which the suit was decided, because the suit was decided in their favour. The Defendants were therefore debarred from questioning the soundness of the decision. The rule of res judicata cannot therefore be applied to this case.

Then, on the second point, what is sought to be enhanced is the rent of an undivided six annas share of the howla and my view is that an undivided six annas is not a 'holding' within the meaning of sec. 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Under that Act holding is defined as a parcel or parcels of land held by a raiyat and forming the subject of a separate tenancy. I can understand no process of reasoning by which an undivided six annas can be described as a parcel or parcels of land because the use of the word 'parcel' implies that the land in question has metes and bounds. The result is that an undivided six annas of the howla does not come within the definition of the word 'holding' and therefore does not fall within sec. 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The case is not without authority because the case of Haribole Brohmo v. Tasimuddin Mondul (1) is a case in which this very same question arose and there it was decided that an undivided 8 annas share was not itself a holding under sec. 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. On a consideration of the Statute and the authority it seems to me that the appeal ought not to succeed. It is conceded that there is no authority in support of the interpretation which the Appellant wants to put on the Statute ; and it is a very significant fact, as my learned brother points out, that although this decision in the case of Haribole Brohmo v. Tasimuddin Mondul (1) was given so far back as 1898, there is no subsequent amendment of the Act so as to in any way derogate the effect of that decision.

For these reasons I hold that the decree of the lower Court ought to be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I desire to add a few observations, in view of the earnest endeavour made to upset what has been accepted as good law for at least fifteen years.

The Plaintiff and the Defendants are landlords of a property ; the share of the Plaintiff is six annas and that of the Defendants ten annas. The Defendants have taken a raiyati lease from the

(1) 2 C. W. N. 680 (1898).

SREMATI PAKBATTY DEBYA v. MATHURA NATH BANERJEE.

Plaintiff of his share of the property. The Plaintiff now seeks, under sec. 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, to enhance the rent payable by the Defendants. The Courts below have dismissed the suit. This decision is sought to be assailed by the Plaintiff-Appellant before this Court on two grounds, namely, first, that the question of his right to enhance the rent of the Defendants is res judicata; and, secondly, that upon a true construction of sec. 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, he has a right to enhance the rent of the Defendants.

In support of the first contention, reference has been made to the decision in the earlier litigation between the parties when the Plaintiff fruitlessly endeavoured to enhance the rent payable by the Defendants. In that suit it was decided in favour of the Plaintiff that he had the right to enhance the rent of the Defendants; but the suit was dismissed on the ground that the rent paid by the Defendants was not lower than the rate at which rent was paid by tenants of adjoining lands. It has been argued on the authority of the case of Peary Mohun Mukerjee v. Ambica Churn Bandopadhyaya (2) that the decision in favour of the Plaintiff upon the question of his right to enhance the rent is concluded by the judgment mentioned. That case however is clearly distinguishable. There it was ruled that when a decision has been based on two grounds either of which is sufficient to support the decree, the decision upon each of the grounds is conclusive between the parties. Here, however, the decision upon the question of the right of the Plaintiff to enhance the rent is not the basis of the decree ultimately made. Consequently it cannot be maintained under sec. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 that the question was directly and substantially in issue between the parties or was finally decided. This view is in accord with that taken in the case of Thakur Magundeo v. Thakur Mahadeo (3). The first ground upon which the decision of the Court below is sought to be assailed cannot, therefore, be supported.

In support of the second ground, it has been contended that although the Defendants held a share of the howla under the Plaintiff, yet the Plaintiff is the landlord of a "holding" within the meaning of sec. 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Now the term 'holding' as defined in cl. (9) of sec. 3 of the Act means a parcel or parcels of land held by a raiyat and forming the subject of a separate tenancy. Stress is laid, however, by the Appellant on the introductory words of the section which provide that the definitions given are to apply unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context. But it has not been shown to us that there is anything in sec. 30 repugnant to the definition of the term 'holding' given in cl. (9) of sec. 3 of the Act. On the other hand the cases of Hari Charan Bose v. Runjit Singh (4), Baidya Nath De v. Ilim (5), Haribole Brohmo v. Tasimuddin Mondul (1) and Ahadulla v. Gagan (6) conclusively show that an undivided share in a parcel or parcels of land cannot be a holding. In fact a parcel of land is land defined by metes and bounds and consequently a share in a parcel of land cannot be deemed to be a parcel of land within the meaning of the definition of the term 'holding'. Reference has finally been made to the terms of sec. 5, cl. (2) and sec. 3, cl. (5) of the Bengal Tenancy Act where definitions are given of the terms 'raiya' and 'rent' respectively; and it has been pointed out that a raiya may hold a share of a parcel of land for which he may be liable to pay rent to the landlord. That need not be disputed. But it does not follow that, when a raiya holds a share in a parcel of land, he has a "holding" as defined in sec. 3, cl. (9). The case of Jardine Skinner & Co. v. Rani Surut Soondari Debi (7), where their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that a right of occupancy might be acquired in respect of an undivided share of land under the Bengal Rent Law of 1868, and the decision of this Court in Baidya Nath v. Sudharam (8), where a similar view was taken, are clearly of no assistance to the Plaintiff, because what he has to establish is that he is the landlord of a "holding" within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In my opinion, he has failed to do so.

Both the points urged fail, and the Appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

sec. 50, Expl. (4). Revocation of grant—"Just cause," mal-administration if—Quarrels between co-administrators, making grant useless and inoperative, if ground for annulment.

Mal-administration is not under sec. 50, Expl. (4), of the Probate and Administration Act a just cause for revoking probate.

ANNODA PROSAD v. KALIKRISHNA (1) followed.

The words "become useless and inoperative" in sec. 50, Expl. (4), of the Act imply the discovery of something which if known at the date of the grant would have been a ground for refusing it, e.g., the discovery of a later will or codicil or a subsequent discovery that the will was forged or that the alleged testator was still living.

BAL GANGADHAR TILAK v. SAKWARBAI (2) approved.

One of two joint administrators applied for the revocation of the grant to the other on the ground that in consequence of quarrels between them it had become impossible to carry on the administration and the grant had in this way become inoperative and useless:

Held—That this was no ground for revoking the grant.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 13th of December 1909 against the decree of Mr. W. S. Coutts, District Judge of Zillah Dacca, dated the 18th of September 1909.

The material facts of this case will appear from of the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an Appeal against an order

passed by the District Judge of Dacca on the 18th September 1909 refusing an application made by the present Appellant for the removal of Sarat Sundari Dasi from the administration of the estate of Chaitan Krishna Poddar. It appears that the Appellant and Sarat Sundari Dasi are related to each other as adopted son and adoptive mother and that letters of administration to the estate of Chaitan Krishna Poddar were granted to them after the death of the widow of Chaitan Krishna in whose favour as the first beneficiary under the will, letters of administration had previously been granted. There was some difference of opinion between the parties at first and, on the 31st August 1903, a compromise was arrived at and joint administration was granted to both. On the 26th May 1909, the Petitioner made an application to the Court which contained several allegations against Sarat Sundari Dasi. Amongst them one was that she had taken hatchitta from various debtors to the estate during the time when she was the sole administratrix and that these hatchittahs have been taken in her name only. It was asked that the name of the present Appellant as joint administrator should be added in those hatchittahs. The learned Judge took action on that complaint with the result that the addition asked for was made in most of the hatchittas; but, in the order recorded on the 3rd September 1909, it was stated that in certain hatchittas the addition prayed for had not been made and, therefore, they would remain in Court in the record until the change could be made. There was also in the same petition a complaint against Sarat Sundari Dasi that she had not paid the allowance due to the Appellant regularly and that she had not paid the municipal tax for his house which she was bound to pay. Sarat Sundari put in, on the 16th July 1909, a petition in which with reference to these later complaints she made certain statements and alleged that if there had been any failure on her part to pay the allowance as it fell due and the municipal tax, it was not the result of any fault on her part but was owing to the action taken on the part of the Appellant and his father-in-law. That matter does not appear to have been dealt with in the proceedings before the Judge on that application; but on the 17th September 1909, a fresh application was put in by the present Appellant asking that Sarat Sundari should be removed from the administration and that the grant of letters of administration to her should be revoked. It is not quite clear whether the learned Judge, in passing the order which he did dismissing that application, did so in view of the action which had been previously taken on the previous application; but the question which we have to consider in this case is whether we should interfere with the order passed by the District Judge on the ground that that order was not in accordance with law or not justified by the circumstances of the case. The learned pleader who appears in support of the Appeal admits that the application was made under the provisions of sec. 50 of the Probate and Administration Act, and he contends that "the cause" for which it was asked that the grant of letters should be revoked or annulled in respect of Sarat Sundari was "a just cause" within the meaning of that section. He refers to the 4th explanation attached to that section and argues that in this case "the grant has become useless and inoperative through circumstances." On being pressed to explain what the circumstances are, the learned pleader is unable to advance any other circumstance than the one that the lady and her adopted son have quarrelled and he says that, in consequence of this quarrel, it has become impossible to carry on the administration. It has also been suggested but not very strongly pressed before us that the allegations that she had not administered the estate properly would be a sufficient ground for annulling the grant of letters of administration. In our opinion, the grounds which have been advanced in support of the contention that the decision of the learned Judge should be set aside on the ground that he was not right in holding that just cause for annulling the letters of administration had not been made out cannot be sustained. It has been held by this Court in the case of Annoda Prosad v. Kalikrishna (1), that a mal-administration is not, under sec. 50, Expl. (4) of the Probate and Administration Act, a just cause for revoking the probate. It has also been held by the Bombay High Court in the case of Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Sakwarbai (2), that the words "become useless and inoperative" in sec. 50, cl. (4) of the Probate Act, imply the discovery of something which, if known at the date of the grant, would have been a ground for refusing it; e.g., the discovery of a later will or codicil or the subsequent discovery that the Will was forged or that the alleged testa or was still living. We see no reason to differ from the view which has been taken by the learned Judges in these two cases and, following that view, we are of opinion that the only ground which has really been pressed in support of this appeal, namely, that the grant has become useless and inoperative because of the disagreement between the administrators is not a just cause for annulling the letters. In these circumstances, we are of opinion that we cannot interfere with the decision of the lower Court and that the Appeal must be dismissed with costs. At the same time, we desire to say that if the Appellant considers that he has any sufficient ground for pressing the complaints which were made in his application of the 26th May 1909, supposing that those complaints have not up to date received the consideration of the District Judge, it will certainly be open to him to apply to the lower Court in order that an enquiry may be made into the substance of the complaints and such action taken as to that Court may seem fit.

We assess the hearing-fee in this Court at two gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

fresh suit and he could not ask the Court to hold an investigation of the claim under Or. 21, r. 99.

This was a Rule granted on the 15th of April 1912 against an order of Babu A. C. Dutt, Munsif of Asansole, dated the 13th of January 1912.

The Opposite Party, Ambika Debi, on the 10th December 1909 preferred a claim under Or. 21, r. 58 to property attached in execution of a decree against her son. She failed to pay process-fees for service of notice on the decree-holder and the claim petition was dismissed on 9th April 1910.

On the 11th June 1910, the property was sold and purchased by the decree-holder. The decree-holder went to take possession but was obstructed by the claimant, who at the same time preferred an application under Or. 21, r. 99, for the investigation of her claim. Upon this petition the Munsif passed order withdrawing a previous order directing police protection to be given to the decree-holder.

Babu Atul Krishna Roy for the Petitioner.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghosh for the Opposite Party.

We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order under r. 99 of Or. 21 of the Code of 1908. The Petitioners in execution of a decree against their judgment-debtor, one Bejoy Krishna Mookerjee, attached his house and the adjoining lands. Thereupon, one Ambika Debi, the mother of the judgment-debtor, and the Opposite Party in this Rule, preferred a claim under r. 58 of Or. 21 of the Code on the 10th December 1909. Her allegation at the time was that the house and the land belonged to her and that she was in possession thereof in her own right. She did not, however, prosecute her claim, with the result that it was dismissed on the 9th April 1910. Execution, thereupon, proceeded on the basis of the decree, and on the 11th June 1910 the decree-holders purchased the property at the execution sale. They subsequently applied for delivery of possession, and on the 20th November 1911 symbolical possession was delivered to them. Later on, they applied for delivery of actual possession. The peon who went to execute the writ reported that he had been obstructed, and on the 13th January 1912 the mother of the judgment-debtor put in an application under r. 99 of Or. 21 of the Code. The Court did not investigate whether the objector was bona fide in possession of the property; but made an order the effect of which was a denial of all assistance to the auction-purchasers in their endeavour to obtain possession of the property purchased by them. The order of the Court below clearly cannot be supported.

Even if it be assumed that the application of the objector could have been entertained, the Court could not make an order under r. 99 without an investigation as to whether she was in possession of the property in good faith and on her own account. This position has not been controverted on behalf of the Opposite Party and it has been suggested that the case should be remitted to the Court below in order that the requisite enquiry may be made. We are not however prepared to accede to this prayer. The application clearly ought not to have been entertained. The objector, as we have already stated made an application under r. 58 on the 10th December 1909. Her claim was dismissed on the 9th April 1910. It is true that there was no investigation on the merits, but that was entirely by reason of her own default; she wilfully deprived herself of the opportunity open to her at that stage. Rule 63 shows that where a claim of this character has been preferred, the party against whom the order has been made may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order is conclusive. It has been contended, however, on behalf of the Opposite Party, on the authority of the decision in the case of Kunj Behary Lal v. Kandi Prasad Narain Singh (1), that as there was no investigation on the merits, she is in the same position as if she had never made an application under r. 58. We are of opinion, that this position cannot be supported. No doubt, in relation to the question of limitation applicable to a suit of the description mentioned in r. 63, it has been held that Art. 11 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act does not apply if the application has been refused without an investigation on the merits, Kallar Singh v. Toril Mahton (2). Upon this point, however, there is a divergence of judicial opinion and there is weighty authority in support of the view that where an application has been dismissed, with or without investigation, a regular suit, if instituted, must be commenced within one year from the date of such order. Gooroo Das v. Sonamonee (3), Sreemunta v. Tajood-din (4), Tripura v. Ijaloonnessa (5), Sadut

Ali v. Ramdhone (6). But it is not necessary for our present purpose to express any opinion upon this question. It is sufficient to hold that, on the face of r. 63, the order of refusal is plainly final till a regular suit has been instituted and successfully prosecuted. Consequently the objector cannot now be allowed to practically reiterate the claim which she preferred on the 10th December 1909, and which was disallowed without investigation by reason of her own default. The petition of objection filed on the 12th January 1912, in this view, ought not to have been entertained. This conclusion is supported by the decision in Sankar Nath Pandit v. Madan Mohan Das (7).

The result is that the Rule is made absolute and the order of the Court below set aside. That Court is directed to place the auction-purchasers in actual possession of the property and to render such assistance to the peon as may be necessary to carry out the order of the Court. The Petitioners are entitled to their costs in this Court. We assess the hearing fee at three gold mohurs.

No. 25 OF 1912.

HOLMWOOD, J.	}	EMPEROR
IMAM, J.		v.
1912.		BHIKU HOSSEIN.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 202, 203, 476 and 529 (f)—Deputy Magistrate in charge of office of District Magistrate—Power of such Magistrate to send case under sec. 202 of the Code to the Sub-Divisional officer for investigation—Legality of investigation and of subsequent orders by the Deputy Magistrate dismissing the complaint and directing the prosecution of the complainant—Government Circular as to charges against the Police, effect of—Nature of judicial investigation thereunder.

A Deputy Magistrate in charge of the District Magistrate's office, at head-quarters, has no power as such, after taking cognizance of a complaint and examining the complainant on oath, to send the case, under sec. 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for local investigation by the Sub-Divisional officer to whom he is by law subordinate, nor to dismiss the complaint, and to direct the prosecution of the complainant under sec. 476 on the report and investigation by the latter.

The effect of sec. 529 (f) could be only to give the Sub-Divisional Magistrate jurisdiction over the case, but not to empower the Deputy Magistrate to dismiss the complaint and direct the prosecution of the complainant.

The Government Circular with regard to enquiries into complaints against the Police has been misunderstood. It does not refer to local investigations under sec. 202, but the investigation it mentions is a full and complete judicial enquiry on the spot after the issue of process, and after hearing witnesses on both sides and taking the explanation of the accused person.

Reference under sec. 438, Cr. P. C., from

B. V. Nicholl, Esq., the Sessions Judge of Dinajpur, made on the 15th of February 1912, recommending that so much of the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Dinajpur, dated 15th January 1912, as directs the trial of the accused under sec. 476 of the Criminal Procedure for an offence under sec. 211, I. P. C., be set aside.

The facts of the case were as follows :—On the 27th November last one Bhiku Hossein, a resident of the Balurghat subdivision of the Dinajpur District, filed a complaint before Mr. Gyan Sunker Sen, Deputy Magistrate of the first class, then in charge of the office of the District Magistrate during his absence on tour, charging the darogah, head constable and chowkidars of the Balurghat thana with wrongful confinement and extortion under secs. 342 and 384, I. P. C. The Magistrate examined the complainant on oath, and passed the following order: "Copy of complaint to S. Police for information and for the deputation of a superior officer for investigation with the Sub-Divisional officer of Balurghat to whom the original complaint is forwarded for inquiry." In compliance with the order the Sub-Divisional officer held a judicial inquiry, and after examining witnesses submitted a report which concluded as follows: "I have no doubt that the case is a false one. The complaint may be dismissed under sec. 203, Cr. P. C. He (the complainant) may also be prosecuted under sec. 211, I. P. C." On the receipt of the report the Deputy Magistrate in charge heard the complainant's pleader, dismissed the complaint under sec. 203 of the Code, and, acting under sec. 476, directed the prosecution of the complainant for an offence under sec. 211, I. P. C., and sent the case to the District Magistrate for orders.

It appeared that the Government Notification transferring Mr. Gyan Sunker Sen to the District of Dinajpur did not define the local limit of his powers as a first class Magistrate, and that he was empowered to take cognizance on complaint, and had been, by an order of the District Magistrate, appointed to act for him during his absence on tour.

The complainant thereupon moved the Sessions Judge of Dinajpur to set aside the orders of the Deputy Magistrate dismissing the complaint and directing his prosecution. The Judge referred the order passed under sec. 476 to the High Court as without jurisdiction. His letter of Reference was as follows :—

On the 27th November 1911, one Bhiku Hossein, a resident of the Balurghat sub-division preferred a complaint charging the daroga, head constable and chowkidar, etc., with offences under secs. 384 and 342, I. P. C., committed at the residence, and against the person, of the complainant on 3rd November 1911.

The facts constituting the alleged offences are not material to the purpose of this Reference. There is a rider added to the statement of facts giving explanations (1) of the delay in making the complaint, (2) of the complainant's reasons for not presenting it to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Balurghat, and asking that, under sec. 531, C. P. C., the case may be tried here, (i.e., Dinajpur).

The complaint was entertained by Mr. Gyan Sunker Sen, Deputy Magistrate, with 1st class powers who was in charge of the station. He examined the complainant and recorded the following order: "Copy of statement to S. Police for information and for deputation of a superior officer for investigation along with the Sub-Divisional officer of Balurghat to whom the original complaint is forwarded for enquiry."

This was evidently an order under sec. 202, Cr. P. C. In compliance thereof the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Balurghat had the witnesses examined and discussed the evidence before him and concluded "I have no doubt that the case is a false one. The complaint may be dismissed under sec. 203, Cr. P. C. The complainant may also be prosecuted under sec. 211, I. P. C."

After receiving this report, the Deputy Magistrate in charge at head-quarters heard the complainant's ~~pleader~~ and recorded an order in which he (1) accepted the conclusion arrived at by Sub-Divisional Magistrate and accordingly dismissed it under sec. 203, Cr. P. C., (2) discussed the question of his own jurisdiction to dispose of this case and (3) under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., directed the trial of the complainant for an offence under sec. 211, I. P. C., and sent the case to the District Magistrate for orders.

It is with this portion of the order that the present Reference is concerned.

The Government Notification transferring Mr. Gyan Sunker Sen to this district does not define the local area within which he may exercise the powers of a 1st class Magistrate, and it would seem, therefore, that he is right in holding that his local jurisdiction extends over the whole district (sec. 12, Cr. P. C.). Moreover, as he is empowered to take cognizance of offences upon complaint, it would seem that he had jurisdiction to entertain a complaint and take cognizance of the offence it reveals, so long as the offence was committed in any part of the district in which he exercises jurisdiction (sec. 177). Consequently, the fact that the offence complained of by Bhiku was committed in the Balurghat sub-division, did not preclude the Deputy Magistrate from dealing with the complaint in any manner authorised by law. Therefore, he was competent to order an enquiry under sec. 202, Cr. P. C. But the persons whom he could legally direct to hold a local investigation under this section are (1) any officer subordinate to himself, (2) a Police officer, (3) some other person not a Magistrate or Police officer. The Deputy Magistrate ordered the investigation to be made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Balurghat, and the point submitted is that a Sub-Divisional Magistrate is not in any sense subordinate to any senior Deputy Magistrate or Joint-Magistrate at head quarters.

If this view is correct, it follows that the enquiry by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, the order of dismissal under sec. 203, Cr. P. C., founded upon it, and the order under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., directing the prosecution of the petitioner for an offence under sec. 211, I. P. C., are all void for want of jurisdiction.

There is another motion by the same Petitioner against the order dismissing his complaint, pending before this Court; but as, if I gave effect to the view above expressed the effect of setting aside the order of dismissal would be to nullify the order under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., with which this Court has no jurisdiction to interfere, and as my view may possibly be held not to be correct, and the order under sec. 476 to be otherwise unimpeachable, it has seemed to me that the proper course to take was to submit this Reference for decision before proceeding to dispose of the other motion.

Before concluding, I think that I ought to point out that the language in which the learned Deputy Magistrate describes the purport of the Government Circular he quotes, does not fairly represent the sense of the orders it contains.

He says that by this Circular "cases of this nature have to be investigated jointly by a 1st class Magistrate and a superior officer of Police." I have read the Circular and find that it is careful to disclaim any intention of interfering with or fettering the discretion of a Magistrate taking cognizance on complaint of an illegal offence by a Police officer. It simply lays down instructions to ensure that both sides may be properly represented and heard at any judicial enquiry that may be held in connection with a charge against a Police officer of a certain rank.

The Advocate-General (Mr. G. B. Kenrick, K. C.), with Mr. Monnier, for the Crown—The Deputy Magistrate in question had the powers of a first class Magistrate throughout the district, under sec. 12 (2) of the Code, no local limits of jurisdiction having been assigned him by the Local Government on his being posted to the Dinajpur District. He was also empowered to take cognizance on a complaint. He, therefore, had jurisdiction to entertain the complaint. As he was in charge of the office of the District Magistrate during his absence, by an order passed by the latter, he must be taken to have the same powers as the District Magistrate, and the Sub-Divisional officer was subordinate to him under sec. 17 (1). In any case the error is cured by sec. 529 (f) of the Code. His orders dismissing the complaint and taking action under sec. 476 are, therefore, not without jurisdiction.

Mr. J. N. Roy (with him Babu Monmatha Nath Mukherjee) for the complainant submitted that the Deputy Magistrate in charge was himself subordinate to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, and could not direct a local investigation by the latter under sec. 202 of the Code, and that his subsequent orders based on receipt of the report of the Sub-Divisional officer and the evidence taken at the local investigation by him were ultra vires.

This was a Reference made by the learned Sessions Judge of Dinajpur recommending that the order passed by the Deputy Magistrate at head-quarters, under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., directing the trial of the complainant under sec. 211, and sending the case to the District Magistrate for orders, should be set aside. At the same time he informed us that there was a motion before him to order further enquiry into the matter. He did not think it proper to deal with it himself because it might prejudice our order in regard to the matter under sec. 476, Cr. P. C. He says it seemed to him that the proper course to take was to submit this Reference for decision before proceeding to dispose of the other motion.

We need not, therefore, go into the point of necessity for further enquiry under sec. 203 as we have dealt with it in a similar case to this in a somewhat lengthy judgment delivered this morning in which we pointed out that the Government Circular with regard to enquiries into complaints against Police officers has been greatly misunderstood, that that Circular cannot be held to refer to any kind of local investigation under sec. 202, Cr. P. C., and that the local investigation which it mentions is a full and complete judicial enquiry on the spot after process issued, and hearing witnesses on both sides, and taking the explanation of the accused person.

It is clear that the accused person cannot be called upon for an explanation, nor can he be called upon to produce witnesses, unless and until there is ground for issuing process against him, and the law says that if upon complaint there is ground for issuing process against him the Magistrate shall issue summons for the attendance of the accused. That is sec. 204. The idea seems to have been that the Police officer might have an opportunity of defending himself and getting his accuser charged with bringing a false case, without a trial, that is to say, a judicial trial. Now that would be as unfair to the complainant as the converse procedure would be to the accused. We must take it that the Government intended that both sides should have full and free justice, and therefore when a complaint made is against a Police officer of a certain offence, under sec. 202, the Magistrate who entertains the complaint must either go to the spot and make enquiry himself, and issue process if he finds it necessary to call upon the accused to answer to anything, or if he makes it over under sec. 192 to any other Magistrate of the first class, that Magistrate must be vested with full seisin of the case and must continue the enquiry up to the necessary order of discharge, acquittal or conviction, as the case may be. But that is hardly the point which the learned Judge has referred to us. This is a point which he will have to deal with in the light of the remarks which we have just made.

The point which he makes is that the Deputy Magistrate at head-quarters had no power as such to transfer the investigation to the Sub Divisional officer of Balurghat, and the District Magistrate in his explanation has frankly admitted that this is so ; but, as he points out, an error made in good faith is cured by sec. 529. Granted that this is so, the Sub-Divisional officer was vested with full seisin of the case and he alone can enquire into it and pass final orders. But this is just what the Petitioner in this case intended to avoid when he went to the District Magistrate with his complaint ; and it appears to us that the reasons which weighed with the District Magistrate in allowing him to make his complaint before the officer at head-quarters are equally cogent now. Nothing has occurred since to render it the less desirable that some officer other than the local officer at Balurghat should make this enquiry. The cure of the erroneous order of transfer by sec. 529 would only give the Sub-Divisional officer, as we have seen, jurisdiction ; it could not confer jurisdiction on the Deputy Magistrate at head-quarters to recall the case to be dealt with under sec. 203 or pass any orders under sec. 476. All these orders, therefore, are ultra vires and without jurisdiction. Whether there should be a further enquiry into the case or not is a matter which the Sessions Judge will now no doubt have no difficulty in deciding. But we must make the Rule absolute as far as this Reference is concerned, and hold with the learned Judge that the order for prosecution under sec. 476 is without jurisdiction, and must be set aside.

Rule made absolute.

REPORTS (See Index.)

WE REGRET TO HAVE TO RECORD THE DEATH of Babu Nobin Chand Baral who was one of the oldest Attorneys of the Calcutta High Court. He had latterly practically retired from business. His name will be chiefly remembered in connection with the famous Wahabi case in which Mr. Baral was the Solicitor for Ameer Khan. He was also at one time a well-known figure on the Original Side of the High Court where he enjoyed considerable practice. He was at College with Sir Gurudas Banerjea and Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and was himself a good scholar. He was a Master Mason and as a citizen he also performed important civic duties as a Municipal Commissioner, Honorary Presidency Magistrate and Justice of the Peace and especially as one of the chief promoters of the Deaf and Dumb School. He died at the mature age of 69.

THE ATTACK OF SIR JOHN REES ON THE JUDGES of the Calcutta High Court before the empty benches of the House of Commons displayed such colossal ignorance and bad taste that it would be unworthy of notice but for the ruling it elicited from the Right Hon'ble the Speaker of the House regarding the procedure which should be followed when it is intended to call in question the conduct of His Majesty's Judges in India. Sir John Rees on this occasion displayed the same species of ignorance of his subject-matter which has won for him an unenviable notoriety in the House of Commons and has made him the laughing stock of the public outside.

HE BEGAN HIS ATTACK ON THE CALCUTTA HIGH Court by saying that Mr. Clarke was found guilty of "criminal trespass" by "the native Chief Justice of the High Court of Bengal" meaning surely Sir Francis Maclean. After taxing the patience of the Speaker and the unfortunate forty members who happened to be present with valuable information of this kind, he was about to direct a general attack on the Barrister-Judges of Calcutta High Court, when the Speaker of the House administered to him a well-merited rebuke in the course of which he was led to give the ruling above referred to. This practically places the High Court Judges here on the same footing as His Majesty's Judges in England regarding the calling in question of their conduct before the House of Commons. Thus out of evil cometh good. In ruling Sir John Rees out of order, the Speaker said :—

"If the Hon'ble Member is going to attack the Judiciary in India he should bear in mind the rule which obtains in this country. If an attack is made on the Judiciary here it must be made in due form after notice and on a separate motion. The Hon'ble Member referred just now to the criticism passed upon Mr. Justice Grantham. That was passed after due notice had been given and on a special motion calling his action in question. I think the same procedure might properly be applied to Judges in other parts of the Empire."

THOSE WHO BELIEVE IN THE ESTABLISHMENT of a City Court in Calcutta will do well to study the course of litigation in the Calcutta Court of Small Causes. A great deal of the business which ordinarily comes up before this Court is of a non-contentious nature. The judges there daily dispose of a large number of such suits as also others in which a settlement is arrived at either before them or out of Court. The bulk of the time of the judges is taken up by such matters or with suits in which the matter of difference is very simple. But cases in which there are any complications concerning the facts or law or both can seldom be disposed of in the Small Cause Court in less than six months. If once a case is put down in the adjourned list either for summoning witnesses, or from any other cause it is difficult to bring it to a hearing before many months have elapsed.

THE JUDGES ARE NOT AT ALL TO "BLAME FOR THIS. After adjourning a contested case they find the daily pressure of ordinary work so great that they cannot take it up again without putting back a vast amount of petty matters which they know would cause serious inconvenience to a large class of people. The natural consequence is that contested cases in the adjourned list can only be taken up by the Court in times of less pressure and even then only for a part of the day. It is therefore not unusual to find such contested cases in the Small Cause Court dragging on their existence on the list for months and months together. Such a state of things is unknown on the Original Side of the High Court. To improve matters in the Small Cause Court what is required is that the number of judges in the Small Cause Court should be increased and that they should be recruited from amongst practising members of the profession.

OUR ENGLISH CONTEMPORARY OF THE Law Notes makes the following remark in connection with an observation of Mr. Justice Bankes in a recent speech made at the festival of the Law Clerks' Society.

Mr. Justice Bankes, at the festival of the Law Clerks' Society, made a speech which should be printed, framed and exhibited in some of our judges' robing rooms. "There were many things," he said, "he had realized since he had been on the Bench. One was, what an unruly thing the tongue of a judge was. It was a very unruly member and there was no more difficult task when one was upon the Bench than to restrain that unruly member."

IN Clarke v. Brojendra Kishore THE PRIVY Council granted special leave to Mr. Clarke to appeal upon his merely undertaking through Counsel to abide by any order as to costs that their Lordships might see fit to make upon the hearing of the appeal. So Mr. Clarke in this case did not have to give any security as to costs as ordinary litigants have to do even when they obtain leave as of right. We may quote in this connection the following observations of Lord Langdale in Spooner v. Juddow, 4 M. & A. 353 at page 360.

"The question appears to be of considerable importance but you observe that the amount at issue is only a sum of Rs. 250 and for the purpose of deciding that you put the Respondent to the expense of this appeal. The question is whether this prosecution being by the East India Company and no doubt important to be decided for the benefit of the whole country the whole expense of this appeal should not be borne by them."

By an order in Council bearing date the 2nd March 1848 it was ordered by the Privy Council that "the Appellants should have leave to appeal from the judgment and order, the East India Company undertaking to bring the appeal to a before the Judicial Committee and to pay costs, charges and expenses which might be incurred on behalf of the Respondent as well as on behalf of the Appellants."

The appeal was ultimately allowed and the judgment appealed against was reversed. But no costs were allowed. This also contrasts with the order of the Privy Council in Mr. Clarke's appeal where the Respondent has been ordered to pay Mr. Clarke's costs in all Courts.

IN AN ARTICLE ON "CORPORATE PERSONALITY" by Arthur W. Machen, Jr., in 24 Harvard Law Review, pp. 253, 347, which we noticed in 15 C. W. N. clxx we expressed our concurrence with the writer that corporate entity is not imaginary or fictitious, but quite real, whereas corporal personality is a fiction. But we were not quite convinced that the author was altogether justified in regarding this fiction of personality as the mere outcome of the psychological tendency towards personification. All legal fictions are intended to serve, and in fact are tolerated in advanced systems of law in so far as they serve the purposes of justice. But whenever a legal fiction operates to obstruct the course of justice it has to be discarded. The fiction of corporate personality is, as we have observed before, a fiction of this character.

PURSuing A SOMEWHAT SIMILAR TREND OF thought I. M. Wormser, of the Illinois University, in the July number of the Columbia Law Review, has sought to establish, upon a review of the American authorities, that Courts of law never hesitate when justice requires it to lift the veil of corporate entity and treat the Corporation as a collection of persons. The question when the concept of corporate unity should be adhered to and when it should be disregarded has therefore depended for its answer not on any logical application of an immutable legal concept but on considerations of justice. The writer cites cases to show that Corporations have not unfrequently been constituted to evade the personal obligations of its ultimate shareholders, that the same set of persons have successively constituted themselves into a number of Corporations for the purpose of taking over by one of the properties of its predecessor free from the claims of the creditors of the latter. To grant relief to the creditors in such a case, the Courts have not even in all cases insisted upon proof of fraudulent intention on the part of the individuals concerned.

THE WRITER SUMS UP HIS CONCLUSIONS IN these terms:—

"When the conception of corporation entity is employed to defraud creditors, to evade all existing obligation, to circumvent a Statute, to achieve or perpetuate monopoly or to protect knavery or crime, the Courts will draw aside the web of entity, will regard the Corporate Company as an association of live, up-doing, men and women shareholders, and will do justice between real persons. This is particularly true in Courts of Equity, but finds many illustrations in Courts of Law as well, for it must not be thought that our Lady of the Common Law" is not sufficiently powerful to explode sophistry or scholastic theory when used as a cloak for wrong-doing. In neither tribunal is the concept exalted into a fetish to be worshipped "in the sacrifice of those who, in the last analysis, are the real parties in interest."

THE PRACTICE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL IN JUDICIAL MATTERS. By Norman Bentwich, Bar-at-Law. Published by Messrs. Sweet & Maxwell, Ltd., London. 1912. Price 21s.

This work is founded on Safford and Wheeler's well-known work on the subject. But the author has been able to reduce its size considerably owing to the Judicial Committee having standardized the rules of appeal from most of the Colonies and in consequence of the fact that the federation of the South African Colonies has imposed restrictions both as regards appeals from the Courts of the different States as also from the Supreme Court of the Union. The self-governing Colonies such as Australia and Canada have also imposed limitations on the prerogative of the Crown to grant special leave to appeal from the decisions of the Supreme Courts of such Colonies. The demand of these Colonies that the power to grant leave in special cases should belong to the local Courts has practically been conceded and the jurisdiction of the Judicial Committee is now ordinarily restricted to the determination of the appeals. The author has embodied in this work the substance of the provisions of the Appellate Jurisdiction Bill which was introduced in Parliament last year and which promises to found one Imperial Court of Appeal for the Empire by the unification of the Judicial Committees of the House of Lords and the Privy Council. The proposal is that the Court will sit in two divisions to exercise the jurisdiction of the Privy Council and the House of Lords respectively, that the Court will be strengthened by the addition of two new Lords of Appeal selected from amongst the most eminent of English Judges and that six Law Lords would sit in their full strength successively in the two divisions but in the same building. The author also refers to the clauses of the Irish Home Rule Bill which provides that all questions that may arise as to whether certain laws that may be passed by the proposed Irish Parliament are in excess of its authority are to be decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. The jurisdiction of hearing Irish Appeals is also to be transferred to the Privy Council. The work contains the latest informations and is quite up-to-date with regard to Privy Council Rules of Practice both as regards the Colonies and British India.

INDEX TO IMPERIAL AND BENGAL ACTS AND TO THEIR STATEMENTS OF OBJECTS AND REASONS. Compiled by B. L. Sircar, Assistant Librarian, Bar Library, High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, Calcutta. Printed at the Valmiki Press, 11, Haldar Lane, Bowbazar. 1912. Price 8 As.

The compiler's experience has suggested to him the preparation of this small book of 38 pages which gives separate lists of all the important Imperial Council and Bengal Council Acts, arranged alphabetically according to the names by which they are generally known, with the number and year of these Acts and subsequent enactments by which they have been amended, with a further reference to the pages of the respective issues of the India and Calcutta Gazettes where the Objects and Reasons of the enactments are to be found. This little booklet supplies a real want and it will, we feel sure, prove very useful for purposes of reference.

OUTLINES OF ENGLISH CONSTITUTIONAL LAW. By S. K. Bardan, M. A., B. L., Calcutta. Dis Gupta & Co., 54-3, College Street. 1912. Price 10 As.

This is a small book on English Constitutional Law. The general plan and arrangement of its contents have our approval. We also notice that the author has drawn his materials from some of the best books on the subject. We are, however, constrained to mention some shortcomings which we hope the author will rectify in another edition. When an Indian writer takes upon himself to write on English Constitutional Law, he has not the same excuse as an English writer to overlook India or the place India occupies in the English constitution. Some of the important subjects, such for instance as the Petition of Rights, are rather too briefly noticed, and at one or two places the author has made some very wide statements. The definition of "Constitutional Law" at page 3 is inaccurate if it is to embrace English Constitutional Law and then again it is not the law, as suggested at page 81, that for any illegal command of a Government Official carried out by an agent the latter alone is responsible but not the former. Constitutional Law is pre-eminently a subject which if treated briefly is apt to lead a writer into making statements in a more or less absolute form with the attendant risk of conveying erroneous impressions. This risk can only be avoided by dealing with the subject a little more fully than has been done in this book.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before JENKINS, C. J., and N. R. CHATTERJEA, J. APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL ORDER NO. 45 OF 1911. BABU SANT PERSHAD SINGH, Petitioner, Appellant v. BABU SHEO NARAYAN SINGH and others, Opposite Party, Respondents. Heard, 1st and 8th July. Judgment, 8th July 1912.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. XXI, r. 90—Inadequacy of price—Substantial injury—Debt to the extent by which price fell short barred by limitation.

The Appeal arose out of proceedings in execution. The application which initiated the present proceedings was one under Or. XXI, r. 90, to set aside a sale on the ground of irregularity. The following facts were found by the Court below (1) that the notice required by r. 66 had not been served; (2) that the proclamation had not been published; (3) that an inadequate price was stated in the proclamation; (4) that an inadequate price was in fact realized; (5) that the value of the properties would not exceed the amount under the decree; and (6) that the Defendant's liability under the decree had ceased.

Their Lordships observed that a debtor is entitled to have those steps taken for which provision is made by the Code for the purpose of ensuring that his property will realize an adequate price and to enable him to pay off his debt in money or money's worth. It is no answer to him to say it is quite true there have been irregularities and a consequent inadequacy of price which has prevented you from paying off your debt in full, but you have the satisfaction of a shelter behind the statute of limitation. That is not all the satisfaction an honest debtor desires. "We do not think that the argument and the considerations involved in it are sufficient to enable a decree-holder and purchaser in a case like the present to say that substantial injury has not been suffered simply because further remedies may be barred by some technical rule of law."

Held—That there was an inadequacy of price resulting from irregularities in the conduct of the sale and that that occasioned a substantial injury to the applicant which was not removed.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before SHAR UDDIN and COXE, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2228 OF 1908. GANENDRA MOHAN CHOWDHURI AND ANOTHER Plaintiffs, Appellants. v. GYA PROSA TEWARI AND ANOTHER, Respondents. 9th July 1912.

Rent, suit for—Registered kabuliya—Holding over—Letter agreeing to receive reduced rent—Admissibility in evidence—Contract, repudiation of, Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), sec. 29.

The Appeal arose out of a suit for rent. The Defendants, in Chaitra 1304, executed a registered kabuliya in favour of the Plaintiffs with respect to the lands in suit. The term of this kabuliya was from 1304 to 1309 inclusive. Subsequently in Assin 1310 the Defendants obtained a letter from the Plaintiffs' naib by which the rent was reduced from Rs. 87-8 as. to Rs. 37-3 as. on the ground that the entire land was not fit for cultivation. A condition was attached to this reduction of rent to the effect that it was dependant on the payment of the current and back rents within a specified time. The suit was decreed by the Munsif at the rate of Rs. 37-3 as. and the Plaintiffs' appeal to the District Judge was dismissed. The Plaintiffs then appealed to the High Court.

Held—That the letter which was very similar in its terms and reserved an annual rent came within the scope of the decision in Durga Prasad Singh v. Rajendra Navain Bagchi (I. L. R. 37 Cal. 293) and required registration under sec. 17 of the Registration Act and could not therefore under sec. 49 be received as evidence of any transaction affecting the property.

Obiter—Nothing in the letter, supposing it to be a valid contract, could debar the Defendant from instituting a suit under sec. 38 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for the reduction of rent. But the fact that the Defendants were entitled to bring suit under sec. 38 would not entitle them in the present suit to repudiate the terms of the contract which was freely entered into between them and the Plaintiffs.

That the Plaintiffs' guardian was entitled to grant the letter which was in the nature of a lease for a period not exceeding 5 years and such grant was not forbidden by sec. 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act.

MIRZA SAJJAD HUSAIN and anr., Appellants,
v.
NAWAB WAZIR ALI
KHAN and others,
Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 596—Purdanashin lady, deed executed by—Onus to prove intelligent execution not discharged—Concurrent findings of fact—Materials on which finding based if must all be set out in the judgment.

Strongest and most satisfactory proof ought to be given by persons who claim under sale or gift from purdanashin ladies that the transaction was a real and bona fide one and fully understood by the lady whose property was dealt with.

TACORDREN TEWARRY v. NAWAB SYED ALI HUSAIN KHAN (1), SHAMBATI KOERI v. JAGO BIBI (2) followed.

Where a concurrent finding of fact was sought to be challenged before the Privy Council on the ground that the Court of first instance had misdirected itself inasmuch as in the course of a long judgment certain materials of a most elementary character for arriving at a conclusion had not been set out in the narrative which the judgment contained :

Held—That there was no ground for the suggestion that the Court had not taken these circumstances into account.

That it would be to misconstrue entirely the provisions of sec. 596 of Act XIV of 1882 as to concurrent findings of fact if the Judges of India were to have impliedly the duty laid upon them of making their narrative of the circumstances minutely and completely exhaustive, under the penalty that if they failed to do so, the absence from their mind of elementary considerations might be presumed.

(1) L. R. 1 I. A. 192, 206 (1874).

This was an Appeal from a judgment and decree, dated the 27th of March 1907, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which varied a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow, dated the 30th of March 1906.

The suit was brought by the Appellants, as Plaintiffs, to obtain a declaration that the property specified in three separate deeds was wakf (endowed property) and for separate possession of all the properties, as against the first Defendant Nawab Abid Husain Khan, or joint possession of them with him.

The claim of the Plaintiffs was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge, but on appeal, the Court of the Judicial Commissioner while upholding his decree as regards one of the deeds, dated November 13th, 1902, reversed it with respect to property included in the other two. The Appellants obtained leave from the Appellate Court to appeal against that portion of its judgment and decree, which affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

The circumstances out of which the present Appeal has arisen may be shortly stated as follows :—

One Madad Ali, deceased, erected a tomb in the City of Lucknow. On the 4th of December 1886, he executed a wakfnama, or deed of endowment, by which he dedicated the properties mentioned in lists A and B attached to the plaint, for the maintenance of the tomb and for other purposes. He also appointed two ladies, named Sardar Begam and Mehdi Begam, trustees of the property, and gave them power to nominate their successors. The former died in December 1889, and the latter continued to manage the property alone.

On the 7th March 1898, Mehdi Begam executed a deed by which she added to the endowment the property specified in lists D₁ to D₃ attached to the plaint, and she appointed the first Plaintiff and the first Defendant to be the trustees of the whole of the endowed property.

On the 13th of November 1902, Mehdi Begam executed another document by which property valued at about Rs. 43,000 was added to the property already subject to the trust, and of this document the executant appointed herself and the first Plaintiff, and the first and second Defendants to be the trustees.

Mehdi Begam died in February 1903, and the first Defendant succeeded, as the brother of the deceased, in obtaining possession from the Revenue Court of all her property. On the 27th of April 1904, the second Plaintiff was appointed a trustee of the endowed property by the second Defendant, who retired from the trust.

On the 1st of April 1905, the Plaintiffs brought the present suit. The plaint stated the above and other facts, and asked for a declaration that the properties mentioned in the lists attached to the plaint were trust properties under the said three trust-deeds of 1886, 1898, and 1902. The Plaintiffs also prayed for separate possession of all the properties as against the first Defendant, or joint possession of them with him.

The substantial defence to the suit was contained in the written statement of the first Defendant. It is now necessary to refer to it only in so far as it relates to the deed of the 13th of November 1902, in regard to which the first Defendant pleaded that it was not executed by Mehdi Begam, and that she was at the time of the alleged execution by her, infirm and incapable of understanding it, and that she had had no independent advice.

Both parties put in documentary evidence and the Plaintiffs examined a number of witnesses. On the 30th March 1906, the Subordinate Judge made a decree by which he dismissed the suit with costs. He held that a valid wakf had not been created by the deed of the 7th of March 1898. With regard to the deed of the 13th November, he decided that though it had been executed by Mehdi Begam, it was not a document to be given effect to because its intelligent execution by her had not been proved.

The Plaintiffs appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and their appeal was heard by two learned Judges (Clamier and Sanders, JJ) who, on the 27th March 1907, delivered their judgment and decree by which they modified the decree of the Subordinate Judge by allowing the appeal of the Plaintiffs as to the property detailed in the deeds of the 4th of December 1886 and the 7th of March 1898, but they confirmed that decree and dismissed the suit in respect of the property detailed in the deed of the 13th of November 1902. As regards the last-named deed they were of opinion that it had not been proved that when Mehdi Begam executed it she understood its provisions and its effect upon her interests.

Hence this appeal.

Sir E. Richards, K. C., and Mr. Ross for the Appellants.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Cowell, for the Respondents, contended that appeal was concluded by concurrent findings of fact of the Courts below. It was a pure question of fact whether or not the pardanashin lady intelligently executed the document. The onus lies upon the party relying upon the document to satisfy the Courts which they have failed to do. There was no evidence that the deed was explained to her or that she understood its terms or its effect upon her interests. Mere reading of a document is not enough. Reliance was placed on Shambati Koesi v. Jago Bibi (2), Karuppanan v. Srinivasa (3), Allen v. Quebec Warehouse Co. (4), Ram Anugra Narain v. Chowdhry Hanuman (5).

Sir E. Richards, K. C., replying on this point, submitted that the Subordinate Judge had misdirected himself in estimating the evidence. He did not take into consideration the position of the lady and the facts that she possessed great business capacity and always conducted her business and managed her affairs and that she herself was a trustee under the deed. He relied on Mahomed Buksh Khan v. Hoseini Bibi (6).

LORD SHAW.—This is an Appeal from a judgment and decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner for Oudh, dated the 27th March 1907, modifying a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow, dated the 30th March 1906. The suit was brought on the 1st April 1905.

It prayed for a declaration that all the property comprised in three deeds of endowment was wakf, that is to say, was endowed property, and the Plaintiffs (the present Appellants) as trustees under these deeds prayed for possession. The claim in short was, as stated, a "claim for possession of wakf property by right of trusteeship."

The claim of the Appellants was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge in its entirety. Upon appeal, the Appellate Court upheld this decree with respect to the property comprised in one of the three deeds of endowment, viz., that of 13th November 1902, and reversed it with respect to the property included in the other two deeds. That is to say the endowments under these two deeds were held good.

The only question raised in the present Appeal has reference to the last endowment, viz., that constituted by the deed of 1902. The preceding deeds, one dated in 1886 and one in 1898, were somewhat limited in their character, and the Defendants' contention under which these deeds were attacked is not now further insisted on.

Many years ago a tomb, or, more properly speaking—as their Lordships are informed—a mausoleum, was erected in the city of Lucknow by one Madad Ali, now dead; and in 1886 he made a wakf of certain property for the upkeep of the the mausoleum and the performance of religious observances in connection therewith. By the deed of endowment Mehdi Begam was appointed one of two trustees, and upon the death of her co-trustee in 1899 she continued to manage the property alone. In March 1898 she executed a document whereby she purported to add to the endowment, and she appointed the first Plaintiff and her brother, the first Defendant, to be trustees of the original and added property. There appears to be no doubt that Mehdi Begam was much interested in the mausoleum and in its endowment, its upkeep, and its services. She died on the 4th February 1903, having on the previous 13th day of November executed another deed—that with regard to which the parties are now in contention.

Mehdi Begam was a purdanashin woman; she was separated from her husband, she was unable to read or write, and she was possessed, at the date of the deed which is questioned, of a fortune of about Rs. 50,000. It is not disputed that in the ordinary case of a deed granted by a purdanashin lady, it rests upon those founding upon the document to establish that she understood its effect and that the deed was intelligently and properly executed by her.

The wakf is undoubtedly of a comprehensive character. It proceeds upon the following narrative:—

"Whereas this world is unstable and no reliance can be placed on this borrowed life, and after death there remains no trace either of soul or body, and whosoever has come to this world from non-existence will be completely annihilated one day, according to the proverb 'all that lies over it is mortal'; but through good and charitable deeds, or from one's male issue, if he is good and obedient, the continuance of one's name is possible, I, the declarant, have no issue of any kind from whom I may hope for 'the endurance of my name, consequently it seems proper to incline myself to the performance of good deeds.'"

The deed thereupon proceeds to endow:—

"With possession in the name of the undermentioned places in my lifetime in connection with the Rousa and for its maintenance, stability, and expenses, and also for sending people to Karbala and other holy places, as detailed below, my personal, moveable and immovable property, as specified hereafter, valued at Rs. 50,000."

She constituted herself as Mutawalli, that is, as the manager of the religious endowment, and she appointed her brother and her general agent as trustees. Among the succeeding clauses the following appears to be important:—

"That the trustees shall in my lifetime, as well as after my death, continue to manage the undermentioned things just like myself, and the carrying out of the undermentioned things and of the above conditions shall also be binding and incumbent on me, as it is incumbent according to the Imania law. And for my livelihood my wasika and pension are sufficient."

That pension amounted, as is admitted, to somewhere under Rs. 40 per month. Power is given for collection of the income of all property conveyed, such collection to rest only in the general agent, who was one of the trustees.

The document may be described shortly as an inter vivos conveyance, taking effect de presenti and stripping the lady of all her possessions, except to the extent of the reservation made to herself of her pension of Rs. 40 per month. It appears to their Lordships that the deed accordingly is of a character justifying a strict and careful application of the rule operating for the protection of purdanashin women and demanding affirmative proof on the subject of their intelligent understanding and execution of deeds attributed to them. This view is strengthened by the marked contrast which exists between this document of 1902 and the previous deed of endowment of 1898, which was limited in its scope, was purely testamentary, and expressly reserved powers of management of all the affairs of the endowed property to the lady herself, with power of amending and cancelling the endowment.

"According to the principles which have always guided the Courts in dealing with sales or gifts made by ladies in such a position (purdanashin ladies), the strongest and most satisfactory proof ought to be given by the person who claims under a sale or gift from them, that the transaction was a real and bond fide one and fully understood by the lady whose property is dealt with."

This is the language of Sir Montagu Smith in Tacoordeen Tewarry v. Nawab Syed Ali Husain Khan (1) and is still the law. In the words of Sir Andrew Scoble in Shambati Koeri v. Jago Bibi (2):—

"It is a well-known rule of this Committee that in the case of deeds and powers executed by parda-nashin ladies, it is requisite that those who rely upon them should satisfy the Court that they have been explained to and understood by those who executed them."

Accordingly, the one and only question in this case is:—the burden of proof being thus placed, has it been discharged by the party upon whom it rests? In their Lordships' opinion, Mr. DeGruyther was justified in founding upon the concurrent findings in fact of the Courts below. The Subordinate Judge, having heard the evidence, says:—

"It does not satisfy me that Mehdi Begam intelligently understood the deed on which she was placing her seal, and knew at the time its effects upon her rights as owner of the property comprised in the deed."

It is unnecessary to go into the details as to the alleged execution of the document in the zenana, as to whether certain witnesses knew the voice of the executant, as to whether the deed in point of fact was read in circumstances giving any indication of its appreciation by the grantor. The finding of the Subordinate Judge is as stated. In the judgment passed by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh the opinion expressed was as follows:—

"It has not been proved that when Mehdi Begam executed the wakfnama she understood its provisions or its effects upon her interests."

By sec. 596, of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) it is specifically provided as follows with reference to Appeals to His Majesty the King in Council:—

"Where the decree appealed from affirms a decision of the Court immediately below the Court passing such decree, the appeal must involve some substantial question of law."

Their Lordships put to the learned Counsel for the Appellants what question of law was here involved, and it was replied that, while the findings of fact were concurrent, the judgment of the Subordinate Judge showed that he had misdirected himself. It turned out that this was rested upon the ground that in the course of a long judgment certain materials for arriving at a conclusion had not been set out in the narrative which the judgment contains. These materials were of the most elementary character; and their Lordships are of opinion that there is no ground for the suggestion that the Subordinate Judge had not taken them into account. It would be to misconstrue entirely the provisions as to concurrent findings in fact if the Judges of India were to have impliedly the duty laid upon them of making their narrative of the circumstances minutely and completely exhaustive, under the penalty that if they failed to do so, the absence from their mind of elementary considerations might be presumed.

The Courts below accordingly having concurrently found that the facts which it lay upon the Appellants to establish were not proved, it appears to their Lordships that this is to all intents and purposes a concurrent finding on a matter of fact, and that accordingly such a finding cannot be disturbed. The rule so clearly laid down by Lord Macnaghten in Karlippanan

PURNA CHANDRA MANDAL v. ANUKUL BISWAS (1) explained.

RAHIMBOY HABIBBOY v. TURNER (2) referred to.

Fraud is not to be lightly charged or lightly found specially in cases of applications to set aside an execution sale, where this reserve is too often neglected.

Misstatement of value, even if it can be described as "fraud," does not constitute fraudulent concealment, and non-publication of sale-proclamation in the mofussil even if it exposes the sale to attack at the instance of the judgment-debtor would not by itself bring the case under sec. 18 of the Limitation Act, unless it is shown that the judgment-debtor has, by means of fraud of which the decree-holder was guilty or to which he was accessory, been kept from the knowledge of his right.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 9th of December 1910 against an order of Babu Charu Chandra Mukerji, Subordinate Judge of Darbhanga, dated the 24th of September 1910.

The Respondent judgment-debtor whose property had been sold in execution and purchased by the decree-holder for Rs. 11,000, on the 15th December 1909, applied on the 15th January 1910 to have the sale set aside on the ground of irregularity and fraud in publishing the sale. Being one day too late, he claimed that the case fell within the provisions of sec. 18 of the Limitation Act.

The Subordinate Judge on the evidence found (1) that the decree-holders in stating the value of the property to be Rs. 7,000 had made "an intentional misstatement amounting to fraud and irregularity," the real value of the property being approximately Rs. 28,000; (2) that the sale was held within 30 days of the publication of the sale-proclamation in the Civil Court contrary to law and that the publication of the proclamation in the Collectorate preceded the publication in the mofussil, if the proclamation was published in the mofussil at all, instead of following it as required by Or. 21, r. 54, cl. (2); that in point of fact the sale-proclamation was not at all published in the mofussil; (3) that although on the 15th December 1909, the date of the sale, the judgment-debtor's dewan made payment in part of another decree of the same decree-holder then under execution, the decree-holder's agent who received the money did not inform the judgment-debtor's dewan of the sale, "as in all fairness he should have done." Upon these findings the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that there was fraud on the part of the decree-holder in publishing and conducting the sale and that there was material irregularity in publishing it and that the judgment-debtor had suffered substantial injury thereby.

With regard to the application of sec. 18 of the Limitation Act, the Subordinate Judge held as follows:—

"In this case the judgment-debtor has said in his evidence that he was kept from the knowledge of the sale by the fraud of the decree-holder, and from the facts disclosed in the case I find that allegation is true. The judgment-debtor therefore was entitled to come within 30 days from the day on which he came to know of the sale, i.e., the 15th January 1910," when the decree-holder's agent first informed the judgment-debtor's dewan of the sale.

The Subordinate Judge accordingly allowed the application and set aside the sale.

The decree-holder thereupon preferred this appeal.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

JENKINS, C. J.—The Appellant is a decree-holder and a purchaser in execution of his own decree. His complaint is that the sale in execution of this decree has been set aside on an application under r. 90 of Or. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code though that application was made after the expiration of the period allowed by the Limitation Act. He also maintains that the order was erroneous on its merits. The sale was on the 15th of December 1908; the application on the following 15th of January. Art. 166 of the Indian Limitation Act permits a period of 30 days only from the date of the sale for an application to set aside a sale in execution of a decree.

The application in this case was admittedly made beyond this period, and the only answer proposed to this objection is that sec. 18 of the Act gave the applicant an extended period. The sole question is whether this is made out.

The Subordinate Judge has decided in favour of the judgment-debtor. In opposition to this the Appellant maintains that to satisfy the terms of sec. 18, the fraud must have been subsequent to the sale, and no such fraud is alleged. Next he contends that even if a wider scope be ascribed to the section, no fraudulent concealment is proved.

In support of the first of these propositions, Purna Chandra Mandal v. Anukul Biswas (1) has been cited to us, and there, no doubt, it was said in reference to conditions, not unlike the present, that "the question of limitation depends upon what has taken place after the date of the sale with regard to the knowledge of the judgment-debtor concerned." This passage is capable of a meaning to which no exception can be taken. At the same time it is at least equally open to a construction which would involve a doctrine difficult to reconcile with what was said by the Privy Council in Rahimbhoy Habibhoy v. Turner (2): this would be the case if by this passage is meant that what occurs prior to the sale can be wholly excluded from consideration, and a clean slate claimed. But it was a saying of an early Chancellor, that fraud and fraud end in foul; and in this lies the truth of the matter. Fraud—at any rate the class of fraud with which we are here concerned,—is a continuing influence and until that influence ends, it retains its power of mischief. And so, it was said in the case to which I have referred that when a man has committed fraud and has got property thereby, it is for him to show that the person injured by the fraud and suing to recover the property has had clear and definite knowledge of those facts which constitute the fraud at a time which is too remote to allow him to bring the suit. If, therefore, the Appellant's success depended on the first of his two propositions I should have hesitated to decide in his favour.

But he is on firmer ground when he takes up his stand on the second of his two contentions. Was there any fraudulent concealment of the execution proceedings on the part of the Appellants? It is not suggested that there was any beyond what is disclosed in the judgment under appeal; and the Respondent sought to support the order under appeal on that judgment and on that judgment alone: beyond that we were invited not to go. It is true that the word "fraud" is used in the judgment with some freedom; but that is not enough. Do the facts constitute fraudulent concealment? It is an enquiry that requires considerable care, for fraud is not to be lightly charged or lightly found. This cannot be too much emphasized, especially in cases of this class where this reserve is too often neglected. The language of the Subordinate Judge in some measure invites the criticism that he seems to treat fraud and irregularity almost as one, and yet they essentially differ.

The misstatement of the value in the execution petition is described as a "fraud and irregularity"; irregularity it may have been; and even assuming for the sake of argument that it was a fraud, still it does not constitute the fraudulent concealment necessary to save limitation. Even if the non-publication of the sale-proclamation in the mofussil exposed the sale to attack at the instance of the judgment-debtor, it is not shewn that he has by means of fraud, of which the decree-holder was guilty or to which he was accessory, been kept from the knowledge of his right. Nor can I find in the other facts on which the Subordinate Judge relies that which is necessary to bring the provisions of sec. 18 of the Limitation Act into play. And I desire to make it clear that the judgment-debtor requested us to decide this appeal on the materials contained in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and on that alone. The appeal is therefore allowed with costs and the application dismissed with costs. We assess the costs of the Appeal at 5 gold

MOHADRO PROSAD SHAHU v. GAJADHAR PROSAD SAHU.

This is an Appeal from the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Mozufferpur dismissing a suit brought by a partner in a banking business for the recovery from the other partners of a considerable sum of money said to have been deposited in the bank in circumstances which may be thus described.

The Plaintiff's father, Ganesh, and his uncles, Gajadhar (the father of the first Defendant) and Baldeo (the father of the second, third and fourth Defendants) were members of a joint Hindu family, which owned, inter alia, an ancestral bank. Ganesh died in 1886, and it was thereafter, in 1893 apparently, agreed that each of the three branches of the joint family should be entitled to draw a monthly allowance from the bank of Rs. 750 for personal expenses. The Plaintiff's allowances were, however, not required, and it was arranged through his mother, he being a minor at the time, that they should be permitted to accumulate with interest in the bank. In the meantime disputes in the management arose, and on the 5th April 1900 a suit was instituted on behalf of the Plaintiff against Baldeo and Gajadhar for partition of the family property and for an account. This suit was compromised on the 17th April 1901, the consent-decree dividing the moveable and immoveable properties of the family, discharging Baldeo and Gajadhar from further liability to account, and directing the appointment of a manager for the realization of the assets and outstandings, and the winding up of the banking business.

On the 17th July 1904, the Plaintiff brought another suit for the purpose of having the consent-decree of the 17th

April 1901 set aside as inequitable and in fraud of his rights, for a fresh partition of the family property, and for a further account from Gajadhar and the sons of Baldeo who had died in the interval. Most of the points in controversy were once more amicably settled when the case came before the High Court on appeal in 1908, and a decree was made as to the division of the property in accordance with the terms of the compromise then arrived at. But the parties had been unable to agree as to the liability of Gajadhar and the sons of Baldeo to account, and on this portion of the case the High Court decided in favour of the Plaintiff. It was accordingly further ordered by the decree that, as the accounts of the joint family business had not been duly investigated by the Plaintiff's next friend and guardian ad litem in the suit of 1900, they should then be taken; and the case was remanded to the lower Court for that purpose and with the further direction that a receiver should realise the outstandings of the banking business and "divide the same, after satisfying the debts, if any, of the bank, between the parties according to their respective shares." The consent-decree of 1901 was thus entirely set aside and superseded.

In accordance, as it is said, with these directions the Plaintiff moved the District Judge by petition on the 10th December 1908 to order the receiver to pay to him the sum of Rs. 87,247, which, it was alleged, were shown by the books of the bank in the receiver's possession to be due to him on account of the moneys deposited on his behalf by his mother, with interest up to date. This petition was forwarded in original to the receiver for disposal, and the receiver decided that the request contained in it could not be complied with. He was of opinion apparently that the item of Rs. 87,247 referred to was inseparable from the whole account, and that the Plaintiff's right to it could be determined only by the Commissioner appointed to adjust the accounts of the partnership. The soundness of this decision was challenged by the Plaintiff in a petition which he presented to the District Judge on the 8th February 1909, and in which he urged that the sum claimed by him was a separate item in respect of which the bank and he stood in the relation of debtor and creditor, that the transaction out of which the claim arose was apart from and independent of his position as a co-sharer in the bank, and that he was entitled as an ordinary creditor to recover it from the hands of the receiver, as contemplated by the decree of the High Court, without having to wait for a final settlement of accounts between him and his partners. The District Judge, however, decided to await the Commissioner's report, and that was submitted by one Mr. Smith on the 23rd September 1909. In it the only passage that has any bearing on the claim now under consideration is that in which it is stated that it appeared from the books of the bank that each partner had, in accordance with the arrangement already alluded to, received and been duly paid an allowance of Rs. 750 per mensem from the year 1893 down to the year 1910. The Commissioner was silent as to any moneys banked by the Plaintiff, not quid partner, but as an ordinary depositor or creditor, or, in other words, as to what may be called the Plaintiff's private account with the bank as opposed to the account between him and the other partners. The present claim was, therefore, not enquired into by the Commissioner; and yet the District Judge seems to have deemed it unnecessary to interfere, although it would appear from the concluding part of his order of the 24th December 1909, that he affirmed the view of the receiver that the claim could be settled by the Commissioner alone. Exception on this ground was evidently taken by the Plaintiff to the Commissioner's report; but the District Judge's order of the 29th June 1910, on a representation submitted by Gajadhar, indicates that it had been held to be out of time and rejected in consequence. The result, it is urged by the learned Vakil for the Appellant, was that the Plaintiff was forced to bring the present action, which he instituted on the 15th November 1909, for the recovery of his deposits, with interest, less one-third, the proportion recoverable from himself as a partner. The suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge on the 31st August 1910 and its failure seems to have driven the Plaintiff back to the proceedings in the suit for partition and accounts still pending before the District Judge who was on the 28th November 1910 moved, as Mr. Smith had left the country, to remit the matter to a second Commissioner, Rai Shib Chandra Chatterjee Bahadur, who had been appointed to deal with certain matters other than those referred to Mr. Smith, in order that the question of the Plaintiff's deposits in the bank might be enquired into and fully reported upon. To this prayer Gajadhar objected on several grounds. In the first place, the Plaintiff had intimated that it was his intention to appeal—as he at once did by preferring the present appeal on the 15th December 1910—against the dismissal of his suit for the recovery of his deposits directly from his co-partners; and it was argued that, in those circumstances, it was not open to him to ask, in other proceedings, for an order for accounts in connection with the same deposits. Next, it was asserted that the Commissioner, Mr. Smith, had in fact investigated the whole account and definitely found that the allowance of Rs. 750 a month had been regularly paid to the Plaintiff; and it was submitted that any claim on that score should have been made when Mr. Smith's report was presented in 1909, and could not be entertained simply because the Plaintiff's separate suit had failed. These objections prevailed with the learned District Judge who refused the application. Against this refusal the Plaintiff did not appeal; but he eventually moved this Court in revision and was successful in obtaining from it, on the 1st May 1911, an order setting it aside and remitting the case for reconsideration. We gather that Mookerjee and Teunon, JJ., were of opinion that a proper account of the transactions of the Plaintiff, qua depositor, with the bank, had not been taken in the suit for partition and accounts, and ought in justice to be taken either in the proceedings ancillary to the High Court's decree of 1908 or in connection with the present suit. It was, therefore, ordered by those learned Judges that the proceedings in the earlier suit should be stayed pending the disposal of the present appeal, and that the Plaintiff's deposit account, so to speak, should be taken in the former unless, as the result of this appeal, such an account had to be taken in connection with the latter.

The position, therefore, is reduced to this, that the parties are now disputing before us regarding nothing more than the vexatious question whether the Plaintiff or the Respondents should bear the costs of the present appeal and of the suit out of which it has sprung. For the Plaintiff has, admittedly, secured by the revisional order of this Court passed on the 1st May 1911, all that he can want; and it is contended on behalf of the Defendants-Respondents by their learned Counsel, Mr. Sinha, that, whatever the result, his clients ought not to be required to pay for this unnecessary litigation. We have come to the conclusion that Mr. Sinha is right.

The suit before us now was dismissed by the Court below, first, because it was not maintainable at all, as being a suit by a partner for a partial account; and, secondly, because it was barred by reason of the provisions of sec. 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

The second, at least, of these demurrers must, in our opinion, succeed. Sec. 10 of the present Code lays it down that no Court shall proceed with the trial of any suit in which the matter in issue is also directly and substantially in issue in a previously instituted suit between the same parties litigating under the same title, where such suit is pending in the same or any other Court having jurisdiction to grant the relief claimed. It was for a moment suggested that the Plaintiff is suing as a partner of the banking business in the partition suit and as an ordinary creditor in this, and cannot, therefore, be said to be litigating under the same title; but there is nothing in the suggestion, and it was not pressed. The provision is clearly applicable, and the only other answer attempted is that it contemplates merely a stay of the trial of the second suit, and not its dismissal as not maintainable. It is true that the words "proceed with the trial of" replace the word "try" in the corresponding sec. 12 of the Code of 1882, and the altered language of the new section thus removes all doubt as to its being possible to institute such a suit as, for example, that of Raja Ranjit Sinha v. Bhagabatty Charan Roy (1). But in the present instance there is no substance in the plea, since the only result of a stay would have been to keep this suit pending until the sole question at issue in it had been decided in the other suit and so become res judicata. The appeal must, therefore, fail on this ground.

The other point taken by the learned Subordinate Judge is one of considerable difficulty, and we are not sure that there are sufficient materials before us for a definite decision. For present purposes we must take the facts as alleged by the Plaintiff-Appellant: that is to say, we must take it that the moneys claimed were deposited by him in the bank, of which he was himself a proprietor to the extent of one-third. On his behalf it is contended that, quoad these deposits, he is in the position of an outside creditor; that his transactions in this particular connection have nothing whatever to do with the partnership accounts; that he is entitled to his money like any ordinary customer of the bank; and that, by limiting his claim to two-thirds of it, he avoids the difficulty involved prima facie in suing himself and being at once Plaintiff and Defendant in the same action. The law on the subject has, as Dr. Ghosh has shown by reference, in particular, to Lindlay on Partnership, Ed. 7, at pages 133, 299, 303, 497, 591, 592 and 595, and the judgment of Ameer Ali and Pratt, JJ., in Durga Prosunno Bose v. Raghunath Dass (2), considerably developed; and, whatever doubts may at one time have been entertained in England as to the maintainability of an action by one partner against another under the old technical rules of English procedure, even the Courts there have latterly taken a more reasonable attitude towards disputes between partners. And here in India we ought to feel still less hampered, and should not hesitate to look to the substance rather than to the form. Regarding the matter from this standpoint we find that certain principles emerge which, at the outset, seem undoubtedly to stand in the Appellant's way. If the items in dispute are items in the partnership account, it would appear at first sight to be impossible to deal with them by themselves without taking a general account of the partnership business. Here, as the learned Doctor has frankly admitted in the course of argument, if the Appellant's allowances had never been drawn, but had been simply left to accumulate undrawn in the bank, it might be difficult to urge that the moneys so accumulated were not items in the partnership account. Does it, as has been argued, make any substantial difference that they were drawn and replaced as deposits, possibly by means of mere book transfers? We are not prepared to say that it does. It is suggested that the deposits cannot be treated as "advances" to the firm by a partner in it; but the Appellant must not be allowed to evade the fact that he was, after all, primarily a partner; and does not that circumstance make a real difference in his position as a depositor and creditor? We are inclined to think that it does, and that there is, at least, the difference recognised in England by sec. 44 of the Partnership Act, 1890 (53 and 54 Vict., C. 39), which provides, in connection with the settling of accounts between partners after dissolution, for the satisfaction, first, of the debts and liabilities of a firm to persons other than the partners in it, and, then, for the payment to each partner rateably of what is due to him from the firm for advances, as distinguished from capital. No doubt, the statute referred to does not extend to British India, and there is in the Indian Contract Act, 1872, which purports to codify the law relating to partnerships, no provision corresponding with that just described. Still, it would seem clear that, on general principles, the claims of partners must in the course of winding-up be postponed to those of outsiders. This, however, does not, as it seems to us, conclude the matter. The law in this connection seems to be summed up by Lord Lindlay when, at page 592, he answers the question—when can an action be maintained between partners without taking a general account of all the partnership dealings and transactions?—by saying that “each case must depend upon its own circumstances, and upon whether justice can really be done without taking such an account.” In other words, which we quote from the judgment of White, C. J., and Rahim, J., in Karri Venkata Reddi v. Kollu Narasayya (3), “it may be taken generally that, if the account sought is in respect of a matter which, though arising out of the partnership business or connected with it, does not involve the taking of general accounts, the Court will, as a rule give the relief asked for, and will now-a-days refuse to interfere only in those cases in which a partial account would work injustice to the other partner.” It seems to us that there may well be cases in which the complete solvency of a bank is admitted and a partner might sue, like any other customer, for the taking separately of his private account as a customer and for recovery of the balance found standing to his credit. This may be a case of that kind; and, indeed, judged by the pleadings, it would seem to be such a case. In the written statement it is nowhere suggested that the suit was not maintainable because the Plaintiff was a partner and his rights as against the Defendants could not be ascertained without an investigation of the whole of the accounts of the banking business. It was not pleaded that injustice might be done to the Defendant partners if the Plaintiff were given a decree for a substantial sum appearing from a partial account to be due to him as a depositor when it might transpire, on the taking of a general account of all the dealings of the partnership, that the assets were insufficient to go round. Every other imaginable defence was taken; but not this: nor was any issue raised on the point. It was maintained that the suit was bad by reason of the non-joinder of the receiver; that it was barred by limitation; that it was barred by sec. 10 of the Civil Procedure Code; that the Plaintiff was estopped by his conduct from pressing it; and even that the hathchitta on which it was based was not a genuine document. But, as we have said, it was never asserted that the circumstances were such that justice could not be done between the parties without the taking of a general account. We are, therefore, inclined to hold that, on the pleadings, the suit was maintainable, and that it ought not to have been thrown out in limine on the first of the grounds on which the Court below dismissed it. But whether or not a decree for the Plaintiff-Appellant ought to have followed, is quite another matter, the decision of which would have depended on all the circumstances and the justice of the case. So far then as this point is concerned, we are not prepared to support the judgment under appeal; and, had it not been for our decision on the other aspect of the case, we should have been constrained to direct a remand.

The question of costs remains; and, as we have already indicated, we are of opinion that they must be borne by the Appellant. He ought, when he was refused satisfaction in the general suit for partition and accounts, to have appealed; but he mistook his remedy altogether by omitting to do that and having recourse to a separate suit which, in our view, he was not justified in instituting. And, having failed in this second suit in the Court below, he at once harked back to the other suit, where he has at length succeeded with no other result than this, that the whole of the litigation, original and appellate, with which we are now concerned, is shown to have been supererogatory. For this he is surely bound to pay.

The Appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

RULE NO. 5977 OF 1911.

MOOKERJEE, J.	}	HARI MANDAL and
CARNDUFF, J.		others, Petitioners,
1912.		v.
12, April.		KESHAB CHANDRA MANNA, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 195, sub-secs. (6) and (7)—Application to District Judge to revoke sanction to prosecute granted by Munsif—Transfer to Subordinate Judge, if valid—

Civil Courts Act, (XII of 1887), sec. 22, cls. (1) and (4).

An application under sub-sec. (6) of sec. 195, Cr. P. C., is not an appeal within the meaning of sub sec. (2) of sec. 22 of the Bengal Civil Courts Act.

An application made to a District Judge for the revocation of a sanction to prosecute granted by a Munsif cannot therefore be transferred by him for disposal to a Subordinate Judge.

This was a Rule granted on the 1st of December 1911 against an order of Babu Ganendra Nath Mookerjee, Subordinate Judge of Midnapur, dated the 24th of August 1911, confirming on appeal the order of Babu G. C. Basu, Munsif of Tamluk, dated the 28th of January 1911, granting sanction to the Opposite Party for the prosecution of the Petitioners under secs. 193, 196, 463 and 471, I. P. C.

In this case it appears that in execution of a certain decree an application for full satisfaction of the decree was filed on behalf of the decree-holder and the execution case was disposed of on full satisfaction. Subsequently the decree-holder applied to have the order set aside on the ground that the application for full satisfaction was not filed by him or on his behalf. An enquiry was held in the matter in the presence of the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor in which it was found that the application was a forgery. The judgment-debtor preferred an appeal in which the judgment of the lower Court was upheld. Thereupon the decree holder applied for sanction to prosecute the judgment-debtor and his witnesses. The lower Court granted sanction to prosecute the judgment-debtor under secs. 193, 196, 463 and 471, I. P. C., and his witnesses (Opposite Parties Nos. 5 to 8) under secs. 193, 484, I. P. C.

There was an appeal from the said order of the Munsif to the District Judge of Midnapur who transferred the appeal to the file of Babu Jnanendra Nath Mukherjee, Subordinate Judge of Midnapur, for disposal.

The Subordinate Judge having dismissed the appeal, the present application for revision was made to the High Court.

Babu Monmatha Nath Mukherjee for the Plaintiff.

Babu Mohini Nath Bose for the Opposite Party.

This Rule raises the question whether when an application has been made to a District Judge under sec. 195, sub-sec. (6), Cr. P. C., the application can be transferred by him to a Subordinate Judge for disposal. Sub-sec. (6) provides that any sanction given or refused under the section may be revoked or granted by any authority to which the authority giving or refusing it is subordinate. Sub-sec. (7) then provides that for the purposes of this section every Court shall be deemed to be subordinate only to the Court to which appeals from the former Court ordinarily lie. Now sec. 21, sub-sec. (2) of the Bengal Civil Courts Act, 1887, provides that an appeal from an order of the Munsif lies to the District Judge. Consequently the District Judge is the authority competent under sub-sec. (6) of sec. 195, Cr. P. C., to revoke or grant a sanction which has been given or refused by a Munsif. The District Judge in our opinion is not competent under sec. 22, sub-sec. (1) of the Bengal Civil Courts Act, 1887, to transfer the application presented to him for disposal by the Subordinate Judge. That section provides that a District Judge may transfer to any Subordinate Judge under his administrative control any appeals pending before him from the decree or order of a Munsif. An application under sub-sec. 6 of sec. 195, Cr. P. C., is in our view not an appeal within the meaning of sub-sec. (1) of sec. 22 of the Bengal Civil Courts Act, 1887. It has not been suggested to us in this case that any order has been made by the High Court under sub-sec. (4) of sec. 21 of the Bengal Civil Courts Act, 1887, so as to constitute the Subordinate Judge the appellate authority over the Munsif. Consequently the order made by the Subordinate Judge was passed without jurisdiction. The Rule is therefore made absolute and the order assailed is discharged. The District Judge will now take up the matter and deal with it as early as practicable.

Since this order was passed, we have found that the view taken by us is in harmony with that adopted by D. Chatterjee, J., and N. R. Chatterjee, J., in Ram Charan v. Tirupulla (1), Rule No. 5426 of 1911, decided on the 4th March 1912.

Rule made absolute.

ed by the sale, if may apply to make deposit—Conditional deposit, if valid—Withdrawal of condition, effect of—Deposit not made on the last day owing to absence of Judge—Effect.

Where on the last day allowed by law to make a deposit under r. 89 of Or. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code for the purpose of setting aside a sale, the Petitioner, owing to the presiding officers having left the Court earlier than usual, was unable to make the required deposit :

Held—That the petition and the deposit were properly received on the next day, as no act of the Court itself ought to be allowed to prejudice the position of the Petitioner.

A conditional deposit is not a good deposit under r. 89, Or. XXI, but where the Petitioner withdrew the condition the moment the decree-holder auction-purchaser objected :

Held—That there were no sufficient grounds under the circumstances to treat the deposit as invalid.

R. 89, Or. XXI, does not confer a right to make a deposit to a person who had purchased the property sold so far back from the date of the sale and the execution proceedings that his interest was not affected by the sale.

This was a Rule granted on the 19th of January 1911 against an order of Babu Tarak Nath Dutt, Subordinate Judge of Patna, dated the 19th of December 1910.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order, by which the Court below has dismissed an application for reversal of an execution sale under r. 89 of Or. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908. The circumstances under which the order in question has been made have not been disputed before this Court. The property in dispute is a house which admittedly belonged to one Naunidh Koer. The case for the Petitioner is that on the 5th November 1907 she purchased the house at a sale in execution of a certificate under the Public Demands Recovery Act issued against Naunidh Koer for recovery of arrears of road-cess. On the 21st September 1910, in execution of a money-decree held by one Bansidhari Singh against Naunidh Koer, the house was brought to sale and purchased by the decree-holder. The Court was closed from the 2nd October till the 3rd November 1910. On the 4th November, when the Court re-opened, one of the officers of the Petitioner took to the Court an application for reversal of the sale under r. 89 of Or. XXI of the Code of 1908. The presiding officer, it appears, had for some unexplained reason left the Court earlier than usual ; and when the application was presented to the sheristadar, at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, he made a note upon it to the effect that it had been so presented, but refused to accept the money on the ground that he had no authority to receive it. On the next day, the petition was presented again and registered, and the money was also deposited.

The decree-holder auction-purchaser objected to the reversal of the sale on three grounds, namely, first, that the application had been presented beyond the time prescribed by the law, and was consequently of no avail to the Petitioner; secondly, that the deposit was not unconditional, and was consequently not a valid deposit within the meaning of the Rule, and, thirdly, that the Petitioner had no locus standi to make the application, because, upon her own allegation, her interest, if any, had accrued not only before the sale but so long before the execution proceedings commenced that it could not be affected thereby. The Subordinate Judge held that the first two objections taken by the decree-holder auction-purchaser were well-founded, but that the third could not be sustained. In this view, he dismissed the application for reversal of the sale. The Petitioner has now applied to this Court, and invited us to consider the legality of the order made by the Subordinate Judge. In our opinion the order must be affirmed, but not on the grounds stated by the Subordinate Judge.

In so far as the first objection taken by the decree-holder auction-purchaser is concerned, we are of opinion that there is no substance in it. Upon the facts stated, it is clear that the failure of the Petitioner to make the application accompanied by the deposit on the day the Court re-opened was due to an act of the Court itself. Consequently, upon the principle explained in the case of Mahomed Akbar Zaman Khan v. Sukhdeo Pande (1), the position of the Petitioner could not be prejudiced in any manner. She had done her best to comply with the requirements of the statute, and the difficulty which has arisen was occasioned, because the presiding officer had left the Court earlier than usual. Under such circumstances, the fresh presentation of the application and the deposit of the money on the day following would be sufficient compliance with the provisions of the law.

In so far as the second objection urged by the decree-holder auction-purchaser is concerned, it is in our opinion equally unsubstantial. It appears that the petition which accompanied the deposit contained a statement that the money was not to be paid out to the decree-holder auction-purchaser till the disposal of a suit which had been commenced by the Petitioner in another Court. Now, it is perfectly true that a deposit under r. 89 of Or. XXI, in order that it may be a valid deposit, must be unconditional, because the deposit is to be made for payment to the purchaser and the decree-holder. When, therefore, a deposit is made with a condition that the sum may not be drawn out at once but may be retained in Court until a certain event has happened, it is not a good deposit within the meaning of the Rule [see Shakoti v. Jotindra Mohan (2)]. The case of Hanuman Singh v. Lachman Sahu (3) is not opposed to this view. There the deposit when made was unconditional, and it was only subsequently that an infructuous attempt was made by the Petitioner to fasten a condition thereupon. The Court held that the deposit, if good when made, cannot be invalidated by a subsequent act on the part of the Petitioner not authorised by law. On this principle, it may well be contended that the deposit in this case ought not to be treated as valid, because a condition was annexed thereto. It appears, however, that the deposit was accepted by the Court without any question and as soon as objection was taken by the decree-holder, the Petitioner withdrew the condition, so that the money became available for payment to the decree-holder before he had made any attempt to withdraw the money from Court. Under such circumstances, we are not prepared to hold that the deposit was invalid and not sufficient for reversal of the sale. The position might have been different if, upon objection taken by the decree-holder, the Petitioner had persisted in her effort to annex a condition to the deposit. The decree-holder was not prejudiced in any manner by the insertion of the prayer in the application of the Petitioner that the money should be retained in Court, and he was substantially in the same position in the end as if such prayer had never been made. We must consequently hold that there was substantially a valid deposit within the time limited by law, sufficient for reversal of the sale.

In so far, however, as the third objection taken by the decree-holder auction-purchaser is concerned, it was in our opinion erroneously overruled by the Subordinate Judge. As already stated, the case for the Petitioner is that so far back as the 5th November 1907 she had acquired, by purchase at the certificate sale, a good title to the property in question, in other words, that at the time when the property was sold on the 21st September 1910 as the property of Naunidh Koer, the latter had no subsisting interest therein. It is manifest, therefore, that the Petitioner has not been in any manner affected by the sale. Under these circumstances, the question arises whether she is entitled to make an application for reversal of the sale under r. 89 of Or. XXI. That Rule—we quote only so much of it as is relevant to our present purpose—provides as follows: "Where, immovable property has been sold in execution of a decree, any person either owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale, may apply to have the sale set aside" on certain prescribed conditions. It may seem, at first sight, that the language of this Rule is comprehensive enough to include a person in the position of the Petitioner. It may be contended that here immovable property has been sold in execution of a decree. The Petitioner is the person who owns such property by virtue of a title acquired long before the sale: she is consequently competent to apply to have the sale set aside. In our opinion, this construction, though it may be justified by the language of the Code, is not the right construction of the rule in question. R. 89 reproduces sec. 310A, which was inserted in the Code of 1882 by Act V of 1894. That section provided that any person whose immovable property has been sold under Ch. XIX of the Code of 1882 may, at any time within 30 days from the date of sale, apply to have the sale set aside. Upon the construction of this section, it is well known, two questions arose upon which there was some divergence of judicial opinion. The first point which arose for consideration was whether a person who had acquired an interest in the property after the sale sought to be set aside had taken place was competent to avail himself of the benefit of the section: the question arose, for instance, whether a person to whom the judgment-debtor sold or mortgaged the property after the sale in execution was entitled to apply under the section. Upon this point, as we have already stated, the different High Courts were not agreed

DULHIN MATHURA DAS KOER v. BANSIDHAR SINGH.

[see Hazari Ram v. Badai Ram (4), Appaya v. Kunhati (5) and Manickka v. Rajagopala (6), see also Ram Chandra v. Rakhmabai (7), Mulchand v. Govind (8), Erode v. Pulhiedeth (9) and Kunja v. Bhupendra (10)]. To settle this divergence of judicial opinion, the Legislature has introduced the words "by virtue of a title acquired before such sale." The second question which arose for consideration was, whether the person who sought to avail himself of the provisions of sec. 310A must have been full owner of the property sold, or whether it was sufficient that he should have an interest in the property affected by the sale [Nityananda Patra v. Hira Lal Karmakar (11), overruled by a Full Bench in Paresh Nath v. Nabogopal (12), Mallikarjunadu v. Lingamurti (13)]. In order to settle this divergence of judicial opinion, the Legislature has introduced the words "either owning such property or holding an interest therein." In order to give effect, however, to the policy of the Legislature upon the two points just mentioned, the rule appears to have been re-drafted with the result that the phraseology has been so altered as to lend some colour of support to the interpretation, that any person who owns the property or has an interest therein, is entitled to apply for reversal of the sale, even though his title is such as cannot be affected by the sale: in other words, the attempt to remove the two difficulties which had arisen under the old Code, has resulted in a new obscurity. It is plain, however, that a reasonable interpretation must be given to the provisions of the Statute, and it is useful in this connection to bear in mind the well-known canon of construction laid down in Stradling v. Morgan (14), and quoted with approval by Lord Halsbury, L. C., in Cox v. Hakes (15), and by this Court in the case of Narendra Nath v. Nogendra Nath (16). "The sages of the law heretofore have construed statutes quite contrary to the letter in some appearance, and those statutes, which comprehend all things in the letter, they have expounded to extend but to some things, and those which generally prohibit all people from doing such an act, they have interpreted to permit some people to do it, and those, which include every person in the letter, they have adjudged to reach to some persons only, which expositions have always been founded on the intent of the Legislature which they have collected sometimes by considering the cause and necessity of making the act, sometimes by comparing one part of the act with another, and sometimes by foreign circumstances. So that they have ever been guided by the intent of the Legislature, which they have always taken according to the necessity of the matter, and according to that which is consonant to reason and good discretion."

It would in our opinion be an obviously unreasonable interpretation of r. 89 to hold that any person might avail himself of the benefit thereof, even though admittedly he was in no way affected by the sale sought to be reversed. In a case of this description a reference to the history of the legislation on the subject is perfectly legitimate, as was done by the Judicial Committee in Iswari Prosad v. Chatrapat (17) and Brown v. McLachlan (18). The history of the legislation here shows conclusively that the extended construction put upon the Rule by the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be supported: we must after all take a rational view of the scope and object of the section, and cannot attribute to the Legislature any intention such as would be obviously unreasonable; but we need not for our present purposes determine the precise limits of the scope of the Rule or define the circumstances under which it may be applicable. The view we take as to the true interpretation of r. 89 is in accord with that taken by Stanley, C. J., and Banerjee, J., in Mahmed Ahamadulla Khan v. Ahamed Said Khan (19) [see also Asmutunnissa v. Ashruff Ali (20), which overruled the contrary view maintained by Mr. Justice Field in Panyé Chunder v. Hur Chunder (21)]. As the Petitioner has carried back her title to a date so far anterior to the sale and the execution proceedings that she could not possibly be affected thereby, we must hold that she had no locus standi to make an application for reversal of the sale which according to her own case does not concern her in the least.

The result, therefore, is that although we disagree with the Subordinate Judge upon all the three points taken by the decree-holder auction-purchaser, we must affirm his order and discharge the Rule.

HOLMWOOD, J. JAMIRUDDI BISWAS and IMAM, J. other, Appellants,

v.

12, June.

Jury trial—Misdirection—Grievous hurt—Abetment by conspiracy—Sec. 326 read with sec. 114 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—Seisin by Jury—Re-trial—Jurisdiction.

Where there was evidence that certain persons conspired to eject the complainant from his land, or in other words, to commit criminal trespass, and the Judge said that if the jury found that those persons conspired with the first accused to commit criminal trespass then they would, if absent, be guilty of abetment, and being present they were guilty of the substantive offence:

Held—That the omission to notice that the substantive offence for which the accused were being tried was not one of criminal trespass but of voluntarily causing grievous hurt constituted misdirection.

Held, also, that when the evidence against the co-accused was that they themselves came with the first accused and joined in beating the deceased, they could not be convicted of abetting the causing of grievous hurt by their presence because they would have been guilty of abetment had they been absent.

If it be found that they all joined in the beating and that the specific act which caused the grievous hurt was not brought home to any particular individual, they would be held liable under sec. 34 of the Indian Penal Code; if they aided and abetted or abetted by intentionally aiding the first accused in beating the deceased then they would be liable under sec. 326 read with sec. 109 of the Indian Penal Code.

The jury have to give their verdict on the facts as against each man severally and they are not, like the Judge, in charge of the entire case as a whole.

When an accused is to be retried he must be placed before the jury upon all the charges which were framed against him and the High Court has no jurisdiction to uphold the conviction under one section and to order him to be retried under another.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 15th of April 1912 against the judgment and sentence of Mr. P. K. Chatterjee, Sessions Judge of Khulna, dated the 22nd of February 1912.

The facts material to the report will appear from the following portions of the "Heads of charge" to the jury:—

"The story told by the prosecution is that in the forenoon of the 13th of November last, Kasem Biswas since deceased and his son Lalu Biswas, a boy of twelve or thereabouts, went out to cut paddy on a plot of land to the north of their house. The four accused are the half brothers of the deceased Kasem Biswas. They soon followed him into the land, armed with thick bamboo lathis. Among them Jamiruddi Biswas, asked Kasem Biswas to stop cutting paddy. He did not agree to do so at his bidding. The accused, it seems, put forward some sort of a claim to the land. When Kasem Biswas paid no heed to Jamiruddi's protest, the latter dealt him a heavy blow on the head and he staggered in a few paces, when Afizuddi Biswas, one of the accused, strode up and struck him on the left ribs with lathi. Kasem Biswas fell down to the ground, covered with water as it was. His son

Lalu Biwas ran off shouting for help. Two of his relatives, Fazel and Sadhoo Sheik, then came up and removed him to his house. His boy gave information to the police. On completion of the investigation by police, the four accused were sent up for trial. Kasem Biswas died, it seems, no sooner he reached Bagerhat in a boat. He was sent there from his home in Kushli by the police for medical examination.

"His evidence, if you can believe it, lends considerable support to the prosecution. He not only speaks of the occurrence but of the antecedent preparation on the part of the accused also. He heard Jamiruddi, one of the accused, call the other three accused his half brothers, who live in huts round about his. They all responded to the call and met together on Jamiruddi's yard. Soon after they armed themselves with bamboo sticks which lay piled up near by for the erection of a hut and went away northward. Fazel asked them when they left home where were they bound to, but they gave no answer."

The following is the portion of the charge which was held to constitute misdirection:—

"Here there is, so far as I can see, no evidence either of instigation or intentional aiding. What I shall ask you to carefully consider is, did the three accused engage in a conspiracy to forcibly eject Kasem Biswas from the land shortly before they left their houses, armed with lathis? If you think that there is sufficient and credible evidence to hold that they did really enter into such a conspiracy, you may regard them as abettors but not otherwise. In order to render applicable sec. 114, I. P. C., you will have to find first that there was such a conspiracy—that there were circumstances to constitute abetment, so that, if absent, the three accused would have been liable to be punished as abettors, and, secondly, that they were all present when the offence was committed (see I. L. R. 27 Cal. 566). Fazel alone speaks about the meeting of the accused and their simultaneous exit from Jamiruddi's house. There was also, it seems, a land dispute between them and the deceased Kasem Biswas. The accused all came straightway to the disputed land armed with lathis and there attacked Kasem Biswas. Jamiruddi dealt the fatal blow which caused the death of Kasem Biswas. If you think that the three accused (Samiruddi, Kalam and Afizuddi) were abettors—had entered into a conspiracy shortly before the occurrence which rendered them liable to punishment even if absent as abettors and that they were really present when the offence was committed, you may hold them guilty constructively of the same offence as Jamiruddi under sec. 114, I. P. C."

Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen for the Appellants.

Mr. Orr for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal from the judgment and the sentence of the learned Sessions Judge of Khulna who agreeing with the unanimous verdict of the jury convicted one Jamiruddi of an offence under sec. 326 and sentenced him to five years' rigorous imprisonment, and they further unanimously found three persons, Samiruddi, Kalam and Afizuddi, guilty under sec. 326 read with 114, and Afizuddi further under sec. 323. Afizuddi was given four years under sec. 326 read with 114 and four months under sec. 323, the sentences to run concurrently. The other two, Samiruddi and Kalam, were given three years each under sec. 326 read with 114.

Now we have considered the charge to the jury and we find that the only point of misdirection is with regard to the law of abetment by conspiracy and that only applies to Appellants Nos. 2, 3 and 4.

The conviction of Jamiruddi is a right conviction and it is not based on any misdirection. We, therefore, have no power to alter it or interfere with it nor do we desire to do so. The appeal of Jamiruddi is dismissed.

A question might arise as to whether the jury had seisin of the case as a whole or whether they tried each prisoner personally and it appears clear that they took oath to try well and truly the case as between the Crown and the prisoner and they are not like the judge in charge of the entire case as a whole. They have to give their verdict on the facts as against each man severally, and in this case, curiously enough, there is an instance of the converse of the proposition we have just laid down.

The man Afizuddi has been convicted under sec. 326 read with 114 and under sec. 323. Now it is quite possible that the verdict of the jury under sec. 323 is correct and was not obtained by any misdirection, but because the man Afizuddi is to be retried he must be placed before the jury upon all the charges which were framed against him and we should have no jurisdiction to uphold the conviction under sec. 323 and to order him to be retried under sec. 326. The whole of his case must go back to the jury if the verdict was obtained by misdirection.

JAMIRUDDI BISWAS v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Now it is perfectly clear that the verdict of the jury under sec. 326 read with 114 was obtained by misdirection. The learned Judge seems to have entirely misunderstood the law as applicable to the facts of this case. He says that there is evidence that these four persons conspired, or three persons Nos. 2, 3 and 4 conspired with No. 1 Jamiruddi, to eject the complainant from his land, or in other words, to commit criminal trespass, and he says that if the jury found that these three men conspired with the first accused to commit criminal trespass then they would, if absent, be guilty of abetment, and being present they are guilty of the substantive offence; but unfortunately he has omitted to notice that the substantive offence of which he told the jury they were guilty is not one of criminal trespass but of voluntarily causing grievous hurt, which on his own showing has nothing whatever to do with the alleged conspiracy. It is perfectly clear that these persons could not be convicted of abetting the causing of grievous hurt by their presence, because they would have been guilty of abetment had they been absent, when the evidence against them is that they themselves came with the accused No. 1 and joined in beating the deceased. It is because the evidence is that they joined in beating the deceased that we think there must be a retrial, and it is by reason of sec. 34, I. P. C., that they would be held liable if it be found that they all joined in the beating; and the specific act which caused the grievous hurt is not brought home to any particular individual, or they would be liable under sec. 326 read with 109 if they aided and abetted or abetted by intentionally aiding Jamiruddi in beating the deceased; or for any wound which any individual himself caused he would be guilty under the section of simple hurt or grievous hurt according to the nature of the injury he himself inflicted, but they cannot be convicted of grievous hurt by reason of conspiracy to commit criminal trespass.

The conviction and sentence passed on Samiruddi, Kalam and Afizuddi must be set aside and they will be admitted to bail to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate pending their retrial before another jury.

Appeal allowed in part:

Case sent for retrial.

ORIGINAL SIDE.—As before.

ON THE ORIGINAL SIDE OF THE HIGH COURT the cost of litigation is certainly more but the despatch of business is much greater than in any other Court. It is only when a case is referred for taking accounts that any considerable time is taken to bring it to a termination. But so far as contested cases and motions are concerned we know of no other tribunal in this country which can dispose of such a vast amount of work so satisfactorily and expeditiously as barrister Judges, who are familiar with the work on the Original Side, ordinarily do. If men of similar qualifications and ability can be secured for the City Court it would differ but little from the High Court except perhaps in name. But when it is difficult to get really efficient judges for the High Court, would it not be much more difficult to get the right sort of Judges for the City Court? Then again we cannot overlook the fact that high Indian judicial appointments are made at times in a haphazard manner which not unoften fail to give satisfaction to the public. Having regard to all these facts and considerations we think it would be exceedingly risky to invite Government to establish in the City an inferior Court presided over by judges in regard to whose appointment the Government may exercise even less care and discrimination.

FURTHER A CITY COURT WILL WITHOUT DOUBT bring in additional judicial revenue to Government, and were the Government asked to choose between a City Court and the Original Side of the High Court, it would not in all likelihood hesitate in course of time to displace altogether the Original Side by the City Court. Court-fees are unknown on the Original Side and suits of any value may be instituted in the High Court on the payment of only Rs. 10 at the filing of the plaint. We therefore think it would be much more to the advantage of the Calcutta public to move the Government for strengthening the High Court by the appointment of the best available men as Judges and taking steps for the cheapening of the legal procedure. The new rules for the taxation of costs on the Original Side published in the Gazette of India of Saturday, the 27th July last, and which would come in force on the re-opening of the High Court after the Poojah Vacation will go to reduce the cost of litigation on the Original Side very materially. Should a City Court be established, it would hardly be possible to control Counsel's fees in a similar manner. The cry for a City Civil Court therefore seems to be highly injudicious and if acceded to will only bring about a deterioration in the quality of justice administered without any material saving in the costs of litigation in contested cases. It may be added that it is decidedly cheaper to institute uncontested cases in the Original Side as no ad valorem Court-fees have to be paid there.

WE PUBLISH IN ANOTHER COLUMN AN ARTICLE from the Times of the 11th July last on the question of the strengthening of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. The occasion for the article certainly is the appointment of Lord Haldane as the Lord Chancellor. It is well-known that his Lordship has long entertained the desire of raising the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to the rank of an Imperial Court of Appeal worthy of the British Empire. There can be no question that the constitution and prestige of the Judicial Committee have declined considerably in recent years. The Times therefore makes some suggestions as to how the prestige and efficiency of the Judicial Committee may be secured. Complaint is sometimes made in the Colonies that the members of the Judicial Committee are not well-acquainted with the laws that they have to administer. We quite agree with the Times that it is not practicable to import Colonial Judges to assist their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in their deliberations. It suggests therefore that "there might be added as members or as assessors in particular cases lawyers with special knowledge. There might be a rota or list, necessarily not long, of experts upon whose assistance in some form the tribunal could rely." We are not sure that such assessors would be readily available. In any event their services would not inspire confidence if they are not jurists of the rare type of Prof. Maitland or Sir Henry Maine whose names are mentioned by the Times in this connection.

SO FAR AS INDIAN APPEALS ARE CONCERNED, we do not think there is any necessity in these days to appoint or requisition the services of any assessors for helping the Judicial Committee. The Indian Appeals form the bulk of the business of the Board. If only the English Law Lords or eminent English Judges would sit on the Judicial Committee regularly they would soon acquire a sufficient familiarity with both the statutory and customary laws in India. As a matter of fact even the Hindu and Mahomedan laws as they are administered by our Courts in India to-day are chiefly based on the interpretations put on them by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. It was much more difficult in the days of Lord Kingsdown to interpret Hindu and Mahomedan Laws than it is to-day. But now a long course of decisions, excellent text-books, authoritative treatises and reliable translations of original texts and commentaries which are readily available have made the task of the interpretation of the Indian customary law much easier than it was fifty years ago. The necessity for appointing any assessors for helping their Lordships of the Judicial Committee has further been obviated by the special knowledge of Indian law acquired by some eminent members of the English Bar who ordinarily practise before the Judicial Committee. If more attention is paid to Indian Appeals the Bar before the Judicial Committee will also gain in strength. A strong Bar is always of the greatest assistance to the Judges, much more than even expert assessors can be.

IT IS CONCEIVABLE THAT OCCASIONS MAY ARISE when the services of expert assessors may be requisitioned in some cases from one or other of the Colonies from which an appeal or two may annually come up before the Board. But we have little doubt that the appointment of assessors to assist their Lordships in deciding Indian Appeals would rather detract from than add to the weight of the decisions of the Judicial Committee in India. It is not every day that we come across jurists of the celebrity of Sir Henry Maine and so we may dismiss the idea of ever getting men of his type to assist in the deliberations of the Judicial Committee as beyond the range of any practical and workable scheme. The people of India will be quite satisfied if the Law Lords sit in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the same strength to hear Indian appeals as their Lordships do in cases of English appeals in the House of Lords. The high regard in which the decisions of the Judicial Committee have been held in India is chiefly due, in the words of the Times, to the "aloofness and detachment" with which their Lordships have ordinarily decided the issues before them. We might also mention that what the people of this country expect from their Lordships is not any technical interpretation of the law, but elucidation of principles and decisions based on broad considerations of equity and justice. The assistance that experts can render to their Lordships with regard to technicalities of the Indian law is of little value. The cases that the Judicial Committee have to decide being appeals from appellate judgments, their Lordships cannot possibly be at any pains to ascertain the technicalities of the law which are always sufficiently dealt with in the judgments of the Courts below. What their Lordships are expected to decide is whether the law as applied and interpreted in India is in consonance with approved principles and is conducive to justice.

WITH REGARD TO THE QUESTION OF ASSOCIATING with their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, some Judge or Judges of the Colony from which appeal is preferred the Times does not consider any such arrangement practicable and proceeds to observe "Nor would such a system be altogether desirable." In this matter, we are happy to be able to say, that the opinion in India is quite at one with the views expressed in the Times. The reasons assigned are also precisely the same which may be advanced with even greater force against associating Judges of Indian experience in deciding questions which are taken to the Judicial Committee by Appellants from India in the expectation that they would be decided by eminent English Judges bringing altogether a fresh mind to bear on the cases. We thoroughly agree with the views of the Times of this being the chief recommendation of the Privy Council as the Court of final appeal for the Empire. The Times says:—"One merit of the present Court is a certain aloofness and detachment, with the result that questions are looked at with fresh eyes, and without local preconceptions."

IT IS NO USE DENYING THE FACT THAT THE JUDICIAL Committee has greatly suffered both in its prestige and in the weight of its decisions because of late eminent English Judges have been making themselves scarce on the Board and it is more often than not that the majority of the Board are composed of ex Indian Judges of not much distinction. The feeling of disappointment that the Times says is felt in the Colonies prevails even in a greater degree in India and precisely for the same reasons that have been so well put in the concluding lines of the article. The Times concludes by saying "It is useless trying to hide the fact that this tribunal is to-day exposed to more searching criticism than before. Apart from the existence of the Supreme Courts in the Dominions, the tendency is to look to the Judicial Committee, not merely for the right decision, but for a full and convincing statement of principles and reasons. The shortest way to decide a particular case is not always satisfactory. There is disappointment and perplexity when a dispute which has occupied the Colonial Courts for years, and which has been the subject of elaborate judgments, is disposed of in a few lines dexterously avoiding any elucidation of the principles involved. In regard to many doctrines still obscure and undeveloped, the Colonial Courts look for a lead to the Judicial Committee, and they miss what they want in a judgment which is timidly correct and modestly uninteresting."

WE HAVE RECEIVED A COPY OF A MEMORIAL submitted to His Excellency the Viceroy in Council from Manbhum for the inclusion of the District of Manbhum in the Presidency of Bengal. We are of opinion that a very strong case has been made out by the memorialists. The following extract from the memorial relating to the system of land-tenure and land-laws that have prevailed in Manbhum will be found of general interest.

That the land tenures of Manbhum are analogous to those of the neighbouring districts of Bengal and quite different from those of the other districts of Chotanagpur. The Putni Taluqs and Mokurari tenures of Manbhum are not to be found in the other districts of Chotanagpur. The Pachete Jaighirs and Barabhum Ghatwalis are peculiar to Manbhum only; while the incidents of Debutter and Brahmottar grants, whether Kheraj or Lakheraj, and of khorphosh and other resumable tenures of Manbhum differ materially from those of grants and tenures of similar denomination existing in the other districts of Chotanagpur. And on the contrary, the special tenures and tenancies of the latter places, such as, Bhuinhari, Bhut-kheta Dali-Katari, Pahanai, Mahtoai, Korkar, Mundari-Khunt-katti, &c, are quite unknown in Manbhum.

That the rent law of Manbhum was different from that of the other districts of Chotanagpur. Act X of 1859 (with the Bengal Council Acts VI of 1862 and IV of 1867) was the Rent law of Manbhum up to December 1909; while the rent law of the other districts of Chotanagpur was to be found in Act I of 1879, B. C. (the Chotanagpur Landlord and Tenant Act) and Act IV, B. C. of 1897, (the Chotanagpur Commutation Act) as amended by Act V, B. C. of 1903 and Act V of 1905. Even when all these Acts were repealed by the present Chotanagpur Tenancy Act VI, B. C. of 1908, it did not come into force in Manbhum, but power was retained by the Local Government to extend by notification the whole or any portion of this Act to the district of Manbhum or to any part thereof.

That by notification No. 5335 of 1908 certain portion of the said Act VI of 1908 was extended to Parganas Barabhum and Patkum of the District of Manbhum and by Notification No. 4010 L. R. of the 16th December 1909 the whole Act was extended to the entire district of Manbhum.

That Manbhum is in many respects "more closely assimilated to the neighbouring Bengal districts than to the rest of Chotanagpur division" and the said Act VI of 1908, which was enacted primarily for the rest of Chotanagpur, is not suited to the conditions of Manbhum.

That it was all along recognised by the local authorities that the conditions of Manbhum differed very considerably from the rest of Chotanagpur and ever since the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), the Bengal Government always contemplated the introduction of the said Act into Manbhum.

WE HAVE MUCH PLEASURE IN PUBLISHING ELSEWHERE a very practical suggestion, which we welcome all the more as it has come from a solicitor's office, regarding the regulation of costs in all suits on the Original Side up to the value of Rs. 5,000 on a somewhat similar basis as for mortgage suits for Rs. 1,000, which if adopted would settle for good all questions relating to the establishment of a City Court in Calcutta.

THE STRENGTHENING OF THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE.

The Times, 11th July 1912.

It is not improbable that we shall hear at no distant date of a new attempt to strengthen the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. No one could be better qualified to undertake such a task than the present LORD CHANCELLOR. As counsel he had much experience in that Court, and in speeches and in writing he has repeatedly shown his desire to make it ever worthier of its unique position and to increase the confidence of the oversea Dominions in its decisions. He will have to consider a great variety of wishes and criticisms, good and bad, practicable and impracticable. One wish, often expressed and much debated at the last Imperial Conference, is that, instead of two final Courts of Appeal as at present—one, the House of Lords, for the United Kingdom, and the other, the Judicial Committee, for the oversea Dominions—there should be a strong single Court. Instead of two Courts, guided to some degree by different rules, there should be a Court of the Empire with uniformity of procedure. Many Colonial lawyers are not satisfied with the practice of the Judicial Committee, which delivers one judgment. They prefer that of the House of Lords, which permits of individual judgments and which reveals dissent, if any exists among its members. A more serious criticism relates to the composition of the final Court or Courts of Appeal. There are from time to time complaints that cases turning upon particular systems of law may be determined by Judges unacquainted with them. It is suggested, for example, that the complex land system of New Zealand founded upon statutes hard to unravel, has been misunderstood by the Judicial Committee. The difficulty is to suggest a feasible improvement. Is a New Zealand Judge to come over to hear, it may be, one or two cases? If he is to hear others originating, say, in Canada, will he be better qualified than an English-trained Judge to deal with Canadian cases? LORD DE VILLIERS and certain Colonial Judges, members of the Privy Council, have from time to time sat on the Judicial Committee, but we despair of seeing established any system under which there shall be present at every appeal a Judge specially conversant with the law administered by the Courts from which comes the case under review. It is impossible for no other reason than the small number of appeals from certain Colonies. Nor would such a system be altogether desirable. One merit of the present Court is a certain aloofness and detachment, with the result that questions are looked at with fresh eyes and without local preconceptions. To take two questions which will fall to be decided by the Judicial Committee at an early date—one as to the rights, if any, of the Indians in the soil of certain territories, the other as to the effect, if any, of the Ne Temere decree upon the marriage law of Canada; there is an advantage in these matters coming before a tribunal which cannot be suspected of even unconscious partiality.

But it may be possible to strengthen the Judicial Committee by the infusion of elements in which it is now deficient. It must be mainly composed of those who have been Judges; there could with safety be no great departure from that principle. But there might well be a limited introduction of other elements. In modern times no one did more to sustain the reputation of the Court than LORD KINGSDOWN, who had not the usual judicial experience. There might be added as members of the Court or as assessors in particular cases lawyers with special knowledge. There might be a rota or list, necessarily not long, of experts upon whose assistance in some form the tribunal could rely. To speak with frankness, none of the able present members of the Court are acknowledged authorities in, say, Canon law or International law or Roman-Dutch law. Why should they not have the assistance of the best authorities upon these subjects? The House of Lords was once accustomed to seek aid and advice from the Judges, who, in answering the questions put to them, acted as assessors. Why should not the Judicial Committee in certain cases take a similar course? Who would have spoken upon certain subjects with more authority than SIR HENRY MAINE or PROFESSOR MAITLAND?

It is useless trying to hide the fact that this tribunal is to-day exposed to more searching criticism than before. Apart from the existence of Supreme Courts in the Dominions, the tendency is to look to the Judicial Committee, not merely for a right decision, but for a full and convincing statement of principles and reasons. The shortest way to decide a particular case is not always satisfactory. There is disappointment and perplexity when a dispute which has occupied the Colonial Courts for years, and which has been the subject of elaborate judgments, is disposed of in a few lines dexterously avoiding any elucidation of the principles involved. In regard to many doctrines still obscure or undeveloped, the Colonial Courts look for a lead to the Judicial Committee; and they miss what they want in a judgment which is timidly correct and modestly uninformative. The LORD CHANCELLOR has a great opportunity within his reach, and it is satisfactory to think that no one is better able than he to make full use of it.

Notes of Cases.

[APPEAL FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA.]

LORD MACNAGHTEN.

LORD ATKINSON.

LORD SHAW.

1912,

Heard, 16, May.

Judgment, 18, June.

RICHARD J. KIRBY

v.

JOHN J. COWDEROY.

Possession by payment of taxes on land—Conveyance, extrinsic evidence to prove transaction mortgage.

The action out of which the appeal arose was commenced on the 8th April 1910, by a writ of summons in the Supreme Court of British Columbia, by the Respondent, who was the Plaintiff, against the Appellant, the Defendant. The action was for the redemption of certain land situated in the district of New Westminster. On the 26th January 1911, Chief Justice Hunter dismissed the action with costs. On the 6th June thereafter the Court of Appeal of British Columbia reversed that dismissal. The present appeal was accordingly brought by the Defendant. The real and only point of the case was as to the application of the British Columbia Statute of Limitations, cap. 123, R. S. B. C. 1897.

The facts were as follows: Before July 1889, the Appellant, Mr. Kirby, had lent to the Respondent, Mr. Cowderoy, certain sums of money, and offered security over certain small parcels or tracts of land in the district of New Westminster. The security took the shape of an absolute conveyance.

The date of the conveyance was the 1st July 1889, and it was presumably in the ordinary form of indenture, with the usual clause "to have and to hold unto the said grantee . . . to and for his sole and only use for ever," with a covenant for quiet possession. Notwithstanding the form of this deed, it was established by letters passing between the parties, that the deed was meant to be a security only. But so far as the point in the present case was concerned, it was of no importance whether the deed were treated as an absolute conveyance or merely as a mortgage, for under secs. 16 and 36 of the Statute of Limitation, an action by any person claiming any land or rent in equity for recovery of the same might be brought only within twenty years, and by sec. 40, when a mortgagee has obtained possession, "the mortgagor or any person claiming through him shall not bring a suit to redeem the mortgage but within twenty years next after the time at which the mortgagee obtained such possession or receipt, unless in the meantime an acknowledgment of the title of the mortgagor or of his right of redemption shall have been given to the mortgagor . . . in writing." The latter portion of this section does not apply as there was no written acknowledgment in this case, and the whole question was as to the running of the period of twenty years from the date of obtaining possession of the land." And this question in the present case really depended on another, namely, whether in the circumstances of this case the Appellant, Mr. Kirby, ever had possession under the deed of July 1889.

The Respondent admitted that the land "was simply wild land; no one was in possession of it," and that at the period when the deed was granted, "it never had a value"; that he had got his loan and had granted his conveyance under a promise to pay interest periodically and compound interest but had never made any payment whatsoever and that he left the property severely alone. The Appellant, on the other hand, became liable, since the date of the deed conveying the property to him, viz., 1st July 1889, to pay as owner thereof the taxes imposed upon it.

THEIR LORDSHIPS found upon the evidence, that (1) for over 20 years before the institution of this suit the Appellant had, so far as this wild land was concerned, performed the only act of possession of which it appeared to be capable, namely, he had paid all the taxation upon it; whereas (2) the Respondent was aware that this was being done by the Appellant, and he (the Respondent), so far from having anything even remotely akin to adverse possession, had washed his hands of all connection with the property. In these circumstances, their Lordships were of opinion that the Statute of Limitation applied, and that it is not open to the Respondent thereafter—when, as is the case here, the patch of land appeared to have suddenly become of some marketable value—to bring this action to redeem.

LORD SHAW, in delivering the judgment of the Board, stated the law on the subject in the following terms:—"On the general subject of possession, the language of Lord O'Hagan in The Lord Advocate v. Lord Lovat (5 A. C. 288)—language cited with approval by Lord Macnaghten in Johnston v. O'Neill (1911, A. C. 583)—appears to be applicable to the present case. Possession 'must be considered in every case with reference to the peculiar circumstances . . . the character and value of the property, the suitable and natural mode of using it, the course of conduct which the proprietor might reasonably be expected to follow with a due regard to his own interests; all these things, greatly varying as they must under various conditions, are to be taken into account in determining the sufficiency of a possession.' In this view of the law

Their Lordships held that possession of the land was, during the years in question, with the Appellant, and no possession of any kind with the Respondent, and that the suit was barred by limitation.

The order of their Lordships accordingly was that the Appeal should be allowed, and the judgment of Hunter, C. J., dismissing the action, should be restored with the further costs incurred in both Courts since the date of that judgment, the Respondent being also directed to pay the costs of the Appeal.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before CARN-DUFF AND IMAM, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No.
837 OF 1912. SASADHAR SANYAL, Petitioner v. SOSHEE BHUSHAN CHOW-
DHURY, Opposite Party. 1st August 1912.

*Criminal Procedure Code, secs. 437, 203—Dismissal of complaint—Application by complainant for further enquiry—Complaint disclosing no offence—Right of accused to oppose application for

The Opposite Party brought a case of criminal breach of trust against the Petitioner. On the representation of the Opposite Party that he would not proceed with the case against the Petitioner and would not institute any further criminal case against him provided the Petitioner paid him Rs. 3,000, this amount was paid by the Petitioner to the Opposite Party. Subsequently, the Opposite Party brought another case of criminal breach of trust against the Petitioner who thereupon filed a complaint against the Opposite Party charging him with cheating, before Babu K. K. Mookherji, Deputy Magistrate, who examined the Petitioner on his complaint. Later on, in the absence of Babu K. K. Mookherji, another Magistrate, Mr. Bainbridge, who was at the station dismissed the complaint under sec. 203. The Petitioner after having made an unsuccessful application for further enquiry before the Sessions Judge moved the High Court for further enquiry with the result that a Rule was issued calling upon the District Magistrate to show cause why the order dismissing the complaint should not be set aside on the ground that the Magistrate who made the order acted without jurisdiction.

On the Rule coming on for hearing a preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the Petitioner that the Opposite Party had no locus standi to oppose the Rule inasmuch as the present case was one of dismissal of complaint under sec. 203, Cr. P. C., and not one of discharge of the accused. Reliance was placed on the Full Bench decision in Haridas Sanyal v. Saritulla, I. L. R. 15 Cal. 698. Their Lordships however heard the Opposite Party.

It was contended on behalf of the Opposite Party that he could not be prosecuted for not doing what the law did not allow him to do, the case of criminal breach of trust brought by him against the Petitioner not being compoundable, and thus there being no case against him no order of further enquiry could be made.

Their Lordships after hearing both sides observed that as the case referred to by the Petitioner was not compoundable the Rule should be discharged.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before CARN-DUFF AND IMAM, JJ. CIVIL REVISION CASE
UNDER SEC. 195, Cr. P. C., No. 2 OF 1912
RAMJAN ALI, Petitioner v. BHAGABAN
CHANDRA PAL AND OTHERS, Opposite Party. 1st August 1912.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 195—Application for sanction, delay in making—Proceedings stayed pending appeal in High Court—Revival after disposal thereof—Suppression of facts in petition upon which Rule obtained.

In 1908, the Opposite Party and others brought a rent suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Chittagong against one Khalil Rahaman and others. The Petitioner was subsequently made a party to this suit as a Defendant and he filed certain rent receipts in support of his defence. The suit was decreed by the Subordinate Judge on the 21st May 1909 against the principal Defendants and there was an appeal to the District Judge who on the 1st March 1910 dismissed the appeal and found that the rent receipts filed by the Petitioner before the Subordinate Judge were forged. Against this decision of the District Judge an appeal was filed in the High Court. In neither of the Appellate Courts was the Petitioner made a party, but when on the 5th July 1910 the Opposite Party applied to the District Judge for sanction to prosecute the Petitioner, the Petitioner on the 22nd July 1910 filed his objection and on the 5th August 1910 prayed for stay proceedings pending the hearing of the appeal in the High Court, and on the 6th August 1910 the Opposite Party was allowed to withdraw the application for sanction with liberty to bring fresh proceeding after the disposal of the appeal in the High Court. On the 5th September 1911 the appeal in the High Court was admitted under Or. 41, r. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, but on the 11th July 1911 the Appellants unconditionally withdrew the said appeal. On the 4th December 1911, the Opposite Party applied to the District Judge for sanction to prosecute the Petitioner and the learned District Judge by his order, dated the 9th January 1912, granted the sanction prayed for.

Against this order granting sanction the Petitioner moved the High Court and obtained a Rule calling upon the Opposite Party to show cause why the said order of the District Judge granting sanction should not be revoked on the ground that undue delay had been made in making the application for sanction.

In his petition in the High Court the Petitioner did not however state that the Opposite Party had first applied for sanction on the 5th July 1910, and that on the application of the Petitioner himself for stay of proceedings on the ground that an appeal was pending in the High Court, the Opposite Party was allowed to withdraw his application for sanction with liberty to bring a fresh proceeding and that the said appeal in the High Court was disposed of on the 11th July 1911.

At the hearing of the Rule the Vakil for the Petitioner intimating that he had no instructions as to the facts which were not stated in the petition, their Lordships after hearing both sides discharged the Rule with costs, five gold mohurs, both on the ground of suppression of facts which ought to have been stated in the petition and on the ground that the delay complained of had been explained.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MOOKERJEE AND HOLMWOOD, JJ. CIVIL RULE No. 2586 of 1912. DWARKA NATH KUNDU, Petitioner v. MOHENDRA NATH ROY, Opposite Party. 22nd July 1912.

Contribution suit, decree in payment in execution of—Subsequent title suit, decree in, declaring Defendant not liable to contribute—Defendant if may sue for recovery of money paid before contribution decree is set aside.

One Fakeer Chundra Dutt obtained a rent decree against Beni Madhab Kundu and put the holding to sale and Mohendra Nath Roy, who was the purchaser of a half share of the holding deposited the money and then sued Dwarka Nath Kundu for contribution alleging that he was the owner of the other half share of the holding and obtained a decree after contest and in execution of that decree realized the money. The landlord again sued for arrears of rent against Beni Madhab and obtained a decree for subsequent rent, and in execution of this decree the holding was sold and purchased by Mohendra Nath Roy in the name of his son. The Petitioner, Dwarka Nath Kundu, then brought a title suit alleging that the 2nd decree obtained by the landlord against Beni was fraudulent and that he was not the tenant under Fakeer Dutt and not bound by the decree and by the sale of the holding in execution of that second rent decree and the suit was decreed. Dwarka Nath thereupon brought the present suit in the Small Cause Court for recovery of the money he paid to Mohendra Nath Roy in execution of his decree for contribution alleging that as in the title-suit it was declared that he was not the tenant of Fakeer Dutt he was not bound to contribute. The Munsif dismissed the suit holding that so long as the 1st rent decree and the contribution decree stood the Plaintiff was not entitled to any relief. Against that order the Petitioner obtained the Rule.

Held—That the decree in the contribution suit not having been set aside the Plaintiff was not entitled to succeed. I. L. R. 3 Cal. 30 distinguished. 10 Moore I. Appeal 203 at p. 211 referred to and followed.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before SHARFUDDIN and COXE, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1362 of 1909. SHIDE-SHARI DASYA AND ANOTHER, Plaintiffs, Appellants v. SHASI BHUSAN CHOWDHURY AND OTHERS, Respondents. 25th July 1912.

Burden of proof—Dried up bheels, reformations of diluviated land in—'Waste'—Waste land within area—Adverse possession—Proof necessary.

The Appeal arose out of a suit for recovery of possession. Both the lower Courts dismissed the Plaintiffs' suit on the ground of limitation and also on the ground that the Plaintiffs failed to establish their title to the lands in suit.

There were two mouzahs, Mouzah Bejalbari and Mouzah Shukandighi, the former belonging to the Plaintiffs and the latter to the Defendants. The question before the lower Courts was whether the area in dispute appertained to Mouzah Bejalbari or to Mouzah Shukandighi.

The Defendants purchased an eight-anna share of Mouzah Shukandighi in 1288 at a private sale and the remaining eight annas at a revenue sale in 1293. Some portion of the disputed land was settled with tenants by the Defendants. The Defendants treated the disputed lands after their purchase as their own since 1292-93.

There were small plots of waste lands within the disputed area.

Held—That in cases of dried up bheels, reformations of diluviated lands not brought under the plough, and lands covered with jungle, the Plaintiff must prove his title; if he succeeds in proving his title and that the land probably remained unfit for occupation until a period within 12 years of suit, it was then for the Defendant to prove that the Plaintiff had not been in possession within that period.

Mahomed Ali v. Khaja Abdal Gunny (I. L. R. 9 Cal. 744) referred to.

Waste is a more comprehensive term than jungle. In the case of waste land within the disputed area what was necessary for a person claiming lands by adverse possession was to show that he had all along claimed the lands as his own and treated them as such and it was not necessary on his part to prove that he had been exercising acts of possession over every inch of the lands adversely to the Opposite Party.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before SHARFUDDIN and COKE, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 3138 OF 1909. MANE MAHAMMED NOSYA AND ANOTHER, Defendants, Appellants v. DHANI MUHAMMED AND OTHERS, Plaintiffs, Respondents. Heard, 16th July. Judgment, 30th July 1912.

Res judicata—Rent suit—Former decision on material point.

The suit was brought for establishment of Plaintiffs' title to six plots of land and also for khas possession of those plots. There was also a prayer in the alternative to recover rent for those plots.

The Plaintiffs' case was that the Defendants were holding six plots and one Subratu was holding another six plots of land under them. It was alleged that Subratu abandoned his holding and went away to Bhutan Duars and that since then the Defendants held all the twelve plots under a consolidated jama of Rs. 30 a year. They further urged that they instituted Suit No. 461 of 1905 for rent against the present Defendants in which the Defendants denied holding Subratu's jama and contended that their jama was only Rs. 16 per year and that that suit was decreed at the admitted rate. On the above facts the Plaintiffs brought the present suit.

The Defendants' main contention was that the question of the amount of rent payable having been finally decided in the rent suit of 1905, and the six plots of land included in the suit being included in the eight plots of the previous rent suit, this suit was barred by the rule of res judicata.

The first Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the findings of the previous rent suit operated as res judicata in the present suit. On appeal the Subordinate Judge held relying on the cases of Shahadeb Dhali v. Ram Rudra Halder (10 C. W. N. 820) and Rajendra Nath Ghosh v. Tarangini Dassi (1 C. L. J. 248) that the suit was not barred by the rule of res judicata. The Defendants appealed to the High Court.

Held—That in all such suits what was necessary to see was whether the decision in the former rent suit was given on an incidental point or on a question that went to the very root of the case. A decision on a matter in a previous rent suit operates as res judicata in a subsequent suit if the matter in question is directly and substantially in issue in both the suits. [TO THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES"]

SIR,—People may not be aware that the rules of the Original Side provide for a fixed scale at a very moderate rate for mortgage suits below Rs. 1,000 beyond which the costs are not allowed to exceed, and this principle—the framing of a special scale of costs at reasonably low rates may be extended to all suits of value, say, less than Rs. 5,000 and the effect will be that poor litigants will be relieved and at the same time get cheap but effective justice and this of good quality. I have no hesitation in commending this proposal to the litigant public with the greatest confidence.

I remain,

Yours faithfully,

pondents.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Joint family—Mortgage of property given to father and son—Subsequent purchase of portion of property by grandson who was separate in mess and business out of his self-acquisition—Adverse possession—Purchase of remaining share by mortgagee at execution sale had by another creditor—Extinction of mortgagor's title.

Some time after a mortgage had been executed of immoveable properties in favour of R. and S., father and son, members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara, a widow of the mortgagor sold such right and title, if any, as she had in half of the property of the mortgagor to B., son of S., who was joint with R. and S. at the time of the mortgage but who prior to his purchase had ceased to be joint in food and business with S., though there was no partition, and having received a present of a considerable sum of money from his grandmother had been carrying on money-lending business on his own account and had found the purchase-money out of his separate self-acquired property. B. got possession after his purchase and continued in possession for considerably over 12 years.

Held—That the possession of the property by B. was not that of a mortgagee but adverse to that of the mortgagee and the title of the mortgagor's representatives to redeem was lost by adverse possession.

The remaining half share was sold in execution of a decree obtained by another creditor of the mortgagor in a suit brought against his representatives and purchased by S. and passed by succession to B.'s heirs :

Held—That the Plaintiffs who claimed through the mortgagee had failed to establish any title by way of redemption or otherwise to any interest in the mortgaged property and his suit should be dismissed.

These were two consolidated Appeals from a judgment and a decree, dated the 13th of June 1907, passed by the High Court for the North-Western Provinces at Allahabad, which partly affirmed and partly reversed a judgment and decree, dated the 14th July 1904, of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur who had dismissed the Plaintiffs' suit.

The principal question for determination on the Appeals was whether a mortgage of the property in dispute executed by one Mehdi Ali on the 22nd July 1846, was still subsisting, and was redeemable by the Plaintiffs.

The facts of the case shortly stated were :—

Mehdi Ali, a Shia Muslim, was owner of 20 biswa of Mauza Lohari. On the 22nd
July 1846, he executed a usufructuary mortgage of $\frac{2}{3}$ rd share of the said village in favour of Sita Ram and his son Sheo
Lal, and put the mortgagees in possession.
The mortgage was redeemable after the expiry of two years. Mehdi Ali died about 1850, leaving children and two widows, Ashrafunnisa and Umda. Umda had three daughters, Piari, Husaini and Askari. The Defendants' case was that Ashrafunnisa had a daughter who survived Mehdi Ali, which the Plaintiffs denied.

On Mehdi Ali's death, Ashrafunnisa purported to hold one-half, i.e., 10 biswa of Mauza Lohari under what title it was not clear. Umda, with her daughters, succeeded to the remaining half. Mutation of names in the revenue papers was effected accordingly.

Mehdi Ali was heavily involved in debt. The creditors instituted suits against Ashrafunnisa and other heirs and obtained decrees. Among others the said Sheo Lal obtained a simple money decree on the 10th September 1852, and in execution put up for sale the 20 biswa of the said Mauza Lohari. The Court fixed the 20th June 1853 for auction. On the 19th May 1853, it was represented to the Court that the judgment-debtors wished to pay up the decree money by a private sale of the said village and the Court accordingly discharged the attachment of the village to facilitate the sale. On the same date Ashrafunnisa appointed an agent to sell her share of the village, and on the 27th May 1853 her agent sold the 10 biswa share of Mauza Lohari to Baldeo Sahai, son of the said mortgagee, Sheo Lal. It was stated in the sale deed that the sale was held "in order to satisfy the decrees held by, and debts due to Sheo Lal, for the payment of which" Mehdi Ali was liable. Out of the consideration money, Rs. 2,000 were left with the vendee to redeem the mortgage, dated the 22nd July 1846, to the extent of one-half. The said Baldeo Sahai was put in possession of a portion only of the property sold, but shortly after he succeeded in redeeming the mortgage, and obtained complete possession over the 10 biswa of Mauza Lohari. At the Revenue Settlement of 1863, he was recorded proprietor of that share of the village in all the papers. He and his heirs, the present Appellants, continued in possession as proprietors.

The remaining 10 biswa of Mauza Lohari was sold by the Court in execution of decrees against Mehdi Ali's heirs, and was purchased by the said Sheo Lal on the 20th March 1854. In the sale proceedings it was said that "the 10 biswa share of Umda" was sold. The decrees were obtained by the several creditors of Mehdi Ali against Ashrafunnisa, and Umda for self and as guardian of Piari, Husaini and Askari. Umda raised objections to the sale, but they were disallowed by the Court. Sheo Lal thus became owner of the said 10 biswa of Mauza Lohari, and was so recorded in all the revenue papers.

The said Sheo Lal succeeded Sita Ram, and on the death of Sheo Lal in 1869, Baldeo Sahai, who was living and carrying on business separately from his father, succeeded him. Baldeo Sahai died in 1895, leaving two widows, the present Appellants as his heirs.

On the 1st September 1903, the present suit was instituted by Ishtiaq Husain, Plaintiff No. 3, and Musammat Zindi Begum, Plaintiff No. 4, and the other Plaintiffs to whom they conveyed a moiety of the said Mauza Lohari by a sale, dated the 3rd June 1903. They alleged in their plaint that on the death of Mehdi Ali his widow Ashrafunnisa was childless, and therefore did not inherit his landed estate; that the whole landed estate devolved upon Umda and her daughters; that after the death of Umda, Piari and Husaini, the landed estate came to Askari, who was succeeded by Plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 4, son and daughter of Askari. They further alleged that proceedings which resulted in the private sale, dated the 27th May 1853, and the Court sale, dated the 20th March 1854, were purely fictitious and did not pass any title to the vendees. Hence they claimed to recover the entire mortgaged property by redemption of the mortgage, dated the 22nd July 1846, and mesne profits.

MUSAMMAT PARBATI v. SAYYID MUHAMMAD MUZAFFAR ALI KHAN.

Musammats Parhati and Sunder filed a written statement and defended the suit. They pleaded inter alia that Ashrafunnisa had a daughter who survived Mehdi Ali, that Ashrafunnisa was competent to sell the property, that the village was sold in order to pay the debts of Mehdi Ali, that both Sheo Lal and Baldeo Sahai were in possession in equal shares as proprietors for over fifty years, and that the suit was barred by time. They denied that the mortgage, dated the 22nd July 1846, subsisted on the date of suit.

The Subordinate Judge of Saharunpur after fixing the necessary issues, and recording evidence, both oral and documentary, produced by the parties came to the conclusion that Ashrafunnisa had a daughter who survived Mehdi Ali; that she inherited $\frac{3}{4}$ nd part of Mauza Lohari on her own behalf and through her daughter, and that in selling the excess, i.e., $\frac{1}{4}$ nd part of the village, she acted as a trespasser; that the sale, dated the 27th May 1853, to Baldeo Sahai was genuine and bona fide, and was effected by her to pay her husband's debts; that Baldeo Sahai was separate from his father Sheo Lal, and that his possession was adverse for over 40 years; and that the auction sale to Sheo Lal was not of Umda's share alone but of her daughter's shares as well and that it was perfectly valid. He held that the mortgage sought to be redeemed ceased to subsist more than 40 years ago, and accordingly delivered his judgment and made a decree on the 14th July 1904, dismissing the suit with costs.

The Plaintiffs thereupon appealed against the said decree to the High Court, which delivered its judgment on the 13th June 1907. The learned Judges (Sir G. Knox, A. C. J., and Dillon, J.) of the High Court affirmed the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the auction sale of 10 biswa of Mauza Lohari, dated the 20th March 1854, was valid and binding on the Plaintiffs.

As regards the rest of the claim, they found that Ashrafunnisa had no daughter who survived Mehdi Ali, and she did not inherit any share in his landed estates. They therefore held that no title passed to Baldeo Sahai under the sale, dated the 27th May 1853. They further held that Baldeo Sahai was joint with Sheo Lal, and that the possession of the former was that of a mortgagee only. In the result the High Court allowed the appeal in part, and passed a decree in favour of the Plaintiffs declaring them entitled to redeem a $\frac{2}{3}$ share of the 10 biswas purchased by Baldeo Sahai. The High Court remanded the suit to the Court of the Subordinate Judge for trial on the merits.

Hence these appeals by both parties.

Sir R. Finlay, K. C., and Mr. Bhugwandin Dube for the Defendants.—There was sufficient evidence to show that Ashrafunnisa had a daughter that survived Mehdi Ali, and the Subordinate Judge who heard and saw the witnesses believed it. It was a fact that Ashrafunnisa was put in possession of a 10 biswa, and mutation of names was effected in her favour. This would have been impossible if she had no legal right. She could not possibly have sold the 10 biswa in lieu of dower debt. In any case we have had adverse possession of the property for over 40 years. Baldeo Sahai purchased the property in 1853 for himself. The vendor left money with the vendee (Baldeo Sahai) to redeem the mortgage from his own father. There was evidence which established that Baldeo Sahai separated in food and business from his father, and carried on business on his own account up to the date of his father's death. Baldeo Sahai's possession was not the possession of a mortgagee. As regards the remaining 10 biswa both Courts had found that the auction sale to Sheo Lal was valid. It was not only Umda's share that was sold although her name alone was mentioned in the sale proceedings, but the 10 biswa share of Mauza Lohari, i.e., the shares of Umda and her three daughters were sold.

Mr. Bhugwandin Dubé followed.—He submitted that the evidence established that Baldeo Sahai purchased the property out of his separate self-acquired moneys. His purchase was self-acquisition as against the joint family and his possession was that of a stranger. It was not necessary to prove that Baldeo Sahai had separated after a complete partition of the joint family. A member of a joint family can hold separate property.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Cowell for the Plaintiffs.—The mortgage was made in 1846, when Baldeo Sahai was admittedly a member of the joint family. Although the mortgage was made in the name of Sita Ram and Sheo Lal, it was made on behalf of the joint family and Baldeo Sahai got possession of the mortgaged property as a mortgagee. Baldeo Sahai could not by any act of his own convert his possession into an adverse possession. The Defendants had failed to prove that Baldeo Sahai ever ceased to be a member of the joint family. The joint family property was worth several lakhs of rupees, and it was impossible that Baldeo Sahai should have renounced all claims to it when he is said to have left his father's home. The case now being set up—namely, that he purchased the property out of his separate self-acquired money—is a new one.

At the earliest Baldeo Sahai left his father's home in 1848, without any partition of the joint family. His original possession which began in 1846, as a mortgagee was never changed. A mortgagee cannot convert his title into adverse possession by purchasing the mortgaged property from a person who has no title. Ashrafunnisa was not entitled to inheritance. She was a childless widow and the evidence produced by the Defendants to prove the contrary was tutored and false. As regards the cross-appeal, the sale proceedings distinctly show that the "10 biswa share of Umda" was sold. As Lord Hobhouse remarked "it is the instrument which confers title on the purchaser." Simbhunath Panday v. Golab Singh (1). It is not proved that the rights and interests of Umda's daughters were sold.

Sir R. Finlay, K. C., replied.

SIR JOHN EDGE.—These are consolidated Appeals from a decree of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces at Allahabad, dated the 13th June 1907, which partly affirmed and partly reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur, dated the 14th July 1904, by which the suit had been dismissed.

The suit was brought on the 1st September 1903 to obtain proprietary possession of 13 biswas, 6 biswanais, 3 tanwanais, 6½ kachwanais and a fraction of the 20 biswas of Mauza Lohari. The Plaintiffs' case briefly was that one Mehdi Ali, whose representatives in title they alleged themselves to be, had in 1846 mortgaged the shares in Mauza Lohari, possession of which they claimed, to Sita

MUSAMMAT PARBATI v. SAIED MUHAMMAD MUZAFFAR ALI KHAN.

Ram and his son Sheo Lal; that the mortgage debt had been discharged by the usufruct; and that the Defendants were the representatives of the mortgagees and still held possession under no other title; and the Plaintiffs claimed a decree for proprietary possession and for mesne profits. The case of the Defendants was that they held possession not under the mortgage of 1846, but under a private sale of the 27th of May 1853, of 10 biswas of Mauza Lohari, and under an auction sale of the 20th March 1854 of the remaining 10 biswas of Mauza Lohari, which sales they alleged were made in order to discharge debts which had been contracted by Mehdi Ali. In effect the Defendants' case was that by reason of the sales of 1853 and 1854 the equity of redemption in the shares which were mortgaged in 1846 passed to those through whom they claimed title. It was also contended on behalf of the Defendants that they were not precluded from setting up a title by adverse possession by the fact that possession of the shares in suit had been originally obtained under the mortgage of 1846.

The facts as found by the Board are briefly as follows:—

On the 22nd July 1846 Mehdi Ali, who owned the whole 10 biswas of Mauza Lohari, borrowed Rs. 4,000 from Sita Ram and his son Sheo Lal, and executed in their favour a mortgage for the term of two years of the shares which are the subject of this suit. The mortgage was usufructuary and the mortgagees were put in possession under it. Incidentally it may be mentioned that the Subordinate Judge found as a fact that the mortgage debt had been discharged by the usufruct before 1863. If it were necessary in this appeal to decide that issue their Lordships would probably not be prepared to dissent from that finding of the Subordinate Judge.

Mehdi Ali, who was a Shia Muhammadan, died on the 9th January 1852, and left surviving him two widows, Ashrafunnisa and Umda Begum, and certainly three daughters who had been born to him by Umda Begum. Through one of those daughters, Askari, who subsequently married and left issue, the Plaintiffs claim title. It has been contended on behalf of the Defendants that Mehdi Ali also left surviving him a daughter born to him by Ashrafunnisa. On behalf of the Plaintiffs it has been contended that Mehdi Ali left surviving him no daughter by Ashrafunnisa, and that Ashrafunnisa was a childless widow. In the view which their Lordships take of this case it is immaterial whether Mehdi Ali left, or did not leave, a daughter surviving him by Ashrafunnisa. It may, however, be mentioned that after Mehdi Ali's death, for some reason which the evidence does not explain, 10 biswas of Mauza Lohari were treated as the share of Ashrafunnisa, and the remaining 10 biswas were treated as the share of Umda Begum and her three daughters.

Mehdi Ali died heavily in debt, and after his death in 1852 suits to recover debts which were due by him were brought by his creditors against Ashrafunnisa, Umda Begum, and her three daughters, as the representatives of Mehdi Ali, and money decrees were obtained in those suits. One of those suits was brought by Sheo Lal on the 8th July 1852, on a bond payable on demand, to recover with interest Rs. 2,000 which Sheo Lal had lent to Mehdi Ali on the 29th May 1849. In that suit Sheo Lal obtained a decree for Rs. 2,786-5-6 principal and interest, against Ashrafunnisa, Umda Begum, and the three daughters of Umda Begum, all of whom were sued as the heirs of Mehdi Ali. Under that decree the 20 biswas of Mauza Lohari were attached. On the 5th of May 1853, a sale proclamation was made fixing the 20th of June 1853 as the date for the auction sale of the 20 biswas in execution of the money decree. On the 19th of May 1853, Sheo Lal, through his pleader, applied to the Court to remove the attachment in order to enable the Defendants in that suit to pay the decree money by a private sale of the estate of Mehdi Ali deceased. On that application the Court removed the attachment. On the 27th May 1853, Inaet Husain, acting under a power-of-attorney, which had been executed for that purpose by Ashrafunnisa and had been duly registered, executed on her behalf a sale deed of 10 biswas of Mauza Lohari in favour of Baldeo Sahai, son of Sheo Lal, the consideration being Rs. 7,500. In that sale deed it was stated that two-thirds of three suls of the 20 biswas of Mauza Lohari had been from the 22nd of January 1846 in the exclusive possession of Sita Ram and Sheo Lal under the mortgage for Rs. 4,000 of 1846 from Mehdi Ali to them, and it was stated that Mehdi Ali had died, and had left a considerable amount of debt unpaid, that Ashrafunnisa had remained the heir of half the estate of Mehdi Ali in lieu of her dower debt; and in order to satisfy the decrees held by, and the debts due to, Sheo Lal she made an absolute sale of the 10 biswas share to Baldeo Sahai. It was by the sale deed agreed that Rs. 2,000 of the purchase money should be left with Baldeo Sahai, and that he should have power to pay the Rs. 2,000 to the mortgagee and to redeem the subject of the sale. In the sale deed the 10 biswas were described as Ashrafunnisa's share. After that sale the 10 biswas were entered in the revenue papers as Baldeo Sahai's share by private sale. Baldeo Sahai obtained possession of the 10 biswas share and held possession of the share until he died in 1895, when the Defendants as his representatives obtained possession.

It has been contended on behalf of the Plaintiffs, first, that Ashrafunnisa had no title to the 10 biswas share in Mauza Lohari, and, consequently had no title which she was capable of passing by the sale deed, and, secondly, that Baldeo Sahai was a member with his father Sheo Lal of a joint Hindu family, and that the family held possession as mortgagees and could not set up a claim of adverse possession against the representatives in title of Mehdi Ali, the mortgagee of 1846.

It has not been suggested that Ashrafunnisa had any interest in Mauza Lohari which she could sell other than such interest, if any, in the immoveable property of Mehdi Ali as she obtained under the Shia law as his widow. Her right to dower did not confer upon her a saleable estate in Mauza Lohari. If she had not borne to Mehdi Ali a daughter who survived him, Ashrafunnisa as his widow took no title to any share in Mauza Lohari. If on the other hand, as the Defendants have contended, Ashrafunnisa had borne to Mehdi Ali a daughter who survived him for a few months, Ashrafunnisa's share as his widow, and the share of his daughter, which on that contention came to her on the daughter's death, did not together amount to a 10 biswas share in the Mauza. If Ashrafunnisa had any other title in 1853 to the 10 biswas share which she purported to sell to Baldeo Sahai, it has not been shown what it was or how she had obtained it. But it is not necessary to consider what title, if any, Ashrafunnisa had to the 10 biswas share, as by the sale deed of the 27th May 1853 Ashrafunnisa sold to Baldeo Sahai such interests, if any, as she had in the 10 biswas of Mauza Lohari, and Baldeo Sahai got possession of the 10 biswas, and in course of time obtained a title by adverse possession to the whole 10 biswas or any portion of that share which Ashrafunnisa may not have been empowered to sell to him, and that title became indefeasible unless he or the Defendants who claim under him were precluded from setting up a title of adverse possession.

The High Court found as a fact that Baldeo Sahai was in 1846, and continued to be, a member of the joint Hindu family, of which his father Sheo Lal had been a member, and on that finding of fact decided that Baldeo Sahai's possession and the possession of the Defendants as his representatives had always been that of mortgagees, and consequently that Baldeo Sahai and those who claim under him were precluded from setting up any title of adverse possession to any portion of the share which was mortgaged in 1846 to Sita Ram and Sheo Lal. Their Lordships are unable to agree with the findings of fact of the High Court upon which that decision was based. At the date of the mortgage of 1846 Baldeo Sahai was undoubtedly a member of the joint Hindu family, of which Sita Ram and Sheo Lal were members, and that family was governed by the law of the Benares School of the Mitakshara. Their Lordships, however, find on evidence, which they consider is unimpeachable, that in 1847 or 1848, owing to disputes in the family, Baldeo Sahai ceased to be joint in food and joint in business with Sheo Lal, but no partition of the family property was then made, and thenceforward during their lives Baldeo Sahai and Sheo Lal had been separate in food and in business. Their Lordships also find that when Sheo Lal and Baldeo Sahai ceased to be joint in food and in business Baldeo Sahai received a present of a considerable sum of money from his grandmother, with which he carried on the business of a money-lender on his own account, and that out of his separate self-acquired property he found the purchase money of Rs. 7,500 of the sale deed of the 27th of May 1853. The oral evidence showing a separation is in their Lordships' opinion confirmed by the terms of that deed. Ashrafunnisa purported to sell the 10 biswas to Baldeo Sahai as a person who was not a mortgagee under the mortgage of 1846. So far as the 10 biswas which Ashrafunnisa purported to sell to Baldeo Sahai on the 27th of May 1853, their Lordships find that a title at least of adverse possession has been established and that the Defendants are not precluded from setting up that defence.

Their Lordships concur with the finding of the Subordinate Judge and the finding of the High Court that the remaining 10 biswas share in Mauza Lohari was sold to Sheo Lal, on the 20th of March 1854, at an auction sale held in execution of a decree for money which had been obtained by a creditor of Mehdi Ali in a suit brought against Umda Begum and her three daughters as the heirs and representatives of Mehdi Ali, and Sheo Lal obtained possession and held it until he died, when his interest passed to his son Baldeo Sahai as his heir.

The Plaintiffs failed to establish any title by way of redemption or otherwise to any interest in Matuza Lohari, and their suit was rightly dismissed by the Subordinate Judge.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the Appeal of the representatives in title of Baldeo Sahai be allowed with costs and the decree of the High Court be varied by dismissing the Appeal to that Court with costs, and that the Appeal of Saiyid Muzaffar Ali Khan and other Plaintiffs to His Majesty in Council be dismissed with costs.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL

No. 6 OF 1910.

JENKINS, C. J. N. R. CHATTERJEA, J. 1912, 18, March.	}	PANCHANAN GHOSH, Plaintiff, (Appellant in 2nd Appeal), Appellant, v. MIR ABDUL MOLIK and ors., Defend- ants, Respondents.

Occupancy holding, mortgage by raiyat—Subsequent transfer to stranger—Collusive suit by landlord for ejectment and recovery of possession—Landlord if in possession under paramount title—Suit on mortgage—Landlord if necessary party—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 85.

When it is found that a landlord obtained possession of an occupancy holding, alleged to be non-transferable, by bringing a collusive suit for ejectment against a transferee from the raiyat :

Held—That in a suit by a mortgagee of the holding on his mortgage, the landlord would be a proper party, his possession of the holding resting on acquisition from the transferee and not on a paramount title.

JOGGESWAR DUTT v. BRUBAN MOHAN MITRA (1) distinguished.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 24th of January 1910 against the decree of the Hon'ble Charles Peter Caspersz, one of the Judges of this Court, dated the 22nd of December 1909, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1130 of 1908, preferred on the 1st of June 1908 against the decree of E. P. Chapman, Esq., District Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 25th of November 1907, modifying the decree of Babu Jogendra Nath Mukerjee, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court at Alipur, dated the 30th of June 1906.

The material facts will appear from the judgment of CASPERSZ, J., which was as follows :—

CASPERSZ, J.—The Defendant No. 1 mortgaged five properties to Mathura Nath Ghose whose estate is now represented by the Plaintiff as executor. Subsequent to that event, the Defendant No. 2 purchased two of those properties at a sale in execution of a money-decree against the mortgagor the Defendant No. 1. Then in the year 1904, the Defendant No. 3 brought an action in ejectment against the Defendant No. 2, and obtained a decree for khas possession of the one property (ka) which is the subject-matter of the present appeal.

The Plaintiff brought his suit for foreclosure making the three Defendants parties thereto. In para. 5 of the plaint, a case was set up of collusion between the Defendants Nos. 2 and 3, and it was stated that they were both entitled to redeem the mortgage on the property (ka).

The Defendant No. 3 pleaded that he was the landlord, or superior malik, of the Jama of Rs. 24 annas 12 within which the property (ka) was comprised, that the jama was a non-transferable raiyati jote, and that, on all the grounds set forth, he was not a necessary party to this suit.

This last-mentioned plea appears to have been implied in the 4th issue of the Court of first instance, namely, "Is the jama of Rs. 24 annas 12 mortgaged in the deed transferable, and is such mortgage valid and binding against Defendant No. 3"? The Subordinate Judge found that the jama was transferable, and that it was binding on the Defendant No. 3, the present landlord. The Subordinate Judge, also, found that there had been collusion between the Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in the suit of 1904.

On appeal by the Defendant No. 3, the District Judge has discharged that Defendant from the suit on the preliminary contention that he should not have been made a party inasmuch as he claimed by a paramount title of landlord. The District Judge was inclined to think otherwise, but, accepting the decision of this Court in Foggeswar Dutt v. Bhuban Mohan Mitra (1), he was constrained to hold that the Defendant No. 3, landlord, was not a necessary party.

In second appeal, the learned Vakil for the Plaintiff-Appellant has urged, first, that the lower Appellate Court should not have allowed the Defendant No. 3 to take such an objection before it, and, secondly, that the Defendant No. 3 is a necessary party to this litigation.

Now, the general proposition admits of no doubt that, when a person has assumed the position of being a proper and necessary party, he cannot, after being cast in the suit, change front and insist that he ought not to have been made a party Defendant :—[See Bhaju Chowdhury v. Chuni Lal Marwari (2)].

It is true that the Defendant No. 3 did not cause a specific issue to be framed, similar to the 8th issue, raising the question whether he had been improperly made a party to the Plaintiff's foreclosure suit; but, as I have already mentioned, he did advance that plea in the 9th paragraph of his written statement, and the plea, I take it, was impliedly put in issue between the parties in the 4th issue framed, namely, "Is the jama of Rs. 24 annas 12 mortgaged in the deed transferable, and is such mortgage valid and binding against Defendant No. 3"? The question of transferability raised the question whether the mortgage was valid and binding on the Defendant No. 3. If he is regarded as a landlord, his interest will be to deny that the property was transferable without his consent; if, on the other hand, he is regarded as a subsequent purchaser of any portion of the property, his position will be diametrically opposite to that of a landlord, and it will be his interest to say that the tenure was transferable, otherwise, he could not have purchased any equity of redemption. Consequently, the question of the Defendant No. 3 being a necessary party was raised in the 4th issue of the first Court, and by reason of the Subordinate Judge holding that the jama was transferable, it was held by implication that the Defendant No. 3 was necessary party in his capacity as a subsequent transferee of the interest of the mortgagor. It was, therefore, open to the Defendant No. 3 to appeal to the District Judge, and to challenge the decision of the first Court on this point.

Coming then to the second contention, whether the Defendant No. 3 is a necessary party, it appears to me that the case turns upon the finding of the lower Courts that he is, in point of fact, the landlord of the land. That is a very clear finding and the effect of it remains for consideration. As landlord, his interest would be to plead that the property of the Defendant No. 1 was not a permanent jama, and that the mortgage of the same was void ab initio. That was a plea raised in the 5th paragraph of the written statement of the Defendant No. 3. The general rule is indicated in Joggeswar Dutt v. Bhuban Mahan Mitra (1) which is the case relied upon by the District Judge, where the words of sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act—"all persons having an interest in the property"—were interpreted to mean that the only proper parties to a mortgage suit are the mortgagor and the mortgagee. That decision sets forth the general rule to which there are exceptions; and the case of Bhaju Chowdhury v. Chuni Lal Marwari (2) discusses two of the exceptions.

I think the case under appeal falls within the general rule for the reason that the Defendant No. 3 does, as a matter of fact, question the validity of the mortgage at its very inception. He was bound to do that as landlord, and his position as landlord prior to the mortgage would be unaffected by any subsequent decision in a mortgage suit to the effect that the mortgage was valid. There are certain observations at page 292 of the Report which have been impressed upon me, but if those observations be carefully perused, they are not really authority in support of the proposition contended for by the Plaintiff. It would be intolerable to hold that the Defendant No. 3, who has been found to be a landlord, is to be precluded from denying the right of the Defendant No. 1 to mortgage his property, and yet, if Defendant No. 3 is interested in the equity of redemption, he can only affirm that right, and so he is placed in an altogether inconsistent position. I do not think that he is a necessary or proper party to this suit.

This appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

JENKINS, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit on a mortgage. The Plaintiff is unquestionably the mortgagee. He has made as Defendants, the original mortgagor Defendant No. 1, Defendant No. 2 who claims to be a purchaser in execution of a money-decree obtained against Defendant No. 1, and Defendant No. 3 who claims to be in possession of the land and to be in possession as a landlord who ejected Defendant No. 2 on the ground that the transfer in execution to Defendant No. 2 was void and of no effect, and worked a forfeiture of the tenant's interest. The Plaintiff, however, maintains that Defendant No. 1 had a permanent transferable interest, and that the decree obtained by Defendant No. 3 against Defendant No. 2 was improper and collusive. The Subordinate Judge has decided both these points in favour of the Plaintiff. The result then is that if that be correct, —and it must be taken to be correct for the present purpose—the Defendant No. 3 though he may be the landlord of this piece of land, is not in possession by virtue of a paramount title, but by virtue of a title improperly and collusively obtained by an arrangement between him and Defendant No. 2. In other words, his possession, on the findings of the Subordinate Judge, must be taken to rest on acquisition from Defendant No. 2 and not on any paramount title. In this view of the case, it is obvious that the decision in Joggeswar Dutt v. Bhuban Mohan Mitra (1) has no application, and the judgment of Mr. Justice Caspersz supporting that of the District Judge must be set aside. The case is sent back for rehearing of the appeal in the lower Appellate Court, it being open to the parties to discuss the propriety of the findings of the Munsif. But, as I have already said, until those findings be set aside, they must be taken to be conclusive of the rights of the parties at this present stage.

The Appellant is entitled to the costs of the lower Appellate Court and of the High Court.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 19th of September 1910 against the order of Moulvi J. Ahmad, Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court of Zillah Patna, dated the 6th of August 1910.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Karunamoy Bose for the Appellants.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty, Lalit Mohan Banerji and Smritish Chandra Ghose for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

We are invited in this Appeal to set aside an order by which the Court below has summarily refused to entertain an objection of the judgment-debtors that the decree under execution has been completely adjusted out of Court. The circumstances under which this objection was taken are patent on the face of the record. The decree under execution was made in a suit for rent on the 24th of September 1908. An appeal was preferred to this Court on the 8th January 1909.

Three days later, the Appellants applied for a Rule to stay proceedings in the execution which had already been commenced in the Court below. The Rule was granted and an ad interim stay was directed. On the 5th February 1909, the Appellant's presented an application to this Court in which it was stated that the matter in difference between the parties had been adjusted and that in pursuance thereof they had agreed to withdraw the appeal. This application was directed to be heard on the 8th of February. On that date in the presence of the Vakil for the Appellants and the Vakil for the Respondent the Court granted the application. The appeal was dismissed and the Rule discharged; the Respondent also waived her right to the costs of the proceedings in this Court. On the 22nd of February, the Vakil for the Respondent addressed a letter to the Deputy Registrar in which he prayed that as the appeal had been withdrawn, the order of this Court might be sent down to the Court below as the records were required for the purpose of another case. Five days later, the order of this Court was communicated to the Court below and the records were also returned. In the order which was drawn up, it was stated that the Appellants had intimated to the Court that the matter in difference between the parties had been adjusted and on that footing the appeal had been dismissed without costs.

On the 2nd March 1909, the Court below recorded an order to the effect that the record had been received back and directed the decree-holder to take proper steps. On the 8th March the application for execution was dismissed as no steps had been taken in that behalf by the decree-holder. In this manner the application for execution which had been presented on the 4th November 1908 was disposed of by the Court below. It now transpires that on the 18th March 1909 the decree-holder presented a second application for execution, but it was dismissed for non-prosecution on the 11th May following. On the 6th of June 1910, the decree-holder presented the application on the basis of which the proceedings now before us were initiated. The decree-holder ignored the settlement alleged by the judgment-debtors in their application to this Court on the 5th February 1909, and prayed that execution might proceed on the footing of the application of the 4th November 1908. Notice was served upon the judgment-debtors who promptly preferred objections on the 25th of July 1910. These objections were of a two-fold character, namely, first, that the execution could not proceed because the decree had been adjusted in full; and, secondly, that if the execution could proceed, the decree-holder was bound to proceed against the properties mentioned in the prayer clause of the plaint before she could be allowed to proceed against the other properties of the judgment-debtors. The Subordinate Judge overruled these contentions and held that as the alleged adjustment had not been certified, it was not competent to the Court to take notice of it. The Subordinate Judge further held that upon the face of the objections the adjustment, if true, was between the decree-holder and persons who were not parties to the execution proceedings, and consequently the adjustment could not be of any value to the judgment-debtors. The Subordinate Judge also held that the discretion of the decree-holder to proceed in execution of her decree in any manner she chose, was not restricted by the facts stated in the prayer clause of the plaint.

The judgment-debtors have now appealed to this Court. On their behalf the decision of the Subordinate Judge has been attacked substantially on three grounds, namely, first, that although the adjustment has not been certified in the manner contemplated by r. 2 of Or. 21 of the Code of 1908, as the conduct of the decree-holder is fraudulent, it is open to the Court to investigate the allegations of fraud under sec. 47 of the Code of 1908; secondly, that the provisions of r. 2 of Or. XXI of the Code have in substance been complied with; and, thirdly, that if it is open to the decree-holder to proceed with the execution, she cannot sell the properties of the judgment-debtors in any manner she chooses, but must proceed first against the properties mentioned in the prayer clause of the plaint.

In so far as the first of these objections is concerned, reliance has been placed upon the cases of Gadadhar Panda v. Shyam Churn Naik (1), Ramayyar v. Ramayyar (2) and Trimbak Ram Krishna Ranade v. Hari Laxman Ranade (3). In our opinion, there is no foundation for this contention. Or. 21, r. 2 of the Code provides in cl. (3) that "a payment, which has not been certified or recorded as aforesaid, i.e., as explained in cls. 1 or 2 at the instance of either the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor shall not be recognized by any Court executing the decree." The contention of the learned Vakil for the Appellants in substance is that in cases where the conduct of the decree-holder is fraudulent, it is open to the Court, in fact it is incumbent on the Court, to investigate the allegation of fraud under sec. 47 of the Code of 1908, notwithstanding the clear and specific provisions of cl. (e) of r. 2 of Or. 21. This argument is obviously fallacious. A proceeding under r. 2, Or. 21 is a proceeding under sec. 47 of the Code, inasmuch as it decides a question between the parties to the suit and relating to the execution, satisfaction or discharge of the decree made in the suit. If the contention advanced on behalf of the Appellants were to prevail, in all cases where fraud is imputed to the decree-holder, the provisions of cl. (3) of r. 2, Or. 21 would become nugatory; in other words, the provisions of r. 2 would be superseded by the wider provisions of sec. 47. We are, therefore, unable, upon the clear provisions of statutory law, to give effect to the contention of the learned Vakils for the Appellants.

As regards judicial decisions to which our attention has been drawn, Gadadhar Panda v. Shyam Churn Naik (1) does not, when analysed, support the contention of the Appellants. No doubt there are isolated expressions in that judgment which would support the view that it is competent to the Court to deal with a case under sec. 244 of the Code of 1882 when an allegation of fraud is made in relation to a case of payment or adjustment of a decree. But it is worthy of note that no question of limitation arose in that case. It cannot be held that the learned Judges intended to lay down that although the period of limitation within which an application by the judgment-debtor under cl. (2) of r. 2 of Or. 21 is to be presented to the Court has expired, it is still open to him to secure an investigation of the very same matter by an application under sec. 47 of the Code of 1908. The only case which supports the contention of the Appellants is the decision in Ramayyar v. Ramayyar (2). It is sufficient, however, to point out that a contrary view was taken by the learned Judges of the Madras High Court in Periathambi v. Vellaya (4) and the decision in Ramayyar v. Ramayyar (2) was expressly dissented from in Ganapatty v. Chenga (5). On the other hand, a series of decisions of this Court amongst which may be mentioned, Kamini Debi v. Aghore Nath (6), Nistarini Dasi v. Kazim Ali (7), Monmohan Karmokar v. Dwarka Nath Karmokar (8) and Hera-mony Biswas v. Musa Khan (9), show conclusively that the contention of the Appellants ought not to prevail. The authorities on the subject were fully reviewed in the case of Monmohan Karmokar v. Dwarka Nath Karmokar (8), where it was pointed out that in a case in which an application under cl. (2) of r. 2 of Or. 21 would be successfully met by the objection of limitation, the judgment-debtor was not entitled, under the colour of sec. 47 of the Code of 1908, to obtain an investigation of the objection that the decree had been satisfied or adjusted out of Court. We adhere to the view taken in that case. We are also clearly of opinion that the decision in Trimbak Ram Krishna Ranade v. Hari Laxman Ranade (3) is of no assistance to the Appellants. We may further point out that even if it is established that the conduct of the decree-holders is fraudulent the judgment-debtor is not entitled to obtain an extension of the time within which an application is to be made to the Court under cl. (2) of r. 2 of Or. 21. Sec. 18 of the Limitation Act which deals with the effect of fraud, is clearly of no avail to the Appellants. That section provides that "when any person having a right to make an application has by means of fraud been kept from the knowledge of such right or of the title on which it is founded or where any document necessary to establish such right has been fraudulently concealed from him, the time limited for making an application against the person guilty of the fraud or accessory thereto shall be computed from the time when the fraud first became known to the person injuriously affected thereby, or in the case of the concealed document, when he first had the means of producing it or compelling its production." It is not suggested on behalf of the Appellants that they were kept by means of fraud from the knowledge of their right to make the application mentioned in cl. (2) of r. 2 of Or. 21. Their grievance is that they have been kept by means of fraud from the exercise of their right to make this application; consequently, if we were to accede to the contention of the Appellants, we should have to substitute for the phrase "from the knowledge of such right," the phrase "from the exercise of such right." But clearly the knowledge of a right and the exercise thereof are fundamentally distinct things. We are, therefore, of opinion that in so far as the first contention of the Appellants is concerned it must fail notwithstanding the earnest appeal which the learned Vakil for the Appellants made to us that the view we propose to take might involve considerable hardship to innocent persons. But if the judgment-debtor, notwithstanding the express provisions of cl. 2, r. 2, Or. 21, still enters into an adjustment with the decree-holder out of Court and omits to take the necessary precaution of making an application within the time allowed by law, he has no just ground of complaint when the decree-holder takes advantage of his omission to seek the protection of the law. Further, it is not by any means clear that the judgment-debtor in a case of this description is really without any remedy, because it is well settled, as pointed out in the case of Poromanand Khasnabish v. Khepoo Paramanik (10), that it is open to the judgment-debtor who has been defrauded in this manner to institute a suit for damages for the fraud. It is also clear as laid down in Madhub v. Novodeep (11), R. v. Bapuji (12), R. v. Muthuraman (13) and R. v. Pillala (14), that the decree holder who has recourse to such a fraudulent act, renders himself liable to proceedings under the criminal law. In the present case, therefore, even if the Appellants were to fail in their contention, they would not be wholly without a remedy. The first contention of the Appellants therefore fails.

In so far as the second contention is concerned, it raises the question whether the judgment-debtor has not in substance complied with the requirements of cl. 2, r. 2, Or. 21. The learned Vakil for the Appellants has contended that the petition of objection presented to the Court below on the 25th of July 1910 may be treated as in continuation of the application made to this Court on the 5th of February 1909 in which the fact of the alleged adjustment was notified to the Court. In our opinion, this contention is well-founded and must prevail. No doubt an application under cl. 2, r. 2, Or. 21, ought to be presented to the Court in which the decree is under execution; and it ought to call upon the Court to issue a notice to the decree-holder to show cause why the adjustment should not be recorded as certified. Tested from this point of view the application of the 5th February 1909 might, at first sight, be deemed open to objection. But the circumstances of this case are of a very special character. No doubt an application for execution of the decree of the Court below was pending before the Subordinate Judge, but the decree itself was under appeal to this Court; and the only decree which could ultimately be enforced by the decree-holder against the judgment-debtor would be the decree of this Court, whether that decree be one of affirmance, reversal or modification. Consequently when the judgment-debtors notified to this Court that the decree had been adjusted, it could not be said that they had not acted in accordance with law. No doubt that application did not call upon the decree-holder to certify the alleged adjustment; but it was not necessary to take such a step at that stage. In fact, although the allegation of adjustment was made, it was not repudiated by the learned Vakil for the decree-holder Respondent. On the other hand, the Vakil for the Respondent gave up his cost not only in the Rule but also in the appeal. This fact undoubtedly points to the conclusion that there must have been some arrangement between the parties. It is also inconceivable that if no arrangement had been entered into between the parties, the judgment-debtor after having paid Rs. 365 as Court-fees on the memorandum of appeal presented on the 8th of January 1909, should have voluntarily asked for leave to withdraw the appeal on the 5th of February 1909. It was only after the decree-holder had applied to the Court on the 6th June 1910 to execute the decree, ignoring the alleged adjustment, that it became necessary for the judgment-debtor to apply to the Court to compel the decree-holder to certify the adjustment in question. We therefore hold, under the circumstances of this case, that, treating the application of the 5th February 1909 presented to this Court and the petition of objection presented to the Court below on the 25th July 1910 as parts of the same transaction, there was sufficient compliance with the provisions of the law. The Court is never astute to impose a technical bar so as to give effect to a scheme of fraud, and it would be lamentable if we were constrained to hold that the application of the 5th February 1909 in which the allegation of adjustment was made, was of no avail to the judgment-debtor for the purpose of proceedings under cl. 2, r. 2, Or. 21. In our opinion, the Subordinate Judge ought to have entertained the objection taken in the application of the 25th July 1910 and investigated it on the merits. The second contention of the Appellants must, therefore, prevail.

In so far as the third contention is concerned, it is not necessary for us to determine whether it is well-founded. But we must point out that the decree now under execution is a perfect specimen of the mode in which a decree ought never to be drawn up. The decree as it stands is unintelligible and cannot be executed without reference to the judgment, possibly also without reference to the pleadings. If the question arises later on as to whether, in the event of execution of the decree, the decree-holder is in any way fettered as to the manner in which she should proceed against the properties of the judgment-debtors, the question must be re-investigated by the lower Court with reference to all the proceedings in the suit. This question, therefore, will be left open for future investigation.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed, the order of the Subordinate Judge set aside, and the case remanded to him in order that the objections taken by the judgment-debtors in their application of the 25th July 1910 may be investigated on evidence.

We must add that the Subordinate Judge took a very narrow view of his duties in this matter, when he held that as upon the face of the pleadings the alleged adjustment purported to have been entered into between the judgment-debtors on the one hand, and persons who are strangers to the proceedings, on the other, the adjustment could not be of any avail to the judgment-debtors. But the allegation of the judgment-debtors is that the adjustment was entered into, for the benefit of the decree-holder, with her husband and her father-in-law. If this be so, the Court will discover the real nature of the transaction, and not impose technical bars to effectuate a scheme of fraud; that is, in a matter of this description, the Court is bound to look to the substance and not to the mere form of the transactions placed before it.

The Appellants are entitled to their costs in this Court. We assess the hearing-fee at 5 (five) gold mohurs.

No. 1379 OF 1910.

Landlord and tenant—Settlement proceedings, tenant settling up rent-free title in—Tenant entered as settled raiyat in Record of Rights as finally published—Suit to have rent assessed—Limitation.

Where more than 12 years before the landlord's suit for assessment of rent the tenant in the course of settlement proceedings set up a title to hold the land rent-free, but no actual decision of the question by the Settlement Officer was proved, though the record-of-rights, which was finally published within 12 years of the suit, shewed that the tenant was entered as a settled raiyat in the village :

Held—That it was open to the landlord to rely upon the entry in the record-of-rights as a tacit recognition of his right to have rent assessed, at any rate within 12 years of the date of final publication, and the suit therefore was not barred by limitation.

MAHARAJA BIRENDRA KISHORE MANIKYA
BAHADUR v. ROSAN (1) distinguished.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 8th of April 1910 against the judgment and decree of Mr. G. N. Roy, District Judge of Zillah Tipperah, dated the 28th of August 1909, modifying the decree of Babu Amulya Gopal Roy, Munsif at Comillah, dated the 1st of March 1909.

AMAN GAZI v. MAHARAJA BIRENDRA KISHORE MANIKYA BAHADUR.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Babu Sashadhar Roy for the Appellant.—The subject-matter in dispute is one of a large number of tanks in respect of which the Maharaja of Tipperah brought numerous suits for khas possession or in the alternative for assessment of rent. In the recently decided test case of Rajah Birendra Kishore Manikya Bahadur v. Akram Ali (2), it has been held that these grants of licenses for the excavation of tanks are not and cannot be revoked or disturbed so long as there is water in them. In the present case, therefore, the Plaintiff has no cause of action as the tank has not yet silted up. Besides, the claim is barred by limitation as the suit has been brought more than 12 years after the dispute before the Settlement Officer in the course of which the Defendant set up a rent-free right in respect of the disputed tank to the knowledge of the Plaintiff. It has been held that the period of limitation in such a case must run from the date of such dispute and not from the final publication of the record-of-rights. See Maharaja Birendra Kishore Manikya Bahadur v. Rosan (1).

The entry in the settlement record is no doubt in Plaintiff's favour, but it can not help him as the Settlement Officer had no jurisdiction, under the law as it then stood, to enquire into the validity or otherwise of rent-free rights. Secretary of State v. Nitye Singh (3).

Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty (with him Babus Gobinda Chandra De Roy and Romesh Chandra Sen) for the Respondent.—The Defendant has not proved any rent-free grant. The only fact proved is that rent has not been paid hitherto. The disputed lands are admittedly within the ambit of the Plaintiff's zemindari and are mal lands. The Defendant's assertion of a rent-free title before the Settlement Officer was negatived. It has been recorded that he is a "settled raiyat" (স্থিতিবান) of the village and that "rent has not yet been assessed" (এই চই দাগের খাজানা গাফি নাই). The entry recorded an existing tenancy and therefore the landlord had no ground for complaint. That entry has not been questioned by the Defendant and he must therefore be taken to have been holding the land as a tenant. No question of limitation can therefore arise. The Plaintiff's right to receive rent cannot be barred although his right to khas possession is. Limitation, if any, ran in this case against the tenant and ought to be counted from the final publication of the record-of-rights. The entries made by a Settlement Officer before the final publication of the record-of-rights are provisional entries only, liable to be varied at any time before the final publication. The case of Maharaja Birendra Kishore Manikya Bahadur v. Rosan (1) is distinguishable. The legal effect of an entry in the record-of-rights like the one here was not considered in that case. In the present case, the legal presumption arising from the settlement entry stands in landlord's favour and is unrebutted. The two judgments which were delivered in that case proceed upon different grounds. Mr. Justice Caspersz's judgment was based mainly on the ground that the tank was not assessable at all so long as there was water therein and his Lordship relied on the judgment in the case of Rajah Birendra Kishore Manikya Bahadur v. Akram Ali (2), but that case is clearly distinguishable. That was a case in which a title based upon a contract was set up. The Settlement Officer had jurisdiction to enquire into the validity or otherwise of a rent-free title set up before him. It is only as regards lakhiraj titles that he was not competent to do so. See the case of Secretary of State v. Nitye Singh (3) and the observations of Mr. Justice Ghose. The head-note of the report is somewhat misleading.

This is one of the numerous suits brought by the Maharajah of Tipperah in which he seeks for a declaration of his title to as zemindar and for khas possession of the lands in dispute or in the alternative for assessment of rent.

The District Judge in the Court below has considered the question of limitation and has held that the suit is not barred under the provisions of the Statute. The facts are that the Defendant on the 11th February 1895 set up a title before the Settlement Officer according to which he claimed to hold the lands in question rent-free. No actual decision by the Settlement Officer was brought to our notice : but the record-of-rights which was finally published on the 9th of July 1896 contains entries to the effect that the Defendant was a settled raiyat in the village and that no rent had been assessed in respect of the lands in question. If the time when the tenant first made his claim is considered as the starting point of the period of limitation the suit is barred.,

(2) 15 C. L. J. 194 : s. c. 16 C. W. N. 304 (1912).

but it is not barred if we count the period from the date of the publication of the record-of-rights. The lower Court has held that the latter date is the one from which limitation must be counted and we consider that this is right. The claim made by the tenant cannot be said to have been allowed by the Settlement Officer. It may perhaps not be said to have failed as the question it raised was allowed to be left open for future determination. But on looking into the facts of the case we cannot but consider that on the publication of the record-of-rights it was open to the Maharajah to rely upon the entries therein as a tacit recognition of his right to have rent assessed at any rate within twelve years of this date. We have been referred to a recent decision in the case of Maharaja Binendra Kishore Manikya v. Rosan.* As regards that case there does

This was an appeal preferred on the 2nd of August 1910 against the decree of Babu Asutosh Banerjee, Subordinate Judge, first Court of Tipperah, dated the 28th of April 1910, reversing the decree of Babu Sarat Chunder Bose, Munsif, fourth Court of Comillah, dated the 14th of June 1909.

Babu Gobinda Chandra Dey Roy for the Appellant.

No one appeared for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

CASPERSZ, J.—This is one of the numerous appeals involving the same question, the right claimed by the Plaintiff, the Maharaja of Hill Tipperah, to assess the niskar (rent-free) tanks not appear to have been any question raised as to the effect of any entries in the record-of-rights. We therefore do not consider ourselves bound by that decision.

It is argued before us that the Settlement Officer had no jurisdiction to deal with a claim to hold land free of rent. As to this it is enough to say that on the materials before us the entries in the record-of-rights as finally published were made by a competent authority.

The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

situated in his Chakla Roshanabad. We have heard the arguments in this appeal and in A. A. D. Nos. 1270, 1963, and 2515 of 1910, which may be regarded as test cases. The Plaintiff's suits have been dismissed in A. A. D. Nos. 1270 and 1963 of 1910 in which judgment† has just been delivered and this appeal, also, must fail. The Subordinate Judge has held the suit to be barred because it was brought more than twelve years after the Defendants' assertion of adverse title before the Settlement Officer on the 26th February 1896. In the opinions already expressed, the Plaintiff's suit is not maintainable because his right to assess rent on the niskar tanks has not accrued. In the present case (which corresponds with Suit No. 399 of 1908 of the first Court) no sanad chiti was produced or set up by the Defendants, their claim was to hold the tank rent-free, in virtue of their ancestral title. In so far as that claim is concerned it has been found to be hostile and it must be deemed hostile so long as the tank is used as such. The appeal is dismissed, but without costs, as the Respondents do not appear.

D. CHATTERJEE, J.—In this case the Defendants pleaded old ancestral rent-free title and also title by adverse possession. The Defendant No. 1 however stated in his deposition that his ancestor had got this lakhiraj on payment of gun which is translated as the capitalized value of probable rent. The Courts below have held that the payment of gun had not been made out but that the plea of the payment implies the land was at one time mal. That it was once the Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. XXXIII, r. 1—Withdrawal, application for—Pleader's authority—Vakalatnama—Plaintiff if may object to order as made on insufficient grounds.

A vakalatnama executed by the Plaintiffs which authorised their Pleader "to choose arbitrators, prefer objections to awards, file solenamah or rafanamah when necessary and do all necessary acts in connection with the suit that will be for our benefit" gave the pleader authority to make an application under Or. mal of the Plaintiff is not denied and if the payment of gun is not proved, the land is still mal unless any title by adverse possession or otherwise has arisen in favour of the Defendant. The finding is that the Defendant and his predecessors have been in possession without paying any rent for over 12 years: that by itself is not sufficient for basing a valid title in bar of the Plaintiff's suit as there is no finding as to who dug the tank and when and under whose order. There is however the settlement khatyan shewing that about the 26th February 1896, the Defendant No. 1 claimed the land as rent-free and the Plaintiff's agent denied the claim. There was thus a clear claim of niskar title unqualified by reference to any document and a clear denial of the same by the Plaintiff's agent. A complete hostile right was claimed to the knowledge of the Plaintiff and no suit was brought until more than 12 years after. I think that this suit, as framed, is clearly barred by limitation and has been rightly dismissed.

I agree, therefore, in dismissing the appeal without costs.

KAILASH CHANDRA KAR v. HARADHAN CHATTERJEA.

Quere : Whether it is open to the Plaintiff to take exception to an order permitting him to withdraw a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the ground that the grounds set out in the application for withdrawal were insufficient.

This was a Rule granted on the 22nd of July 1911 against an order of Babu M. M. Dutt, Subordinate Judge of Bankura, dated the 14th of June 1911.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghosh, Babus Dasarathi Sanyal and Debendra Nath Bhattacharya for the Petitioners.

Babus Hirendra Nath Ganguly and Suresh Chunder Mukerjee for the Opposite Party.

This application arises out of a suit that was brought by one Keshab Chandra Kar and his widowed sister-in-law Sasimukhi Dasya. They were represented by a pleader named Kuloda Prosad Mukerjee. On the 14th June 1911, an application was filed by this gentleman for permission to withdraw the suit with leave to sue again. The application was heard by the learned Subordinate Judge and was not opposed, the dispute before him being confined to the question of costs, and ultimately the petition was granted.

The Plaintiffs then obtained a Rule from this Court on the Opposite Party to show cause why this order should not be set aside and it was argued on their behalf that the order was bad, firstly, because Sasimukhi did not join in it, secondly, because Kuloda Prosad Mukerjee was not authorised by the vakalatnama to file such a petition, and, thirdly, on the ground that the reasons stated in the petition were not sufficient to justify its being granted.

We do not think that in the circumstances of the present case, we ought to exercise our revisional powers in setting aside the order. The vakalatnama authorised the pleader, "to choose arbitrators, prefer objections to awards, file solenamah or rajanamah when necessary and do all necessary acts in connection with the suit that will be for our benefit and the said acts will be deemed as done by ourselves." When such wide powers were specifically given to the pleader, we are inclined to think that the words "all necessary acts" should legitimately be construed as including an application under Or. XXIII, r. 1.

As to the contention that Sasimukhi did not consent to this application, it is stated in the affidavit that has been filed by the Opposite Party that on the 13th June 1911, Babu Kuloda Prosad wanted a day's time to enable him to obtain the consent of the Plaintiffs and that on the next day the said pleader intimated to the Court that he had obtained the necessary consent. The learned Subordinate Judge describes the petition as being filed by the Plaintiffs in the plural and clearly it was understood by all the parties at the time that this petition was on behalf of the Plaintiffs generally. We are not prepared to assume that Sasimukhi's consent was not obtained within the meaning of Or. XXIII, r. 1, sub-r. 4.

As to the contention that the grounds given for this application were not sufficient to justify it, we have been referred to one or two cases; but in our opinion they are wholly inapplicable. Those were cases in which the objections to the order were filed by the Defendants and not, as in this case, by the Plaintiffs. It is obvious that objections to an order of this kind which might be perfectly reasonable in the mouth of the Defendants are wholly out of place in the mouth of the parties who obtained the order. We think, therefore, that whether the order of the learned Subordinate Judge be strictly regular or not, it is not an order with which we should interfere in the exercise of our revisional jurisdiction.

The Rule will accordingly be discharged with costs. Two gold mohurs to Defendant No. 2.

The Petitioner had been convicted on the 19th January 1912 of two offences in two cases separately tried under sec. 217 of the Bengal Municipal Act and under Municipal Bye-law No. 50 respectively by Moulvi Syed Hamiduddin Ahmed, Deputy Magistrate with second class powers—the former conviction being subsequently altered on appeal by the Sessions Judge to one under sec. 273 of the Act—and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 30 and Rs. 5 respectively in the two cases. The Petitioner moved the High Court for setting aside the conviction and other reliefs upon the following allegations amongst others :—

That on the 16th October 1911, the Vice-Chairman of the Chapra Municipality, Babu Shama Charan Ghose, prosecuted the Petitioner under sec. 217 (5), Bengal Municipal Act, alleging that the Petitioner had made a long Chabutra (platform) in front of his house encroaching upon the public road ; that on the 25th October 1911, the said Vice-Chairman again prosecuted the Petitioner under sec. 51, Municipal Bye-law, alleging that the Petitioner had thrown earth on the public road ; that both the said cases were made over to Moulvi Syed Hamiduddin Ahmed, a Deputy Magistrate with second class powers, for trial ; that the Petitioner's defence inter alia was that the land in question belonged to him and that he had not built any Chabutra and that he had not in any way encroached on the public road, and he put in a written statement of his defence in the case; that on application of the Petitioner, the said Deputy Magistrate, on 10th January 1912, made a local enquiry in the presence of the Petitioner's nephew Abdur Rahim and Sub-Overseer Abdul Ghafoor and several other respectable persons.

The Petitioner further alleged facts purporting to show that there were subsequent negotiations between the Municipality and the Petitioner which led him to believe that the prosecutions would be withdrawn and that in consequence he was unable to adduce evidence or to make a proper defence, that on 19th January 1912 the learned Deputy Magistrate without giving the Petitioner notice of the fact that the Municipality had declined to withdraw the prosecution and without giving him an opportunity to properly make his defence delivered his judgment in both the cases and convicted and sentenced the Petitioner as stated above.

Against the said conviction and sentence the Petitioner preferred an appeal to the Sessions Judge of Sarun and put in in support thereof two affidavits stating the facts set forth above, but the learned Sessions Judge while altering the conviction from one under sec. 217 (5) to one under sec. 273, Bengal Municipal Act, dismissed the appeals; the Petitioner further contended that the Vice-Chairman who had ordered the prosecution of the Petitioner and who was practically the complainant in the cases was not examined either before or after the issue of process, and that as a matter of fact nobody was examined on oath before the issue of process against the Petitioner.

Under the above circumstances the Petitioner moved the High Court inter alia on the grounds that the learned Sessions Judge should have held that the proceedings taken against the Petitioner were without jurisdiction inasmuch as there was no legal complaint and the Magistrate who took cognisance of the case was not empowered to take cognisance under sec. 190, cl. (c), and that the prosecution of the Petitioner was illegal inasmuch as it was started without the consent or order of the Municipal Commissioners.

The High Court issued a Rule in each case to show cause why the convictions and sentences should not be set aside on the ground inter alia that the "sanctions and consents to criminal prosecution which are imposed by any Statute must be clearly proved by writing under the hand of the authority which has power to sanction or consent as a condition precedent to any prosecution."

The trying Magistrate in the course of his explanation submitted that the prosecution was not ultra vires and ab initio illegal as it was started by the Vice-Chairman to whom the Chairman had delegated the powers to prosecute or sanction prosecution under sec. 45 of the Municipal Act, and that sec. 200 (a), Cr. P. C., did not require a Magistrate to examine the complainant when the complaint was made in writing and it could not be urged that the application for prosecution filed by the Municipality was not a petition of complaint.

Mr. Hug, Babus Monmatha Nath Mukherjee, Chundra Sekhar Banerji and Moulvi Nuruddin Ahmed for the Petitioner.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

No. 746 of 1912.

We are of opinion that this Rule, must be made absolute on the first ground on which it was issued. It was not necessary for the learned Magistrate to put forward the plea that the powers of the Chairman had been delegated to the Vice-Chairman because that was not the point on which the Rule was issued. But if he did put forward such a plea he should have stated having regard to the ruling in Khiroda Proshad v. The Chairman of the Howrah Municipality (1) that this delegation had been lawfully made in writing; possibly as the first ground of the Rule had to do with the sanction in writing he may have meant that this delegation was made according to law. However the Rule did not call upon him to show cause on that ground.

The point in this case is that supposing the Vice-Chairman to have authority, we have no reason to suppose he has not, he must sanction the prosecution in writing; and there is no such sanction on the record. The only evidence of sanction of prosecution by a public authority is a writing under the seal and signature of of that authority. We are wholly unaware of any procedure by which the complainant can come before a Magistrate and say, I have got the sanction of the public authority for this prosecution and not be required to produce any writing showing that such sanction has been given. Here there is a tabular form which is called the "Form of prosecution." There is the name, whether of the accused or the complainant is not shown; the second head "Prosecute," presumably the charge which is laid against the man; "the cause"; "names of the witnesses"; "the date"; and "column of remarks"; the "Chairman or Vice-Chairman"; and in this column of remarks are the words, "I have seen myself," signed Shama Charan Ghosh. Who Shama Charan Ghosh is we do not know and we do not wish to enquire. But this certainly is not authority written or otherwise showing the consent of the Commissioners or the Vice-Chairman on their behalf to a prosecution.

On this ground the order of the lower Court must be discharged. The fine if paid must be refunded.

In Rule No. 747 the order of Shama Charan Ghose is different. Instead of saying "I have seen myself" he says, "prosecute." This does not seem to meet the law any more than the other. The authority which he has is to convey the sanction of the Commissioners and not to pass any order of any kind, and he must convey that sanction under his own seal and signature to the Magistrate.

This Rule will also be made absolute on the same ground. The fines if paid will be refunded.

Rules made absolute.

REPORTS (See Index.)

THE FOURTH CRIMINAL SESSIONS WILL COMMENCE from date, Mr. Justice Richardson presiding.

THE CONTROVERSY THAT IS NOW BEING CARRIED on in the public press over the relative merits of the Original Side of the High Court and the phantom of a City Court is giving occupation to some on whom time is hanging heavily and causing amusement to others who are on the look out for some sort of diversion in this silly season. It would be cruel to disillusionise those who have been seeing visions behind which, we are sorry to say, there is no substance. The Original Jurisdiction of the High Court rests on such solid and well-consolidated foundations that it is not likely to be shaken in the slightest by even what its stoutest critics consider to be their strongest argument. We have read with much amusement the figures which have been fished out of the Howrah Munsifs' Courts and flung at the High Court with a view to demolish its Original Jurisdiction. Before seriously considering them we must say, that we can well understand how people who have lost all sense of proportion over the controversy would rashly resort to such glaringly fallacious arguments but we are at a loss to find how reasonable people with any sense of humour can really be misled by them.

NEED WE TELL THOSE WHO HAVE TAKEN TO comparing the Howrah Munsif's Court with the Original Side of the High Court that the fundamental fallacy of such comparison lies in the fact that the jurisdiction of the two Courts furnishes no basis of comparison? It is only petty suits that are tried before Munsif's Courts. The maximum jurisdiction of such Courts is ordinarily limited to Rs. 1,000 and the bulk of the suits tried there are below Rs. 100 in value. It would not even be fair to compare such Courts with the Presidency Small Cause Court which has a jurisdiction extending to Rs. 2,000. So nothing can be more absurd than to argue that because only 1,200 suits were instituted on the Original Side during a year in the place of 2,000 in the three Munsifs' Courts at Howrah it is conclusive that people fight shy of the Original Side.

THE IMMENSE POPULARITY OF THE ORIGINAL Side, judged from this point of view, would be at once apparent to those who would care to look at judicial statistics with some amount of care, patience and intelligence. For purposes of comparison we shall take the latest judicial figures from Eastern Bengal and Assam with a population of over 33 millions and compare them with the figures of the Original Side. It is a matter of common knowledge that it is only Courts of Subordinate Judges in the mofussil who enjoy a jurisdiction which would in money value bear some comparison with that of the Original Side of the High Court. We find that in 1911 all the Subordinate Judges of Eastern Bengal and Assam taken together disposed of 11,090 original suits. Of these 9,356 suits were under the Small Cause Court procedure and only 1,734 suits were disposed of under ordinary procedure. Suits of a Small Cause Court nature in the mofussil cannot be of any higher value than Rs. 1,000 and most of them are of the value of Rs. 500 or less.

THUS IT IS EVIDENT THAT OF THE 1,734 ORIGINAL suits that were disposed of in the whole of Eastern Bengal and Assam during 1911 a great many must have been of the value varying between Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 2,000. The exact number of suits of these values are not given in the Report of the Administration of Civil Justice for 1911. But it may be stated as a general proposition that suits of a lower value are always far in excess of those of a higher value. It may therefore be presumed that by far the largest number of these 1,734 suits in the whole of Eastern Bengal and Assam were of value varying between Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 2,000. Now, against this there were on the Original Side alone 1,200 suits of the value of over Rs. 2,000 and generally much more and these were disposed of by only two or three judges. It is a well-known fact, which is borne out by the figures, that in point of efficiency and expeditious work, hardly any Court of Original Jurisdiction in India can show a better record compared to the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court for the same class of work. People who have substantial claims to recover always prefer this Court to a mofussil Court and for that reason in contracts and deeds provisions are often made for entitling them to sue on the Original Side of the High Court.

WE HAVE SAID BEFORE, THAT BESIDES JUDICIAL efficiency and expedition, the citizens of Calcutta enjoy on the Original Side the unique privilege of being exempt from the payment of ad valorem Court-fees on the value of suits. The energy of those who are interesting themselves in judicial reform will be better directed if instead of seeking to deprive them of this privilege they would move for relieving the people in the mofussil from the heavy burden imposed on them when they have the misfortune of resorting to Courts of Justice for relief. We find from the Report of the Administration of Civil Justice in Eastern Bengal and Assam for 1911 that in that year alone the Government made a nett profit out of civil litigation of more than 45½ lakhs of rupees. The gross revenue derived from litigation in that province during 1911 amounted to more than 70½ lakhs. Of this the Government spent only a little over 23½ lakhs in defraying all expenses connected with law Courts. Compared with the previous year the Government increased its profits by nearly 3 lakhs and still curtailed expenditure by Rs. 1,401.

IT HAS BEEN A COMPLAINT OF LONG STANDING that the Government is very loth to spend anything to make the life of Munsifs and ministerial officers a little more comfortable. It is a principle recognised by all civilized governments that the State ought not to make any profit out of the law Courts. We have often urged in these columns before that a part of this enormous surplus should be spent in improving the pay and prospects of Munsifs and ministerial officers and even after so doing a very substantial balance would be left which should be appropriated in reducing the ad valorem stamp duty. The scale on which such duty is charged in India is much higher than it is in any European country except England. England is the richest country in the world and India is the poorest. The English scale is therefore obviously unsuited for India. The public have therefore a very good case for moving the Government for affording the poor litigants in the mofussil a very just relief in this respect. We insert below an extract from the Report above referred to, which would speak for itself.

Receipts and Charges.—The receipts of the civil courts in Eastern Bengal and Assam for the year under review amounted to Rs. 70,36,326, an increase of 2,99,071 on those of the previous year, and the charges to Rs. 23,63,487, a decrease of Rs. 1,401 on those of 1910. Including the amount of Rs. 1,16,091 realised on account of duty on probates, etc., there was a profit to the Government from civil litigation of Rs. 46,72,839, or more by Rs. 3,00,472 than the profit of 1910; and exclusive of the item referred to the surplus amounted to Rs. 45,56,748.

FROM THE FOLLOWING BALANCE SHEET THE DISPENSATION of justice in Eastern Bengal, looked at from a business point of view, would appear to be one of the most profitable concerns on the face of the earth. The Government of India not only take from litigants more than double the amount that they actually require for maintaining the law Courts but they also levy by way of process fees nearly 17½ lakhs of rupees. Further, in supplying copies of records they realise from litigants nearly a lakh more than it costs them to get the copies made. If they paid the poor clerks and apprentices on a more liberal scale, the public would not, perhaps, object much on this last count. But in any view of the matter the public have an obvious right to be relieved of the inequitable taxation on law suits which leaves a surplus of nearly half a crore over actual expenditure.

IN THE CASE OF Moosa Goolam Arif v. Ebra him Goolam Arif, which we report in this issue at p. 937, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council have very properly held that when a limited liability Company has been registered and a certificate has been given by the Registrar of such registration the certificate of incorporation is conclusive of all previous requisites having been complied with and that it is not competent for the law Courts to go behind such certificate and enquire into the regularity of the prior proceedings or of due registration. In this matter

Lord Macnaghten followed the decisions of some eminent English Judges, which have also been confirmed by recent legislation relating to limited liability Companies in England. We are glad to note that the Company Law which is being amended in this country, in cl. 23, brings the law in this respect in line with the English law. The reason why Courts should not go behind such certificates of registration is obvious. The object of registration is notoriety. When a Company has once come to be known as a limited liability Company in consequence of its registration as such, it would be preposterous to expect the public to go behind the fact of registration and satisfy themselves if it has been properly registered before they have anything to do with it; or if any defect in its registration is subsequently discovered to make the interests of the public suffer in consequence.

THE SAME MAY BE SAID WITH REGARD TO the registration of deeds and assurances. When a deed of sale or mortgage or a lease or other conveyance or document bears the Registrar's or Sub Registrar's certificate of its having being duly registered in the above view, it would not be competent for the law Courts to go behind the certificate and to question "the regularity of the prior proceedings as to its due registration." It is not uncommon to find the law Courts in this country, at the instance of a party challenging the due registration of document in the course of suits based upon such documents, engaging themselves in an enquiry into the side issue as to the regularity of the registration proceedings. As we have said before, to do so is to deprive the public of the security that the law of registration purports to afford them. When a deed or document appears on the face of it to be duly registered it is no more the duty of a private person than of a Court to go behind it and question the regularity of any prior proceedings. The certificate of registration ought to be treated as final and conclusive on the question. The fact that the expression "in accordance with the provisions of this Act" which occurred in the Registration Acts of 1877, 1871 and the previous Acts has now been omitted by the Legislature in the Act of 1908, after the word "registration" and, further that sec. 60 of the Act expressly provides that the certificate of registration is enough to prove that a document has been duly registered, both go to show that the certificate must be treated as conclusive and final on all questions of due registration.

CURRENT CRIMINAL CASES.

January to June 1912.

I.—CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE.

Sec. 4, cl. (i)—European British subject.

(Held by the Punjab Chief Court.)

The mere fact that the accused the son of an Indian subject of His Majesty was born at Constantinople does not make him an European British subject when it is not proved that the accused or his father or grandfather was domiciled in the United Kingdom or in any of the European, American or Australian Colonies or possessions of His Majesty.

ALEXANDER RUFFE, 14 Indian Cases 197.

Sec. 35—Aggregate sentence—Appeal.

Under cl. 3 of sec. 35 for the purpose of appeal the aggregate sentence of one month under each of two sections is to be taken to be a single sentence of two months though the sentences may be ordered to run concurrently.

BEPIN BEHARY DE, 15 C. L. J. 82.

Sec. 100—Search warrant—Printed form.

A search warrant under sec. 100 drawn up in the absence of a printed form thereunder on a printed form used under sec. 98 with the necessary alterations is not illegal.

Sec. 107—Land dispute—Magistrate's jurisdiction.

The fact that there is a dispute concerning land likely to cause a breach of the peace does not deprive a Magistrate of jurisdiction under sec. 107. The competence of the Magistrate to proceed under sec. 107 against persons not in possession must depend upon whether as against those persons the conditions specified in the section have been established.

EMPEROR v. ABBAS, (F. B.) I. L. R. 39 Cal. 150; S. C. 16 C. W. N. 83; S. C. 14 C. L. J. 429.

Order on vague apprehension.

Where there is no evidence of a breach of the peace or disturbance of the public tranquility an order under sec. 107 cannot be passed merely on a vague apprehension. The Magistrate should use his power to protect persons seeking to exercise their rights allowed by law and to restrain persons threatening to disturb the exercise of such rights.

GURUSAWMI NADAN, 1 Mad. W. N. 1912, p. 47.

Order against person likely to induce another to break the peace.

(Held by the Punjab Chief Court.)

Security for keeping the peace under the section should not be taken from a person who is not likely to commit a breach of the peace himself but is likely to induce another person to do so.

DEWAT SING, 13 Indian Cases 782.

Sec. 109—Concealment not with intent to commit offence.

The concealment referred to in cl. (a) of the section must be with a view to commit some offence. A person cannot be called on to furnish security under the section in respect of an alleged temporary concealment in his father's house unconnected with any intent to commit an offence nor for any previous concealment outside the Magistrate's jurisdiction.

Sec. 133—Common Nuisance.

(Held by the Allahabad High Court.)

A common nuisance cannot be excused on the ground that it causes some convenience or advantage to the person guilty of it.

BHASORA PATAK, 13 Indian Cases 999.

Sec. 145—Order under the section after binding down one party to keep the peace.

The Magistrate has jurisdiction to take proceedings under sec. 145 after an order under sec. 107 binding down one of the parties to keep the peace where the circumstances so require.

BAISNAB CHANDRA MANJHI, I. L. R. 39 Cal. 469 : s. c. 16 C. W. N. 384.

Offerings to a deity, dispute about—Not within section.

A dispute regarding offerings to a deity is a dispute regarding moveable property and does not come within sec. 145 or 147, Cr. P. C.

RAM SARAN PATIYAK, I. L. R. 38 Cal. 387 : s. c. 16 C. W. N. 574 : s. c. 13 C. L. J. 445.

Landlords claiming on each side through tenants.

An order passed in favour of one set of tenants as against other persons setting up their tenancy is a good and valid order. When one set of landlords claims exclusive possession of land through their tenants and a similar rival claim is set up by a different set of landlords through their tenants the dispute is one which comes properly within sec. 145.

SRISH CHANDRA BOSE, 15 C. L. J. 184.

Sec. 147—Section not confined to easements.

The section is by its very wording not confined to mere easements. The erection of a bund on the boundary of the village belonging to another party is an infringement of the natural right of the neighbouring landholder and this is therefore a fit case for the exercise of jurisdiction under sec. 147.

DAWLAT KOER, 15 C. L. J. 267 : s. c. 16 C. W. N.

Local inspection.

The rule that in criminal cases a Court is only justified in holding a local inspection in order to explain the facts appearing in the evidence does not apply to a case under sec. 147, Cr. P. C. ; special provision is made in the Code for local investigation in these cases and in a case where levels and the fall of water are concerned a local inspection is eminently necessary.

DAWLAT KOER, 15 C. L. J. 267 : s. c. 16 C. W. N.

Directions on police to execute order.

A Magistrate has jurisdiction to direct the police to assist a party in removing an obstruction under an order made under sec. 147, Cr. P. C.

DAWLAT KOER, 15 C. L. J. 267 : s. c. 16 C. W. N.

Sec. 148—Local inspection by trying Magistrate himself.

Although the section empowers a Court to depute some other person to make investigation under the section and although as a rule it is better to have such an investigation made by some other person there is nothing in law to prevent the presiding Magistrate from making the investigation himself provided he records what he saw and does not act upon hearsay evidence.

DAWLAT KOER, 15 C. L. J. 267 : s. c. 16 C. W. N.

Order for costs.

An order for costs must be made by the same Magistrate ; it must be made within a reasonable time and it must be made after due notice to the party against whom it is to be made but there is no law that the particular moment at which it is to be made is when the Court is giving its decision and that does not appear to be capable of being read into the section itself.

DAWLAT KOER, 15 C. L. J. 267 : s. c. 16 C. W. N.

Sec. 195—Order by successor in office.

A sanction granted by the successor of the Magistrate before whom a forged document was used is good in law.

RATI JHA, I. L. R. 39 Cal. 463 : s. c. 16 C. W. N. 623 : s. c. 15 C. L. J. 509.

Sanction to agent.

Sanction granted to the agent of the landlord whose seal was forged is valid though neither was a party to the criminal case in which the forged document was used.

RATI JHA, I. L. R. 39 Cal. 463 : s. c. 16 C. W. N. 623 : s. c. 15 C. L. J. 509.

Subordinate Judge not the ordinary Appellate Court of Munsif.

A Subordinate Judge cannot grant or revoke a sanction to prosecute refused or granted by a Munsif as he is not the Court to which appeals from the decision of the Munsif ordinarily lie [Vide Civil Courts Act XII of 1887, sec. 21, cl. (2)].

RAM CHARAN CHANDRA, 16 C. W. N. 645.

Offence under sec. 468, I. P. C., comes within the section.

An offence under sec. 463, I. P. C., mentioned in cl. (c) of sec. 195 covers an offence under sec. 468, I. P. C., the object of mentioning sec. 463 in the section being to include all cases of forgery, whatever the nature of the fraudulent intention may be.

ASSISTANT SESSIONS JUDGE OF NORTH ARCOT v. RAMANIAMMAL AND OTHERS, 22 MAD. L. J. 141 : s. c. 1 MAD. W. N. 1912, p. 3.

Order refusing to revoke sanction.

An order refusing to revoke a sanction is one "granting a sanction" and it is open to a party dissatisfied with the order to apply to a superior Court under cl. 6 of sec. 195.

BAPU alias ANDIMULAM PILLAI, 22 Mad. L. J. 419 : (F. B.) s. c. 1 Mad. W. N. 1912, p. 499.

Sanction not based on legal evidence.

A sanction in cases falling under cls. (b) and (c) of sec. 195 not based on legal evidence is illegal. Per Sundara Ayar, J., in BAPU (ante).

Complaint by person other than holder of sanction.

(Held by the Madras High Court.)

It is open to a Court to entertain a complaint on a sanction granted to a party other than the complainant under sec. 195, Cr. P. C., and it does not matter whether the sanction is accorded to a particular person or is concluded in general terms.

In re MALLIPADDI GAPAYA, 14 Indian Cases, 206.

Jurisdiction of High Court—sec. 429 or 439 does not apply when Judges differ.

The power conferred upon the High Court by sec. 195, cl. 6, is not a part of the Appellate and Revisional Jurisdiction of the High Court. It is a special power conferred by sec. 195 and when the Judges of the Division Bench hearing a case under cl. 6, sec. 195, are equally divided in opinion the case is governed by sec. 36 of the Letters Patent and not by sec. 429 or 439 Cr. P. C.

BAPU alias ANDIMULAM PILLAI, F. B. (ante).

Sec. 200—Omission to examine complainant.

An omission by a Presidency Magistrate to examine the complainant before dismissing a complaint under sec. 203, Cr. P. C., is at the most an irregularity within the meaning of sec. 537, Cr. P. C., even assuming that a Magistrate should do so.

In re v. VELU NATHAN, 22 Mad. L. J. 155.

Secs. 202, 203—After sec. 200 is followed Magistrate should at once proceed under sec. 202 or 203.

After the examination of the complainant the Magistrate should dismiss the complaint at once or proceed to hold enquiry under sec. 202 before issuing process.

Where the Magistrate examined the complainant on the 28th April and without dismissing the complaint then and there adjourned the case to the 26th May and then on that date after making certain enquiries from the solicitor of the accused and looking into some papers which had been filed by the defence before the police, dismissed the complaint, it was held, that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was irregular and that having virtually elected to hold an enquiry under sec. 202, Cr. P. C., he should not have dismissed the complaint without giving an opportunity to the complainant to adduce evidence in support of his case.

H. P. SANDYAL, 16 C. W. N. 143.

Sec. 222—Vague charge.

If a charge of dacoity does not set out or indicate which particular dacoity the accused is tried for the conviction on such a charge must be set aside.

MANDI GHASSI, 1 Mad W. N. 1912, p. 49.

Secs. 226, 227—Amendment of charge by Sessions Court before hearing evidence.

Where the accused were committed to the Court of Sessions on a charge of dacoity and the Sessions Judge without assigning any reason at the commencement of the trial amended the charge to one of robbery, it was held that it was improper for the Sessions Judge to thus alter the character of the charge before hearing evidence.

PAIMULLA, 16 C. W. N. 238.

Sec. 234—Misappropriation of an amount made up of more than three items.

Where a person receives money for the express purpose of using it for his master's benefit in a particular way his appropriation of it to himself amounts to criminal breach of trust and a conviction for criminal breach of trust committed by misappropriation of a large sum of money made up of various items (more than three in number) is not illegal.

In re THEOPHILUS RAMAPPA, 22 Mad. L. J. 112.

Sec. 239—Where the section does not apply.

Where in a case more than one person were jointly charged with the offence of criminal breach of trust under sec. 408, I. P. C., with respect to a sum of money, it was held that there was a misjoinder of charges. The wording of sec. 222 refers to a single accused and it must be so because it is impossible to hold that two persons can be guilty of misappropriation of the same parcel of money and sec. 239 therefore has no application to such a case.

Sec. 423—Retrial when proper.

In order to justify an order for retrial it is necessary that the Appellate Court should come to the conclusion that the trial was not held properly for some reason or other.

Per Phillips and Benson, J.J., JEREMIAH v. VAS, 22 Mad. L. J. 73.

The power to direct a retrial is not confined to cases where the trial was held by a Court having no jurisdiction. A retrial may be ordered where the trial is held to be illegal on the ground of misjoinder of charges; where evidence is improperly rejected by the lower Court or where though the accused was rightly acquitted of an offence the Appellate Court comes to the conclusion that he ought to have been tried for another offence and in every case of irregularity in the trial such as where persons who ought not to have been tried together have been so tried.

Sec. 428—When further evidence may be taken.

Sec. 428 merely says that evidence may be taken when 'necessary' and in each case the necessity must be determined on the particular facts of the case. Where the Court itself was mistaken as to the sufficiency of the evidence on record and framed a charge in the opinion that a prima facie case of publication was made out it is a proper case to direct additional evidence being taken. It is not enough that the prosecution by its own negligence failed to produce evidence which it was the duty of the prosecution to do.

Per Phillips and Benson, JJ. JEREMIAH v. VAS, 22 Mad. L. J. 73.

The language of sec. 428 seems to indicate cases where there being already evidence on the record the Court considers it to be unsatisfactory or where the evidence on the record leaves the Court in such a state of doubt that it considers necessary to enable it to decide the case to have further evidence. It does not appear to be applicable where the prosecution had ample opportunities to produce evidence and had failed to do so.

Sec. 437—Meaning of "further enquiry."

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 122—Fitness of surety.

The Petitioners were bound down by the Deputy Magistrate of Chapra under sec. 110, Criminal Procedure Code, and were ordered to execute a bond for Rs. 100 each with two sureties of the same amount to be of good behaviour for one year. The Petitioners offered two sureties but the Magistrate on the strength of a police-report in which it was stated that the sureties were related to the accused and were of suspicious character passed the following order: "The sureties being unfit I cannot accept them. The accused must give better sureties."

Their Lordships observed: "The Magistrate has rejected the sureties solely on the strength of the police-report that they are related to the Petitioners and are of suspicious character. This is not a sufficient basis for rejection of sureties. We direct that the sureties may be accepted."

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before CARNUFF and IMAM, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 866 OF 1912. BROJENDRO KISHORE ROY CHWDHURY AND TWO OTHERS, Petitioners v. THE EMPEROR. 7th August 1912.

Indian Penal Code, secs. 154, 155—Unpremeditated riot, not directly for the benefit of the landlord.

The Petitioner, Brojendro Kishore, is the proprietor of a fishery known as Ghale Doles khal within the sub-division of Habiganj in the district of Sylhet. On account of a fresh settlement of this jalkar with a different set of people the former ijaradars as also the villagers became offended and in February 1902 when the people of the new ijaradars went to the khal for fishing, the villagers turned out in a body to oppose them but the ijaradars on being informed of this came to the spot and in order to avert a riot withdrew their men. Subsequently an altercation took place between two sets of people none of whom were the tenants of the Petitioner, Brojendro Kishore, with the result that a riot took place in which a man was killed. The accused in the rioting case were convicted by the Sessions Judge of Sylhet who in his judgment, dated the 6th June 1902, found that the riot was sudden and unpremeditated.

On the 12th May 1912 the police submitted a report to the Magistrate praying for proceedings under secs. 155, I. P. C., against the Petitioner, Brojendro Kishore. Thereupon the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Habiganj by his order, dated 18th May 1912, summoned all the Petitioners under secs. 154, 155, I. P. C.

The Petitioners moved the High Court and obtained a rule calling upon the Deputy Commissioner of Sylhet to show cause why the proceedings under secs. 154, 155, I. P. C., should not be quashed on the grounds, firstly, that the riot was sudden and unpremeditated as found by the Sessions Judge, secondly, that the zemindar is resident in Calcutta and takes no active interest in the management of the estate in Sylhet, and, thirdly, that it is not for his benefit or in his behalf that the two sets of tenants quarrelled about the khal.

The Additional District Magistrate of Sylhet submitted an explanation in which it was stated that although the riot might have been sudden and unpremeditated as found by the Sessions Judge yet the bad feeling which culminated in a riot with loss of life was due to the zemindar's men leasing out the khal for fishing against the wishes of the villagers, that although the riot was not directly committed for the benefit of the zemindar yet the zemindar's men could have prevented the riot by refraining from settling with outsiders the khal which the villagers used for drinking purposes and that the fact of the zemindar being resident in Calcutta and taking no active interest in the management of the estate in Sylhet was no bar to a prosecution or conviction under secs. 154, 155, I. P. C. (I. L. R. 28 Cal. 504).

Their Lordships in making the Rule absolute observed—It is clear that the riot was sudden and unpremeditated as found by the learned Sessions Judge who tried the case and the riot cannot be said to have been committed directly for the benefit of the zemindar. It was impossible to hold the Petitioners responsible for what occurred.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before D. CHATTERJEE and RICHARDSON, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2024 OF 1910. BEHARI LAL ROY CHOWDHURY, Plaintiff, Appellant v. HARA KUMAR DUTT AND OTHERS, Respondents. 29th July 1912.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Arts. 89, 116, 132—Account, suit for—Kabuliyat hypothecating immoveable property—Agent, dismissal of—Reinstatement.

The appeal arose out of a suit for accounts for a certain period against an agent. Both the Courts below dismissed the suit as barred by limitation, evidently under Art. 89 of the Sch. II of the Indian Limitation Act.

The appointment of Defendant No. 1 ceased in 1306 and he was re-appointed in 1307 after his dismissal in 1306. The kabuliyat of 1305 of the agent hypothecated certain immoveable property which would be answerable for any defalcation made by him or any damages suffered by the principal through his negligence. The defalcation and default were made in 1307 and 1308, that is after the Defendant No 1 had been dismissed in 1306 and re-appointed in 1307.

Held, that the position of the agent in 1307 was not governed by the kabuliyat of 1305 but by the ordinary rules applicable between the principal and the agent. Art. 89, Sch. II of the Indian Limitation Act was the article applicable in the case.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before SHARFUDDIN AND COX, JJ. SECOND APPEALS NOS. 1836, 2145 AND 2145 OF 1907. RAJANI KANT MUKERJI AND OTHERS, Appellants v. RAM DULAL AND OTHERS, Respondents. Heard, 24th and 25th July. Judgment, 2nd August: 1912.

Possession, suit for—Abatement—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), sec. 368—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 22, r. 4—Tenant seeking to recover his holding—Regulations VII of 1822 and IX of 1825—Award—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 46.

The lands in suit were situated in Char Khandar. The mahal was let in farm from 1287 to 1298. It was again let in farm for 1299 and again for 1300. From 1301 to 1305 it was kept in the direct possession of Government and it was again let in farm in 1306. The farmers in 1295 settled a holding known as No. 63 with the Plaintiffs. It was alleged by the Plaintiffs that in the settlement proceedings of 1301 a portion of the lands covered by No. 63 was excluded from that holding. They complained to the settlement officer who wholly or almost wholly rejected their claim. The order ran thus. "The lands recorded by amins as comprised in jote 63, consist of the hasil lands in their possession, and above 500 bighas of Laikabad; the remainder being Malang. These lands, I consider sufficient, and I order that in the names of the five men in para. 2" (i.e., the present Plaintiffs) "be recorded all those lands. I also hereby reject their claims to any other land." The bulk of the lands for which the Plaintiffs' claims were rejected was claimed as accretion. The Plaintiffs' present claim was that the lands which they unsuccessfully claimed were part of their holding and were wrongly included in the Defendants' holding.

They served Government with notice of a suit under sec. 424 of the Old Civil Procedure Code and Government finding that the order for the inclusion of the land in the Defendants' holding was wrong cancelled it in 1311. The Defendants however dispossessed the Plaintiffs and hence this suit: It was found that the Defendants had been in possession from 1301.

The Munsif decreed the suit. The appeal to the District Judge against the decree of the Munsif was allowed. The District Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the settlement with the Defendant was valid and consequently could not be extinguished by the Plaintiffs. The Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Certain of the Respondents died in each of these appeals. The appeals were analogous and were heard together by consent, except in the case of Appeal No. 2148. All those deaths occurred after the passing of the Code of 1908. In No. 2148, the Respondent died in April 1908.

Held, that under Order 22, Rule 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure the appeals abated as against the deceased Respondent.

That under sec. 368 of the Old Code of Civil Procedure the whole Appeal (No. 2148) abated.

The principle laid down in the case of Binod Lal Pakrasi v. Kalu Pramanik (I. L. R. 20 Cal. 709) could never have been intended to be applied to a tenant seeking to recover his own holding.

It was not intended by Regulation VII of 1822 which was made applicable to khas mahal by Regulation IX of 1825 that the Collector should decide disputes as to title between raiyats, in which the zemindar or Sudder Malguzars had no interest and which could in no way affect the assessment.

Sec. 9 of Regulation VII of 1822 does not apply to a case in which rival tenants claim, not only a tenancy of the same nature, but the same land under the same nature of tenancy.

Kanto Prosad v. Asad Ali (5 C. L. R. 453) and Abdul Kadir v. Hamdu Miah (12 C. W. N. 910) distinguished.

v.

1912,

 Judgment, 26, June. | Respondents.

Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882), secs. 6, 41—Certificate of incorporation, if may be questioned on the ground that Registrar of companies ought not to have granted certificate—Civil Procedure Code (Act IV of 1882), sec. 13, Expl. II—Res judicata.

The certificate of incorporation of a Company is conclusive that all previous requisitions had been complied with and precludes any enquiry as to regularity of the prior proceedings.

Once the certificate is given, the validity of the incorporation of the Company cannot be questioned on the ground that the conditions of registration prescribed by the Companies' Act were not duly complied with, e. g., that there were not seven subscribers to the memorandum of association.

PEEL'S CASE (1), OAKES v. TURQUAND (2) followed.

In re NATIONAL DEBENTURE AND ASSETS CORPORATION (3) referred to.

H. conveyed certain shares of his property to his two wives and five minor children, having previously procured the appointment of P. as the guardian of his minor children in order that the children by their guardian might accept the benefits which he intended to confer upon them. Subsequently he procured the registration of a limited Company to which in return for shares were transferred so much of the property as was retained by H. and the undivided shares thereof which had been conveyed to his wives and his minor children. His adult son and executor E., in 1902, commenced a suit for a declaration that the conveyances by H. to his wives and minor children and the deed of transfer in favour of the Company were invalid. The validity of the conveyances was established in that suit, but the validity of the incorporation of the Company was not expressly determined.

In a subsequent suit by the same Plaintiff for a declaration that the Company had not been duly incorporated and that the property conveyed to the Company should be transferred to the persons entitled to the same, it appeared that all the facts on which the later suit was based were known to the Plaintiff and were stated at length in the proceedings in the previous suit and no further evidence would have been needed and nothing was wanting but the addition of an issue on the point :

Held—That the point ought to have been raised in that suit, and the present suit was therefore barred by sec. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882.

KAMESWAR PERSHAD v. RAJKUMARI RUTTUN KOER (4) followed.

This was an Appeal by the Defendants from a judgment and decree, dated August 1st, 1910, of the Chief Court of Lower Burma on its Appellate Side, reversing a judgment and decree of the same Court on its Original Side, dated January 5th, 1909, in favour of the present Appellants.

The questions in the Appeal arose out of the formation of the Appellant Company by one Goolam Ariff deceased, and mainly concerned the validity of the signatures to the memorandum of association and the legal effect of the issue of the certificate of incorporation of the said Limited Company by the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies under the Indian Companies Act, as well as the right of the Plaintiffs to the original suit (the Respondents) to institute the proceedings which have led to this Appeal.

Early in 1902 one Hadjee Goolam Ariff, a wealthy Mahomedan merchant of Rangoon, who was then about 65 years of age was desirous of making such a disposition of his property during his lifetime as would afford provision for his two junior wives and five infant children and so that his two eldest sons, on whom he said he had spent much money and who had proved ungrateful, should have no control over the minors' shares or the bulk of his property. He was also desirous of preventing a distribution of his property, which he wished to have kept as a whole.

He preferred 5 several petitions, one in respect of each infant child, before the Court of Lower Burma in March 1902, praying in each case that one Hashim Cassim Patail might be appointed guardian of the property of the infant during his or her minority and Hashim Cassim Patail was appointed guardian of the infants' property.

On April 2nd, 1902, Goolam Ariff executed seven conveyances to his two junior wives and five infant children of certain undivided shares in 18 parcels of land in Rangoon and shares in six trading companies of limited liability which for the purposes of the conveyances he had divided into 2000 parts. Of these he conveyed 850 in all to his said wives and children, retaining 1150 parts for himself. On April 11th, 1902, the memorandum and articles of association of the Goolam Ariff Estate Company were signed by Goolam Ariff himself, by one of his said two wives, and by each of the five minor children by their guardian the aforesaid Patail. The said memorandum and articles so signed were duly registered the next day, i.e., April 12th, 1902 and the certificate of incorporation, dated April 12th, 1902, was issued by the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies pursuant to the Indian Companies Act (No. VI of 1882). Between April 22nd and May 3rd, 1902, the whole of the said property originally conveyed to the wives and children as well as the portion retained by Goolam Ariff himself were transferred to the said Company in return for shares in the latter, the number of shares assigned to each of the members being the same as the number of notional 2000ths conveyed or held by the members under the distribution of April 2nd above-mentioned. In particular by a deed made the 3rd May 1902 between Goolam Ariff and his two wives and five minor children of the one part and the Company of the other part Goolam Ariff and his wives and children (the latter by their said guardian) conveyed all their respective shares in the lands, tenements and hereditaments mentioned in the schedule thereto (which consisted of the said 18 parcels of land in Rangoon) unto and to the use of the Company.

On April 19th, 1902, Goolam Ariff executed his last Will and testament and as executors thereof he made his three brothers, his eldest son Ebrahim Goolam Ariff one of the Respondents, and Hashim Cassim Patail the guardian of his infant children aforesaid. On May 16th he died, and probate of his Will was granted to his eldest son Ebrahim Goolam Ariff on June 23rd, 1902, and to Hashim Cassim Patail on July 15th, 1902. The other executors named in the said Will did not prove.

MOOSA GOOLAM ARIFF v. EBRAHIM GOOLAM ARIFF.

On July 16th, 1902, Ebrahim Goolam Ariff commenced a suit for a declaration that the conveyances, including the said deed of the 3rd May 1902, were void and might be ordered to be delivered up to be cancelled on a variety of grounds based chiefly on principles of Mahomedan law, and also, as regards the deed of 3rd May 1902, that it was invalid as being made without consideration and not in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Companies Act. In both Courts in Burma this suit was dismissed. In the Burma Appellate Court the validity of the signatures to the said memorandum of association was discussed and one of the Respondent's grounds of Appeal to His Majesty in Council was that the Court below should have held that the circumstance that out of the 7 persons who purported to constitute themselves into the Goolam Ariff Estate Company, 4 were minors, invalidated the transaction, the subject-matter of that suit. On July 3rd, 1907, His Majesty in Council affirmed the said judgments. In 1904, the said Ebrahim Goolam Ariff presented a petition to the Chief Court of Lower Burma (Civil Miscellaneous No. 68 of 1904) for the winding up of the Appellant Company on the ground that it never had been duly constituted because of the matters set up in the present suit, but he withdrew this petition at the hearing on the 2nd August 1904. In September 1904, while the former suit was under appeal to His Majesty in Council Ebrahim Goolam Ariff instituted the suit out of which the present appeal arose.

The Respondent, Ebrahim Goolam Ariff, filed a plaint on September 13th, 1904, against all the Appellants except the Appellant Company, but by subsequent orders the Plaint was so amended that the said Ebrahim Goolam Ariff sued as executor of the estate of Goolam Ariff deceased, the Official Receiver (who had been appointed by the Court in the previous suit Receiver of the property of Goolam Ariff deceased in question in the suit) was added as co-Plaintiff and the Appellant Company as co-Defendant. The Plaintiff claimed that the Defendant Company was not and never had been a properly incorporated Company and that the memorandum and certificate of registration of the same, all dated April 12th, 1902, should be declared void, and that no Company was constituted thereby and that the property purported to have been conveyed to the said Company as aforesaid should be transferred to the persons entitled to the same.

The Defendants filed written statements. They denied the right of the Plaintiff, Ebrahim Goolam Ariff, to maintain the suit either personally or as executor and alleged that the Plaintiffs were estopped by reason of the withdrawal of their proceedings to wind up the Defendant Company on the grounds on which they based their present action in No. 68 of 1904, the matters being res judicata and also because of the proceedings in the previous suit. They further pleaded that the certificate of incorporation was conclusive as to the proper formation of the Company.

Certain issues were framed by the Chief Court of Lower Burma upon the above pleadings.

On December 22nd, 1905, Mr. Justice Bigge delivered judgment in favour of the Defendants. The Appellate Court, however, held that the suit could not be dismissed at that stage but ordered that the hearing be stayed until the decision of His Majesty in Council on the previous case was made known.

MOOSA GOOLAM ARIFF v. EBRAHIM GOOLAM ARIFF.

After the decision of His Majesty in Council the suit was accordingly re-heard before Mr. Justice Robinson who gave judgment for the Defendants on January 5th, 1909. In the first place he held that the present suit was not barred by the judgments of both Courts in Burma and of His Majesty in Council in the previous suit (No. 146 of 1902) on the ground that the matter in issue in the present suit was not directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit, nor was it heard and finally decided. He also held that the suit was not barred by the withdrawal of the proceedings in No. 68 of 1904, because under certain provisions of the Civil Procedure Code a petition under the Companies Act did not bar a suit governed by the Code, even though the object aimed at by both was the same.

He held however that the certificate was final and binding as to all antecedent requisites and that the Court could not go behind it and question the validity of the signatures to the memorandum of association or the competence of the signatories to contract. He further expressed the opinion that as a guardian can make contracts for his ward the proper mode of making such a contract was followed in the present instance and that in any case the question of the contract being void in Indian Law as the contract of an infant could not arise seeing that it was made with the guardian and not with the infant. The suit was dismissed with costs and a decree to this effect was issued on January 12th, 1909. The Plaintiffs appealed.

On August 1st, 1910, the Appellate Court delivered judgment reversing the judgment of the Court below. The Chief Judge, Sir C. E. Fox (in whose judgment

Mr. Justice Parlet concurred) stated in the course of his judgment :—

"It is difficult to understand how a Registrar could have accepted and registered such a memorandum. Although under sec. 40 of the Act he was not bound to require evidence as to whether the subscribers to it were competent to contract, it was at least his duty to satisfy himself that seven or more persons had signed it.

The essential requirement for the formation of a Company, vis, seven or more persons associated for a lawful purpose signing their names to a memorandum of association, was absent in the case of this Company, and prima facie it could not and never did come into existence as a Company under the Indian Companies' Act, 1882. It was contended on behalf of the Company and stated by the learned Judge who heard the suit that whatever may have been the defects in the formation of a Company, it came into existence by virtue of the registration of the memorandum and the certificate of incorporation signed by the Registrar. This view is mainly based on the following portion of sec. 41 of the Act :—"A certificate of the incorporation of any Company given by the Registrar shall be conclusive evidence that all requisitions of this Act in respect of registration have been complied with."

The effect of a similar provision in the (English) Companies' Act of 1872 has been the subject of much discussion in the English Courts and eminent judges have expressed divergent views as to what a certificate of incorporation is conclusive of. It is not for us, in my opinion, to say which of those views has the weight of authorities in support of it.

Our duty is, in the words of Lord Halsbury, L. C., in Salomon v. Salomon (11) to look at what the Act itself has determined. The sole guide must be the Act itself. The Act says that the certificate shall be conclusive evidence, "That all the requisitions of the Act in respect of registration have been complied with." In my opinion we cannot say that the certificate is conclusive as to requirements of the Act other than those as to registration having been complied with. I cannot agree that subscription in respect of registration by seven or more persons is one of the requisitions of the Act. The fact that the British Legislature in 1900 passed another Act, 63 and 64 Vic, Cap. 48, making a certificate of incorporation conclusive not only of registration but of matters precedent and incidental thereto having been complied with, appears to me to lend weight to the view, that notwithstanding judgments of some learned judges that under the original Act the certificate was conclusive for all purposes, this view was open to doubt.

The Indian Legislature has not as yet adopted provisions similar to those of sec. 1 of the Companies' Act, 1900. If the certificate as to the Defendant Company in this case is not conclusive as to matters precedent and incidental to the registration of the memorandum, there can, in my opinion, be no question that the requirement of sec. 6 of the Indian Companies' Act, that seven persons must sign a memorandum of association in order to form a company was not complied with in the case of the Defendant Company.

The language plainly means that seven separate persons must sign the memorandum and it is not complied with by one person signing his name twice or more times in different capacities. It was urged that the matter was res judicata in consequence of previous litigation, but in regard to this I agree with the view of the learned Judge who heard the suit."

Hence this Appeal.

Mr. Buckmaster, K. C., and Mr. McCarthy for the Appellants submitted that the Court below had erred in law. The suit was barred by the principle of res judicata. Under sec. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, the matter which is the Respondents' ground of attack in the present suit might and ought to have been made a ground of attack in the former suit or proceedings (Suit No. 146 of 1902, or No. 68 of 1904.) The petition on which Civil Miscellaneous No. 68 of 1904 was based was withdrawn. The provisions of sec. 647, C. P. C., are applicable to it as if it were a suit within sec. 13, C. P. C. The object of the said petition and the present suit was the same, namely, to put an end to the existence of the Company. Under sec. 43, C. P. C., the present suit was not maintainable. In any case no fresh suit could be instituted without first obtaining the leave of the Court. Further, the certificate of incorporation is in law final and conclusive as to the regularity and validity of all antecedent acts and proceedings in the formation and constitution of a Company and the Court below had no jurisdiction to go behind the certificate to examine the proceedings relating to the signatures. Reliance was placed on Peel's case (1), Oakes v. Turquand (2), In re Nassau Phosphate Company (5), In re National Debenture and Assets Corporation (3), In the matter of Northumberland and Durham District Banking Company (6), Ladies Dress Association v. Pulbrook (7), In re Hertfordshire Brewery Co. (8). The case of In re Laxon (9) was not really against the Appellant as there the contract of a minor was only voidable whereas it is void under the Indian Law. Under sec. 6 read with sec. 41 of the Indian Companies Act, 1882, the Registrar's certificate is conclusive for all purposes. The Indian Act is similar to the English Act in this respect. (Sec. 6, (English) Act of 1862). There could possibly be no doubt now that the certificate would be conclusive under the English Act. The words of Lord Cairns in Peel's case (1) have received Legislative enactment (see (English) Company's Act of 1900 and 1908. The subscription as to registration by a seven or more persons is also a requisition. Further sec. 6 of the Indian Companies Act requires signatures only. There could be no question that a guardian is entitled to sign the memorandum of association on behalf of a minor. There is nothing in law to prevent one man signing on behalf of two or more persons.

Mr. Bailhache, K. C., and Mr. Snowden for the Respondents submitted that before a Registrar could grant a certificate there must be seven different persons present before him. There were not seven different persons signing that is contracting and the certificate therefore had no operation. Sec. 6 of Indian Companies Act is a condition precedent and has not been complied with. The competency of persons who form a company is outside the jurisdiction of the Registrar.

Sec. 236 of Indian Act, 1882, is the same sec. 192 of the English Act. It is true that sec. 17 of the Companies Consolidation Act, 1908, puts the matter beyond doubt but up to that time there was much difference of opinion. The condition that seven persons must sign is not a mere requisition. In re National Debenture and Assets Corporation (3) is a direct and recent authority.

In cases where the contract is voidable the contract stands good until it is set aside and so does the certificate. But where the contract is void the certificate cannot stand. In re Bamed's Banking Company (Peel's case) (1). If the certificate were conclusive there would be no power to inquire whether the signatories were minors or foreigners. But that is done. In re Nassau Phosphate Company (5), Wenlock v. River Dee Company (10), Salomon v. Salomon (11). The certificate is conclusive when there is something on which it could be authorized, e.g., the Memorandum and Articles of Association signed by seven different persons. Then, as to res judicata the point that there were not seven different signatures was not raised in the former suit.

[LORD ATKINSON.—It could and ought to have been legitimately raised then. You said that the Company was not existing for one reason, but you did not say that there was not a sufficient number of signatories.]

Mr. Bailhache.—The question relating to the formation of the Company was not raised nor were the Respondents bound to raise it. Sec. 373, C. P. C., does not bar the present suit. It ought to be read with sec. 647, C. P. C. The first Court rightly decided the point.

Mr. Buckmaster replied.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—The Record in this case is more than ordinarily confused and the story is somewhat complicated. But for the purpose of this Appeal the material facts may be stated in a few sentences.

One, Hadjee Goolam Ariff, a wealthy Mahomedan merchant residing at Rangoon, being dissatisfied with the conduct of his two elder sons was minded to dispose of the bulk of his property for the benefit of his two junior wives and his five younger children who were all minors at the time. With this object he applied for and obtained five separate orders under the Act of 1890 for the appointment of one and the same person as guardian of each of his minor children in order that the children by their guardian might accept the benefits which he intended to confer upon them. also desirous that his property should remain in one mass, intact and undistributed, he procured the registration of a limited Company called the Goolam Ariff Estate Company, Limited. To this Company in return for shares there was transferred so much of his property as was retained by him together with the undivided shares in his estate which he had conveyed to his junior wives and his minor children.

Hadjee Goolam Ariff died on the 15th of May 1902, having made his Will on the 19th of the previous month. It was proved by his eldest son, Ebrahim Goolam Ariff, one of the executors therein named on the 23rd of June 1902. From that time to the present there has been continuous and persistent litigation in which Ebrahim Goolam Ariff has endeavoured to set aside the disposition which his father made. In all these attempts Ebrahim Goolam Ariff failed except in his Appeal in the present suit to the Chief Court of Lower Burma. On that appeal the order was made from which the present appeal to His Majesty has been brought.

The object of the present suit was to have it declared that the Goolam Ariff Estate Company, Limited, was not duly incorporated and that the property conveyed to the company should be transferred "to the persons entitled to the same." The validity of the conveyances to the testator's junior wives and his minor children had been established in a suit, No. 146 of 1902, which ultimately came before this Board. But the validity of the incorporation of the Company had not been expressly determined.

The main grounds of defence to the present suit were—

(1) that the certificate of incorporation of the Company was conclusive; and

(2) that the question raised by the suit was "res judicata."

The questions framed to meet these points were both answered by the Court of Appeal in favour of the Plaintiffs. In their Lordships' opinion both ought to have been answered in favour of the Defendants, who are the present Appellants.

In dealing with the first question their Lordships will assume that the conditions of registration prescribed by the Indian Companies Act were not duly complied with, that there were not seven subscribers to the memoranandum of association, and that the Registrar of Companies ought not to have granted a certificate of incorporation. As a matter of fact a certificate of incorporation was granted. In their Lordships' opinion the certificate of incorporation is conclusive for all purposes.

The provisions of the Indian Companies Act of 1882 as regards the incorporation of companies are the same as those contained in the Imperial Act of 1862, except that it is specially provided in sec. 40 of the Indian Act that it is not the duty of the Registrar to require evidence as to whether the subscribers to the memorandum are competent to contract. Probably this provision was introduced because according to the Indian law the contract of an Infant is not voidable but void and it would lead to endless confusion and expense if the Registrar were to take upon himself the duty of ascertaining whether the signatories to the memorandum were or were not of full age.

In England the question whether the Registrar's certificate is conclusive was decided so far back as 1867 by Lord Cairns sitting in the Court of Appeal. In Peel's case (1), after signature and before registration a proposed memorandum of association had been altered without the authority of the subscribers so materially that in the words of Lord Cairns, "the alteration entirely neutralised and annihilated the original execution and signature of the document." The Company, however, was registered and the Registrar gave his certificate of incorporation. It was objected that the memorandum of association had not been signed by seven or indeed by any subscribers and that the provisions of the Act had not been complied with. To that proposition Lord Cairns assented. But "the certificate of incorporation," he said "is not merely a prima facie answer but a conclusive answer to such objection When once the certificate of incorporation is given nothing is to be enquired into as to the regularity of the prior proceedings." That was a plain and direct decision on the point. The observations of Lord Chelmsford in Oakes v. Turquand (2) are to the same effect. "I think," said his Lordship, "that the certificate prevents all recurrence to prior matters essential to registration, amongst which is the subscription of a memorandum of association by seven persons, and that it is conclusive in this case that all previous requisites had been complied with." Undoubtedly Lord Cairns' decision has been cavilled at. For instance in In re National Debenture and Assets Corporation (3), a Judge of first instance declined to treat a certificate of incorporation as conclusive which had been, as was supposed, subscribed by six persons only. On appeal, however, further evidence was admitted and it was found that the memorandum had in fact been subscribed by seven persons. On that ground the Court of Appeal reversed the decision appealed from. But unfortunately the learned Judges of Appeal made some observations to the effect that if the learned judge had been right as to the facts his decision in point of law would have been correct. The observations were mere dicta and besides the Court of Appeal could have had no jurisdiction to reverse Lord Cairns' decision. In their Lordships' opinion that decision is of unquestionable authority untouched by any subsequent decision and unimpaired by any dictum in any Superior Court, although the legislature thought fit, no doubt for the good reasons, to set the matter at rest by the Imperial Act of 1900, which put the words of Lord Cairns and Lord Chelmsford in a legislative enactment repeated in the Imperial Act of 1908.

Their Lordships are prepared to go further and to say that, in their opinion, even if there were no authority to guide their decision, the matter would seem to them to be absolutely plain on the words of the Act. The use of the word "otherwise" in sec. 6 shows that the statutory condition that the memorandum of association must be signed by seven persons is as much a condition of registration as any other requisition to be found in the Act which is preliminary to registration, and apparently essential.

This view is sufficient to determine the case in favour of the Appellants, but inasmuch as the question of res judicata was very fully argued their Lordships do not think it right to abstain from dealing with it.

Sec. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 enacts that :—

"No Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly or substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim litigating under the same title in a Court of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised and has been heard and finally decided by such Court."

Then Expl. 2 of that section declares that :—

"Any matter which might and ought to have been made ground of defence or attack in such former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit."

It was admitted by the learned Counsel for the Respondents that the alleged invalidity of the incorporation of the Goolam Ariff Estate Company, Limited, might have been made a ground of attack in the Suit No. 146 of 1902, in which the validity of the dispositions made by Hadjee Goolam Ariff was attacked.

That it ought to have been made a ground of attack in that suit appears to their Lordships to be equally clear. All the facts on which the present suit is based were known to the Plaintiff and are stated at length in the proceedings of the former suit. No further evidence would have been needed. Nothing was wanting but the addition of an issue on the point. The case is plainly within the ruling of this Board in the case of Kameswar Pershad v. Rajkumari Ruttun Koei (4).

Their Lordships therefore think that the question raised in the present suit is res judicata, and on that ground as well, as on the ground that the certificate of incorporation is conclusive, their Lordships think that the suit fails and ought to be dismissed.

Their Lordships are therefore of opinion that the Appeal ought to be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs both

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION

No. 7 OF 1912.

JENKINS, C. J.	}	J. C. GALSTAUN
WOODROFFE, J.		v.
1912, 18, March.		W. O. HUTCHISON.

Indian Stamp Act (II of 1899), Sch. I, Art. 1—Account adjusted and balanced and signed as correct, if acknowledgment inadmissible unless stamped—Debt and account, distinction between—Limitation.

The Plaintiff had various monetary dealings with the Defendant from and after 28th August 1905; the account up to the 1st of September 1908 was adjusted and stated between them showing a balance of Rs. 45,039 9-3 due to Plaintiff, below which "I accept this correct—E. & O. E." was written by Plaintiff; the Defendant signed below it without affixing an one anna stamp; the balance was carried forward, further debit entries were continued and on the date of filing the suit (6th July 1911) Rs. 58,932-1-3 were due to the Plaintiff from the Defendant. The trial judge regarded the debit balance on 1st September 1908 and the words and signature below it as acknowledgment of debt by the Defendant within the meaning of Stamp Act (II of 1899), Sch. I, Art. 1 and held it to be inadmissible in evidence and disallowed the amount as being barred by limitation.

J. C. GALSTAUN v. W. O. HUTCHISON.

On appeal, held by JENKINS, C. J.—That the signature of the Defendant admitting the balance struck to be correct (errors and omissions excepted) was not an acknowledgment of debt within the meaning of Sch. I, Art. 1 of the Stamp Act and that the Plaintiff was entitled to a decree for the whole amount in suit.

NUND KUMAR SHAHA v. SHURNOMOYI (1) followed.

WOODROFFE, J.—That the entry of the 1st September 1908 and the acknowledgment of same by Defendant was only an admission by him of the correctness of the account and did not require to be stamped to be admissible in evidence.

BROJENDRO KUMAR v. BROMOMOYI, CHOWDHURANI (3), BROJO GOBIND SHAHA v. GOLUCK CHUNDER SHAHA (2) and NUND KUMAR SHAHA v. SHURNOMOYI. (1) discussed.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 12th of February 1912 against the decree of Mr. Justice Chitty, dated the 26th of January 1912.

The facts as also the decision of the Court below will appear fully from the following portion of Mr. Justice Chitty's judgment:—

CHITTY, J.—This is a suit filed by the Plaintiff to recover from the Defendant a sum of Rs. 58,932-1-3 alleged to be due for principal and interest on an account between the parties. The suit has not been defended but I have none the less to see that the Plaintiff's claim is legally sustainable. It appears that from August 1905 the Plaintiff made advances to the Defendant from time to time and received payments from him on account. Interest was charged on the debit balances at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum. An account was prepared by the Plaintiff and submitted to the Defendant on 2nd September 1908 showing a balance due from Defendant up to 1st September 1908 of Rs. 45,039-9-3. This account is now produced by the Plaintiff in support of his case and bears the words:—"I accept this correct" with the Defendant's signature and the date—10th September 1908. The last payment made by the Defendant on the account was Rs. 175 paid on 16th January 1908. The Plaintiff has since made payments of certain premiums on behalf of the Defendant which with further interest brings the sum alleged to be due up to the amount now claimed. The question is whether this amount signed by the Defendant being an acknowledgment within the meaning of Art. 1 of Sch. I to the Stamp Act and being unstamped is admissible in evidence. If it is such an acknowledgment, being a document chargeable with a duty of one anna, it cannot be admitted under sec. 35 on payment of a penalty. I am of opinion that the document clearly falls within the description in Art. 1 and is inadmissible in evidence for any purpose (see Mulji Lala v. Lingu Makaji (4)). * * *

The Plaintiff is entitled I think to a decree for the three sums of Rs. 748 8 paid on the Defendant's account on 22nd February and 11th August 1910 and 20th February 1911 with interest at 9 per cent. on those amounts from the respective dates of payment till to-day (26th January 1912).

Mr. J. E. Bagiam with him Mr. C. Bagiam for the Plaintiff-Appellant.—Art. 5 of Sch. II of the Stamp Act of 1869 ran as follows:—"A note or memorandum written in a part whereby a debt or part of a debt amounting to Rs. 20 or upwards in acknowledged to be due." It is to be observed that no mention in this article is made of the necessity of the document being written for the purpose of supplying evidence of the debt. Nevertheless White and Mitter, JJ., held that this article did not apply to the case of entries in an account one side of which was intended to represent advances made from time to time and the other side payments made in reduction of advances. See Brojendra Kumar v. Bromomoyi (3). On principle this decision is sound for if an amount advanced is to be worked off or altered in the process of subsequent transactions which the parties contemplate it would be unreasonable to suppose that the making of entries of advances were intended to be acknowledgments of debts of the respective amounts of such advances. There would be no point in having acknowledgments where sums advanced are intended to be subjected to the process of alteration or extinction by subsequent transactions which are also to be recorded in accounts. An entry of an advance when made under such circumstances shows not that an acknowledgment of a debt was intended, but merely a record of a transaction consisting of a handing over of a particular sum of money from one person to another was intended to be made. The Legislature apparently took this view of acknowledgments and thus in the present Act the additional requirement of the document being written for the purpose of supplying evidence of the debt referred to in the document is insisted upon in Art. 1 of the First Schedule of the present Stamp Act. Mr. Justice White's decision was followed in Brojo Gobind Shaha v.

Goluck Chunder Shaha (2) and in Nund Kumar Shaha v. Shurnomoyi (1). It is only when a document which mentions a specified sum of money and purports to acknowledge an advance of that amount that the question of its being an acknowledgment of a debt can arise. Does such a question really arise when a document does not itself specify a particular sum of money? Does it again arise when all that it states is that something not therein appearing is to be correct? In the present case we have an account in the Plaintiff's handwriting containing certain calculations of interest and addition and subtraction of various figures in the two sides of an account. A balance in the Plaintiff's handwriting appears and at the foot of this document is an endorsement in the Defendant's writing in the words "I accept this to be correct." The Stamp Act being a fiscal act must be strictly construed and in favour of the subject. I submit that unless another position, (viz, the balance on the whole account) be referred to there is no mention here of any debt. How can these words "I accept this correct" be said to be an acknowledgment in the Defendant's handwriting? When looked into, this is a case of two documents on the same paper one of which is in the Plaintiff's handwriting and another in the Defendant's and it is only by reading them together that it is known that a balance of a particular account is acknowledged to be correct. The Stamp Act, Art. 1, contemplates documents the whole of which is in the debtor's handwriting or written on his behalf. There is no evidence that the account or balance was written in the debtor's behalf. They were not again a statement written by him.

(2) I. L. R. 9 Cal. 127 (1863).

J. C. GALSTAUN v. W. O. HUTCHISON.

That a balance is correct may be quite consistent with no debt being due at the time the statement is made. If there are two separate accounts showing balances one in favour of A and the other in favour of B, and A and B agree that only the difference is to be paid, a statement in writing by A or B that one or the other of the balances is correct would not establish the existence of a debt much less would it be an acknowledgment. Such a statement only acknowledges what it says, viz., the correctness of certain calculations resulting in a certain balance. Though admitted to be correct, it may not in fact be correct. Such a provision does not find a place in the Stamp Law of England. I submit the class of documents that the Legislature contemplated were those expressly mentioning in them definite sums of money which are written by the debtor so as to be available as evidence in favour of the creditor, to shew at the time the creditor wishes to enforce payment that that very sum mentioned is recoverable after deducting part payments (if any). If this was intended at the time the writing was made it was an acknowledgment within the article, otherwise not. In the absence of such an intention the document may be a record of an advance simply or of an acknowledgment of indebtedness at the time it is written, or a release from further accounting. The following cases were also referred to: Udit Upadhaya v. Bhawani Din (5), Chenbasapa v. Lakshman (6), Binga Ram v. Ram Mohun (7), Mulji Lala v. Lingu Makaji (4), Bishambar

Nath v. Nund Kishore (8), Ramanuj Das v. Lakhun Parida (9).

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

JENKINS, C. J.—The Plaintiff has brought this suit to recover Rs. 58,932-1-3. In his plaint he alleges that from and after the 28th August 1905 he and the Defendant had various monetary dealings: that the Defendant from time to time made various part payments on account of principal and interest: that on the 1st September 1908 the account was adjusted and stated between the Plaintiff and the Defendant showing a balance of Rs. 45,039-9-3 due to the Plaintiff and the same was admitted and signed by the Defendant as correct: that thereafter further dealings took place: and that there is now due owing from the Defendant to the Plaintiff Rs. 58,932-1-3.

The plaint was filed on the 6th of July 1911, and as provided by Order VIII, r. 1, the Defendant was required to present a written statement of his defence.

The Defendant entered an appearance through his attorneys, but he failed to present a written statement.

The suit was transferred from the list of defended causes to the list of undefended causes, and was heard by Chitty, J, who passed a decree in the Plaintiff's favour for Rs. 2,435-10-6 with interest and costs.

He, however, refused the rest of the Plaintiff's claim, not because it was not proved but because it was barred by limitation, as the document by which it was sought to gain the advantage of a fresh period of limitation did not bear an anna stamp, and so (in his opinion) was inadmissible.

From this decree the present appeal has been preferred by the Plaintiff.

J. C. GALSTAUN v. W. O. HUTCHISON.

It is beyond dispute that the sum of Rs. 58,932-1-3 would be recoverable unless barred by limitation, and that there is an acknowledgment of liability made in writing, and signed by the Defendant on the 1st of September 1908 which would be a complete answer to the bar of limitation if it can be utilized.

Chitty, J., held that this acknowledgment could not be proved for want of an anna stamp, as in his opinion the instrument was an acknowledgment of a debt within the meaning of Art. 1 of Sch. I to the Indian Stamp Act, 1899.

For the instrument to require such a stamp all the conditions indicated in that article must be present.

Though each case must depend on its own peculiar circumstances, I am unable to draw any fair distinction to the Plaintiff's detriment between the present case and that which was the subject of decision in Nund Kumar Shaha v. Shurnomoyi (1), where it was held that a balance sheet prepared and signed by the Defendant and showing a balance due from him was not an acknowledgment within the corresponding article of the Stamp Act of 1879.

If anything, the present instrument is more removed from the provisions of the Stamp Act, for here a balance was carried forward, errors and omissions were expressly excepted; and having regard to all the circumstances of the case I am not satisfied that the document on which the Plaintiff relies is an acknowledgment within the meaning of Art. 1.

Any other conclusion might, I think, lead to considerable inconvenience and detriment.

The result then is that, in my opinion, the Plaintiff is entitled to the relief he seeks and the decree of Chitty, J., should be varied by passing in the Plaintiff's favour a decree for Rs. 58,932-1-3 with costs of the suit as directed by Chitty, J., and also the costs of this appeal.

WOODROFFE, J.—Learned counsel has relied on the decision in Nund Kumar Shaha v. Shurnomoyi (1). On the question whether a particular document in suit amounts to an acknowledgment of a debt one decision can hardly be an authority for another, for each case must depend on its own circumstances. The observations however as to the general nature of signed accounts in the three cases next mentioned are relevant to the matter before us. If however we look at that decision in Nund Kumar Shaha v. Shurnomoyi (1), we find nothing stated beyond this:—"We have looked at the document ourselves and we think that it is not an acknowledgment of a debt within the meaning of Art. 1, Sch. I of the Stamp Act and we are fortified in this opinion by a decision of Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice O'Kinealy on a very similar point in the case of Brojo Gobind Shaha v. Goluck Chunder Shaha (2)." I may note in passing that the suit in this case was brought to recover what was due on a balance or nikash sheet after crediting the Defendant with certain amounts admitted to be due to him. It appears therefore that the amount of the balance sheet did not show the actual debt due by the Defendant. The case as appears from the report was decided with reference to that in Brojo Gobind Shaha v. Goluck Chunder Shaha (2) which was stated to raise a very similar point, and we must therefore look at the latter case. This held that the document in question was not a promissory note and did not require a stamp. Prinsep, J., said—"It is exactly of the same nature as the document which forms the subject of the suit in the case of Brojendro Kumar v. Bromomoyi Chowdhurani (3). Then citing White, J.'s judgment in that case he dismissed the appeal. We are thus taken back to the decision in Brojendro Kumar v. Bromomoyi Chowdhurani (3) which was the foundation for the decision in the other two cases. Now the facts of this latter decision are not entirely the same as those before us, but, as stated, the observation as to the general nature of signed accounts is helpful. There a sum of Rs. 20,825 made up of seven different advances on different dates was sued for. Each advance was entered on a hathchitta and was signed as it was made. The first advance was stamped and the remaining six were not. These entries were held not to come within the Stamp Act for the following reasons:—The account had two sides, viz., one side of sums advanced, and the other of those received, the Court said "the amount due varies from time to time, and depends upon the relation of the amount advanced to the amount received. In the present case no sum is entered under the head of 'amount received,' but that is an accident, and makes no difference in considering the question as to what is the nature of the document which is offered in evidence. The intention of the parties in requiring the signature or seal of the borrowers to each sum advanced is, strictly speaking, to secure under their hands an acknowledgment that the sum is advanced. Whether or not that sum is due, or a larger sum or a less sum, depends upon the state of the account." The entries were not intended to stand alone in which case the Court said it might have been contended that they were acknowledgments requiring a stamp. In that case also no sum was entered under the "amount received" column, yet the Court held that to be an accident and made no difference in considering the question as to what was the nature of the document, (viz., an account), which was offered in evidence. If, for instance, an account is balanced at the end of a year and is accepted as correct and a separate entry were made admitting its correctness and acknowledging the balance found to be due on that account as owing to the creditor, then I conceive that such an entry might amount to an acknowledgment within the meaning of the Stamp Act and require a stamp. The Court in such a case might perhaps reasonably infer an intention to acknowledge a debt notwithstanding that such debt was transferred to the next yearly account. The question is however one of intention to be gathered from the circumstances of each case, and it is only necessary to deal with the facts before us. In the present case the words "I accept this correct" were written by the Plaintiff and signed by the Defendant against the balance of the 1st September 1908 showing, (errors and omissions excepted), that a sum of Rs. 45,039-9-3 appeared to be payable on that account by the Defendant up to that date. It was an admission that up to that date the account was correct. This amount was carried forward in the account which was continued and further debit entries were made after the date of the acknowledgment, for which alone the Plaintiff has been given a decree. To use the language in the case last cited it was an accident that no further credit entries were made. There is nothing to show that it was intended that none were to be made or that the account should close with the acknowledgment. This accident did not, in the terms of the case cited, alter the character of the document. Balances were frequently struck during the course of the account, the last being in July 1911. The Plaintiff in his evidence stated that it did not occur to him at the time that the acknowledgment was taken with the object of supplying evidence (of the debt) but that he did it "so as not to worry for accounts in future I suppose I took it to use it when the time came as I am now doing." The question is whether in fact the writing is now used as an acknowledgment of a debt as apart from an acknowledgment of liability, and whether it is in fact so within the meaning of Stamp Act. It may be that as the result of such acknowledgment of liability together with the account itself, and other evidence in the case the law annexes as a consequence the obligation to pay the sum against which the acceptance of the Defendant appears, but from this it does not follow that the Defendant intended to acknowledge that particular sum as a debt within the meaning of the Stamp Act. Further the account was "E. and O. E." Even assuming that such a provision was for the benefit of the creditor only and that the Defendant, had he gone to the witness-box, would have been bound by his signature, (though it is by no means clear that the Defendant could not also have shown that such signature was given by mistake), it may well be argued that the insertion of such proviso made the Defendant's acceptance one which was conditional on the correctness of the account. Let it be supposed that an enquiry under the "E. and O. E." provision disclosed that the amount shown in the balance was incorrect and that the amount due was more or less than that claimed, could it be said then that the Defendant had acknowledged a "debt" when the acknowledged sum did not represent that rightly claimed. It may be admitted that the case in Nund Kumar Shaha v. Shurnomoyi (1) is in one respect perhaps stronger than the present one, (for the signature against each sum as it was advanced was strong evidence to show that the signature was given to witness that particular advance) as also that the dividing line may be in many cases a narrow one, but in a matter of this kind—which seems, to put the matter most adversely to the Plaintiff, at least open to doubt—I think we ought to follow the general principles of the decision in Brojendro Kumar v. Bromomoyi Chowdhurani (3) upon which learned Counsel for the Appellant relies, and I agree in holding that the entry relied on does not, under the circumstances of this case, amount to an acknowledgment which requires an anna stamp.

faction by the other of his share only of decree as discharged by payment—Application to execute for the balance—Executing Court if may act on the admission.

S₁, and S₂, two brothers, obtained a decree against B. Subsequently in a partition suit instituted by S₂ against S₁, S₂ having complained that S₁ had not entered in the assets of the family property the decree against B, S₁ filed a written statement in which he admitted that the decree had been obtained by fraud on account of enmity between the brothers and B and that B had been released of his liability under it upon payment of Rs. 200 only out of the decretal amount. The payment, however, was certified in execution as made in part satisfaction only of the decree. Subsequently S₁ died and S₂ filed a certificate in execution admitting receipt of another Rs. 200 from B and the full satisfaction of his half share of the decree and then applied on behalf of the minor sons of S₁ for execution of the alleged unsatisfied balance of the decree :

Held—That the case really did not fall under the provisions of r. 2, Or. 21, C. P. C., as it was not a question of payment or adjustment of the decree and the executing Court was justified in placing reliance on an admission solemnly made by the decree-holder himself prior to the application for execution in a suit in which the genuineness of the decree was in issue, and in dismissing the execution petition on its basis.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 22nd of May 1911 against an order of Mr. B. B. Newbould, District Judge of Zillah Dacca, dated the 27th of March 1911, reversing an order of Babu Hira Lal Mukerjee, Munsif at Munshigunge, dated the 22nd of December 1910.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Satish Chandra Ghosh and Smritish Chandra Ghosh for the Appellant.

Babu Upendra Lal Roy for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal against an order passed by the lower Appellate Court in certain execution proceedings. It appears that a suit was brought by the father of the two Respondents in the present appeal and by his brother Sudhanya Ray against the present Appellant, and a decree was obtained on the 9th September 1907. In October 1907 corresponding to 5th Kartik, 1314, B. S., a sum of Rs. 200 was admittedly paid by the judgment-debtor to the decree-holders. Afterwards, Sudhanya Ray, the brother of the father of the Respondents, brought a partition suit against his brother Sital Ray and, in his plaint, he alleged that Sital had not entered in the assets of the family property the decree which they had obtained on the 9th September 1907 against Babar Ali. Sital, in his written statement, put in an objection to this allegation. He said that, at the time when the decree was obtained by the two brothers against Babar Ali, there was enmity between them and Babar Ali, that afterwards Babar Ali had come under their influence and Rs. 200 was accepted in full satisfaction of that decree and that Babar Ali was given to understand that he was exempted from further liability. Afterwards, when satisfaction was certified to the Court, the payment was certified as made only in satisfaction of one instalment due under that decree. It is not clear what was the result of that suit but Sital afterwards died and Sudhanya, his brother, after putting in a petition admitting receipt of another Rs. 200 from Babar Ali in Aghran 1316 filed a certificate admitting full satisfaction of his half share of the decree and then put in the application which has given rise to the present appeal, in which he sought on behalf of the two minor sons of Sital for execution of the decree for the balance which, he alleged, was outstanding in their favour.

The Court of first instance dismissed the application. The learned Munsif held that from the admission made by Sital in the suit brought against him by Sudhanya it was clear that the decree obtained against Babar Ali was a fraudulent decree and was the outcome of enmity between them and him, that a sum of money was accepted in full satisfaction of that decree, apparently meaning the sum of Rs. 200 received on the 5th Kartik 1314, and that, after that admission by the father, the application made on behalf of the sons for execution of the decree for the balance outstanding could not proceed. The Munsif further found that, throughout the whole proceedings, there was clear proof of fraud on the part of Sudhanya. He not only held that the original decree was a fraudulent decree and that no money was really due under it to the present Appellants but he also held that Sudhanya fraudulently put in the certificate in satisfaction of his half share of the decretal money in order to avoid the effect of the admission made by Sital in the case which he had brought against him.

On appeal, the lower Appellate Court has entirely ignored the question whether the Munsif was entitled to rely on the admission made by Sital in the suit brought against him by Sudhanya and has confined its attention entirely to the point whether the Court of first instance was entitled, in execution of the decree, to accept any evidence of payment or adjustment, which had not been certified or recorded as required by Or. XXI, r. 2, C. P. C. The learned District Judge held that as full satisfaction of the decree had not been certified when Rs. 200 was paid to Sital and Sudhanya in 1314, the Court of first instance was not entitled to arrive at the conclusion that the decree had been satisfied, and he further found that there was no allegation that the decree-holders had by fraud kept the judgment-debtor in ignorance of the fact that satisfaction of the decree had not been certified. The learned Judge, therefore, set aside the judgment and order of the Court of first instance and directed that the execution should proceed.

The judgment-debtor Babar Ali has now appealed to this Court; and, in support of the appeal, the main point taken is that the Court of first instance was justified in the view which it took that after Sital, the father of the present applicants for execution, had, in the suit brought against him by Sudhanya, substantially admitted that the decree was a fraudulent decree and that the money paid by Babar Ali had been accepted in full satisfaction of that decree, no further sum was due from Babar Ali on account of that decree and that the decree was merely kept alive for the purpose of exercising pressure over Babar Ali in consequence of the enmity which existed between him and Sital and Sudhanya. The point for consideration in this case was not really one falling under the provisions of r. 2 of Or. XXI, C. P. C., but was whether, in the face of the admission made by the father, the two sons were entitled to succeed in the present application. The learned pleader for the Respondents has contended with great earnestness that the Court of first instance, in execution of the decree, had no right whatever to go into the matter whether or not Sital, the father of the minors, had admitted that no money was due to him from Babar Ali under this decree. The learned pleader has contended that all that the executing Court could take into consideration was the payment made under the decree which had been duly certified to the Court as required by r. 2 of Or. XXI of the Code and that, as full satisfaction of the decree had not been certified when the payment was made in Kartik 1314, therefore the executing Court had no jurisdiction to do anything else but to direct the execution to proceed; and in support of this contention, he has relied on the cases of Bajrang Bihari Lal v. Lachmi Narain (1) and Iswar Chandra v. Huris Chandra (2). With the decisions of this Court in those two cases we have no desire to disagree but the important point to be noticed is that in those two cases there was no question whatever whether the decree-holder had prior to the application for execution himself admitted that no money was due under the decree. The learned pleader has contended that the admissions contained in the written statement of Sital did not go so far as to say that no money was due under the decree after the payment of the Rs. 200 and he suggests that, in the case in which that decree was obtained, the Court, on the application of the judgment-debtor, directed that the decree should be paid by instalment.

These facts may be true or not but there is nothing on the record before us to support them. The learned pleader has thought it his duty to read out to us the paragraphs in the written statement of Sital on which the Munsif has relied as showing that he admitted in that suit that the original decree obtained against Babar Ali was a fraudulent decree, that it was obtained at a time when the two brothers were at enmity with Babar Ali and that it was practically cancelled or satisfaction of it was accepted when they succeeded in bringing Babar Ali under their control. In our opinion, the contention which the learned pleader for the Respondents has advanced cannot, with due regard to the facts of the present case, prevail. We are fully in agreement with his argument that, in ordinary cases, the Court should not accept any payment in satisfaction of a decree or any adjustment made in satisfaction of a decree which has not been certified to the executing Court as contemplated by Or. XXI, r. 2, C. P. C.; but in this case, we have not to consider any adjustment of the decree such as is contemplated by that section. What we have to consider is whether the sons of Sital are, in these execution proceedings, entitled to recover any money due under this decree from Babar Ali after their father in a suit in which the genuineness of this decree was in issue had, solemnly in his written statement admitted, what we agree with the Munsif in terms amounted to saying, that the original decree was a fraudulent decree—the result of enmity between the two brothers and Babar Ali—and that the two brothers had subsequently relieved Babar Ali from any liability under that decree when they received the Rs. 200. In our opinion the Court of first instance was entitled to take that admission into consideration in determining whether the present proceedings in execution should be allowed to go on and the lower Appellate Court was wrong in refusing to give effect to that admission and in setting aside the judgment and order of the Court of first instance for the reasons given in its judgment. We, therefore, decree the appeal, set aside the judgment and order of the Court of Appeal below and restore the judgment and order of the Court of first instance with costs. We assess the hearing-fee in this Court at 3 gold mohurs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885)—Transferability of occupancy holding—Custom and usage, proof of—Sale in execution of decree—Landlord's consent on receipt of nazarāna.

Where nazars were as a rule paid to the zemindar and on payment of the nazar the purchaser was usually recognised by the landlord,

Held—That it was not evidence of any custom or usage by which an unwilling landlord was bound, or evidence that the landlord was compelled, to recognise the purchaser, on payment of nazar whether he wished to do so or not.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 22nd of July 1911 against the order of Babu Pran Krishna Biswas, District Judge of Zillah Rungpur, dated the 25th of April 1911, affirming an order of Moulvi Ali Ahmed, Subordinate Judge of Rungpur, dated the 26th of September 1910.

The decree-holder, Respondent, obtained a mortgage decree against the judgment-debtors, Appellants. After all the mortgaged properties were sold the decree-holder attached certain other properties belonging to the judgment-debtors. The judgment-debtors made an objection under sec. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and stated that the holdings were all non-transferable occupancy holdings and were not therefore liable to be attached or sold. The first Court held that the holdings were occupancy raiyati holdings but that the usage of sale of occupancy holdings was proved and the objection of the judgment-debtors was therefore rejected. The lower Appellate Court also came to the same conclusion. The portion of the evidence upon which the lower Appellate Court relied will be found in extenso in the judgment of their Lordships.

The other facts material to this report will appear from following portion of the judgment of the lower Appellate Court :—

"The judgment-debtors' own witnesses admit that raiyati holdings are bought and sold. The landlord's servant who was examined as a witness for the judgment-debtors, though he was cited by both parties, said that there is a pergunnah custom as to the sale of raiyati holdings. But he also said that nazar has to be paid to the landlord before the landlord recognises the purchaser as his raiyat. The pleader for the judgment-debtors refers to the case of Kailash Chandra v. Hari Mohan (1) as authority for the proposition that if the zemindar recognises the purchase only on receipt of nazar, that discloses the existence of a custom as to the sale of occupancy holdings without the landlord's consent. If the amount of nazar to be paid depends on the will of the landlord, then, of course, the above proposition is correct. But where the rate of nazar is fixed by custom and the zemindar recognises the purchase on getting the customary nazar, the custom as to the transferability of occupancy rights must be held to be proved, Buzlul Karim v. Satish Chandra (2). In the present case, the landlord's amla says that Rs. 2 per bigha is the customary rate. The custom must therefore be held to have been proved and the judgment-debtors' objection was properly rejected."

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen for the Appellant.—There is no evidence in this case to prove a custom or local usage of transferability of occupancy holdings; the evidence relied upon by the lower Appellate Court amounts to this only that the landlord on receipt of nazar recognises the transferee as the tenant; that is not sufficient; it must further be proved that the landlord must recognise; refers to the case of Kailash Chandra v. Hari Mohan (1). The case of Bazlul Karim v. Satish Chandra (2) does not help the other side, for that was a case of voluntary transfer and the present one is that of a compulsory sale—the decree-holder trying to sell the holding in execution of a decree; moreover, in the present case there is no evidence that the landlord must recognise. Even if it is proved that the landlord must recognise, that would not be sufficient to prove custom and usage; for, it is a privilege and right to both the landlord and the raiyat that a raiyati holding cannot be transferred;

(1) 13 C. W. N. 541 (1909).

(2) 15 C. W. N. 762; s. o. 18 C. L. J. 418 (1911).

—the right and privilege of a landlord being that a stranger cannot come upon the land by purchase; those of a raiyat being that he will not lose his holding in case of his incurring debts; otherwise the result will be that a raiyat on occasions of marriage and festivities will be tempted to incur debts and the land will go to the creditors, and the agricultural classes will be landless. The landlord's consent alone is not sufficient to pass title to the transferee; the tenant is also interested, so the consent of both the landlord and the tenant is essential in proving a custom. Illus. (2) of sec. 183 of the Bengal Tenancy Act speaks of a custom or usage in regard to a voluntary transfer; it does not speak of a compulsory sale execution of a decree; so if the holding of a raiyat is sold against his will in execution of a decree, no custom or usage which entitles a purchaser to be recognised by the landlord on payment of a nazaranna although fixed by custom, can take away a raiyat's right; such custom and usage may confer a title to a purchaser to whom the raiyat has voluntarily transferred.

No one for the Respondent.

This appeal arises out of an objection of the judgment-debtors, who are the Appellants before us, under sec. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure that their raiyati holdings which had been attached, were not saleable by local custom or usage without the consent of the landlord. Both the Courts below dismissed the objection of the judgment-debtors and they have now appealed to this Court.

The proof that these holdings are saleable without the landlord's consent, de-pende entirely upon a passage in the evidence which has been quoted in the judgment of the first Court. The view of that portion of the evidence taken by the first Court is accepted by the lower Appellate Court. The quotation of the evidence given in the first Court's judgment is this: "There is a custom of the sale of raiyati jotes (meaning occupancy holdings) in the pergunnah. Without the permission of the zemindar the jotes are being sold. If the purchaser pays rent we take it and give receipt in the name of the old tenants. We do not give marfat of the purchaser. Without taking nazar we do not make kharij-dakhil. We take order of the zemindar and take nazar from the purchaser and then make kharij-dakhil . . . without nazar never kharij-dakhil is made . . . In these villages nazar is taken at the rate of Rs. 2 per bigha. We do not forbid the purchase of jote at auction-sale. We make kharij-dakhil of the name of purchasers if nazar is paid. No objection is taken to it." What this amounts to is that nazars are as a rule paid to the zemindar and on payment of the nazars the purchaser is usually recognised by the landlord. But the passage is not evidence of any custom or usage by which an unwilling landlord is bound, or evidence that the landlord is compelled, to recognise the purchaser on payment of nazar whether he wishes to do so or not. There is no other evidence in support of the finding of the Court below, which must therefore be regarded as based on no evidence and unsustainable.

We therefore set aside the judgments and decrees of the lower Courts and decree this Appeal with half costs in this Court, the hearing-fee being assessed at half a gold mohur. The Appellants before us are entitled to their costs in both the Courts below.

Bond, construction of—Rate of interest—Stipulation to pay interest at Re. 1-9 per month and compound interest with six-monthly rests—"Per cent." if to be read into the stipulation.

Where the executants of a bond which secured an advance of Rs. 2,000 stipulated therein "we shall pay interest on this sum at the rate of Re. 1-9 per month" and "we shall pay the interest every 6 months from this date. If we fail to do so interest and compound interest shall at the end of every six months be added to the principal and we shall go on paying interest therein at the aforesaid rate until the time of repayment":

Held—That, upon a true construction of this bond, the stipulation was that interest should be paid at the rate of Re. 1-9 per cent. per month.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 3rd of January 1910 against an order of Babu Annada Charan Sen, Subordinate Judge of Jalpaiguri, dated the 21st of September 1909.

The suit out of which the appeal arose was instituted upon the basis of two mortgage bonds of which the later in date was executed on the 27th of Ashar 1309 by the Defendants in favour of the Plaintiffs;

INDRO DEB DAS v. AZIZUR RAHAMAN SARKAR.

this mortgage bond was to the following effect :—

For the purpose of carrying on a timber business we have this day jointly borrowed from your tehbil Rs. 2,000 and have received the said amount in cash. We shall pay interest on this sum at the rate of Re. 1-9 annas per cent. per month. We shall go on paying it until repayment. The month of Poush of the present year is fixed as the stipulated time for repayment, when we shall pay up the whole of the principal with interest and take back this bond. If we are unable to pay up the whole amount at one time and pay from time to time in part, we shall endorse the payment on the back of this bond at the time of the payment distinctly stating what is paid on account of principal and what is paid on account of interest. Except the endorsements on the back of this bond separate receipts, acquittances or oral evidence of witnesses produced to prove payments shall be rejected by the Court. We shall pay the interest every six months from this date. If we fail to do so the interest and compound interest shall at the end of every six months be added to the principal and we shall go on paying interest thereon at the aforesaid rate until the time of repayment. We shall not be entitled to make any payment on account of principal so long as interest remains due. As security for the aforesaid loan with interest we mortgage to you the properties owned and possessed by us and which are described in the schedule given below.

Plaintiffs instituted the present suit on the 16th December 1908, claiming interest on the principal amount secured by this mortgage at the rate of Re. 1-9 per cent. per month and compound interest at the said rate with six-monthly rests as stipulated in the bond. The Defendants inter alia contended that the interest of Re. 1-9 was chargeable on the whole of the principal amount of Rs. 2,000. The Plaintiffs were allowed to adduce evidence to prove that the intention of the parties was that the interest should be payable at the rate of Re. 1-9 per cent., the expression "per cent." having been omitted through mistake, and the Subordinate Judge agreeing with the Plaintiffs' contention decreed the suit. The Defendants appealed.

Babu Karunamoy Bose for the Appellants.

Babu Brojo Lal Chuckerbutty for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

STEPHEN, J.—This case arises out of a mortgage bond executed by the Defendants in favour of the Plaintiffs. The bond recites that the Defendants on the day of execution of the bond borrowed Rs. 2,000 from the Plaintiffs. It then goes on to say "we shall pay interest on this sum at the rate of Re. 1-9 per month." Further on, there is a provision which is as follows :—"We shall pay the interest every six months from this date. If we fail to do so the interest and compound interest shall at the end of every six months be added to the principal and we shall go on paying interest thereon at the aforesaid rate until the time of repayment."

Before the lower Court it was argued on behalf of the Plaintiffs that the first of these passages meant that interest was to be payable at the rate of Re. 1-9 per cent. per month and that the words "per cent." had been left out by mistake. Under the circumstances, the lower Court allowed evidence to be adduced to show that such a mistake had in fact been made, and eventually held that the proper construction of the document in question was to read the words as though "per cent." had been added.

In appeal it is argued before us that the lower Court had no authority to admit the evidence that was tendered as regards the making of the mistake and that the construction of the document is wrong. We cannot take this view. For myself

I must admit that had I to construe only the words "we shall pay interest on this sum at the rate of Re. 1-9 annas per month," I should hold that the words are intelligible in themselves and mean that Re. 1-9 annas would be due on the whole sum of Rs. 2,000. This is an intelligible construction. It creates a provision which it was open to the parties to make. Looking, however, at the subsequent words relating to compound interest, it seems to me, that the document becomes absolutely unintelligible unless the words "per cent." are included in the earlier sentence. It is not to be supposed that compound interest was to be reckoned at the rate of Re. 1-9 annas on the sum of Rs. 2,000. Some other rate was in contemplation and I have no doubt that, that was intended to be indicated by the words "per cent." which have been omitted by mistake. Taking the document as a whole I consider that the Judge is correct in reading it as he did. I would therefore dismiss the appeal with costs, the hearing-fee being assessed at two gold mohurs.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree in the conclusion arrived at by my learned brother. The question as I understand it is one of construction and for my part bearing in mind the universality of the practice of fixing the rate of interest at a rate per cent., I think that the words to be construed can only mean as they stand that interest was to be chargeable at the rate of Re. 1-9 per cent. per month. If the document be read as a whole there can be no room for doubt on the subject.

Appeal dismissed.

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE No. 5032 OF 1911.

STEPHEN, J.	W. C. MCINTOSH,
D. CHATTERJEE, J.	Claimant, Petitioner,
1912,	v.
Heard, 1, April.	BIDHU BHUSAN SEN,
Judgment,	Decree-holder,
18, April.	Opposite Party.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, rr. 58, 61—Claimant in possession under a collusive sale if in possession as trustee for judgment-debtor.

A judgment-debtor with the object of defrauding his creditor executed a collusive sale of his property in favour of a third person who was put in possession and preferred a claim to the property under r. 58 of Or. 21 of the Civil Procedure Code, when the same was attached by the creditor in execution of his decree :

Held—That the claim should be rejected on the ground that the property was in possession of the claimant in trust for the judgment-debtor within the meaning of r. 61 of Or. 21 of the Civil Procedure Code.

It was not necessary, in order to defeat the claim, to show that the trust was one capable of enforcement by law.

This was a Rule granted on the 1st of September 1911 against the judgment of Babu Danda Dhari Biswas, Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 7th of August 1911.

The material facts appear from the judgment.

Babu Harendra Narayan Mitra (for Babu D. N. Chuckerbutty) and Babu Kali Kinkar Chuckerbutty for the Petitioner.

Babus Tara Kishore Chowdhury and Hem Chundra Sen for the Opposite Party.

W. C. McINTOSH v. BIDHU BHUSAN SEN.

This is a claim case under Or. XXI, r. 58, in which the lower Court has dismissed the petition of claim. A Rule has been granted calling on the Opposite Party to show cause why the Subordinate Judge should not be directed to allow the claim of the Petitioner on the facts found ; to this Rule a clause has been added calling on the Opposite Party to show cause why the attachment obtained by him should not be set aside as being made without jurisdiction owing to a previous adjudication in insolvency made on the 19th September 1910. The facts of the case as found are as follows : On the 11th September 1909 a husband and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Sophianopulous, sold certain property to Mr. Philipopulous. This sale was not a bona fide one, which we understand to mean that it was entered into by Sophianopulous and Philipopulous for the purpose of shielding the property from the creditors of the former. On the 25th June 1910, Philipopulous sold the property to the claimant, who took possession and retained it till the attachment. This sale was a collusive one, being apparently a similar transaction to the first. Philipopulous was adjudicated insolvent on the 19th September 1910, a fact which 'curiously enough is not mentioned in the judgment of the Court below, though from the terms of the Judge's order we think he must have had it in his mind. The property was attached on the 7th May 1911 ; and it is against this attachment that the present claim is made. Under Or. XXI, r. 60, the Court was bound to make an order releasing the property if it was satisfied that the property when attached, was not in the possession of Sophianopulous or of some person in trust for him.

Under r. 61 if the Court was satisfied that the property was in possession of Sophianopulous or of some other person in trust for him it was bound to disallow the claim. There is no question of possession by Sophianopulous, and the only question arising under these two rules is whether the property was in the possession of the claimant in trust for Sophianopulous. The findings show that the claimant was in possession of the property under a title which neither he nor Sophianopulous intended should be acted on as between themselves, and that he was in possession for the benefit of Sophianopulous and to defraud his creditors. We are of opinion that looking at the scope and purpose of the rules in question it is not necessary in order to defeat the claim to show that the trust is one capable of enforcement by law. Accordingly we hold that the claimant was in possession in trust for Sophianopulous : and the claim was therefore rightly dismissed. As to the second part of the Rule, it may be that the adjudication vested the property in dispute in the Official Assignee : but he has not so far made any objection to the attachment, though he has done nothing that can be taken as admitting its validity as against him. We see no reason why on revision we should allow the claimant to take advantage of a right in another which has not yet been asserted.

The Rule is therefore discharged with costs, the hearing-fee being assessed at 3 gold mohurs.

Rule discharged.

and probably more than the full market value of their property."

AGAINST THIS DECISION, THE CLAIMANTS APPEALed to the Privy Council. As the reference had been heard before a bench of two Judges, the claimants had virtually lost their right to appeal to the "High Court" as provided in sec. 54 of the Land Acquisition Act, or as it is put in the argument on behalf of the Respondent, the right had "merged." However, that may be, on the appeal before the Judicial Committee, a preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the Respondent that no appeal lay from the decision of the High Court, and that objection has been given effect to by their Lordships. It was pointed out to their Lordships on behalf of the Appellants that as a matter of fact on several previous occasions, such appeals had been entertained by the Judicial Committee. Secretary of State v. Charles- worth, [1901] App. Cas. 373; Ezra v. Secretary of State, 9 C. W. N. 454; Secretary of State v.
India General Steam Navigation Co., 14 C. W. N.
134. But as no such preliminary objection had been taken to the hearing of the appeals in those cases, their Lordships did not hold themselves precluded from entertaining and giving effect to the objection taken in the present case.

IT IS ANNOUNCED THAT LORD ROBSON HAS RETIRed from his office as a Lord of Appeal and Lord Haldane has made the best possible selection by the appointment of Lord Justice Fletcher Moulton to fill up the vacancy. It can hardly be said that the retiring Law Lord has left his mark on the judicial history of England though it must be said that his tenure of office has been far too short to give him much of an opportunity to leave a distinguish record behind him. The new Law Lord has a splendid record of judicial work behind him, and his appointment may be taken as an earnest of the real concern which the new Lord Chancellor feels in improving the personnel of the highest Court of the Empire. It is to be remarked that this appointment as also that of Lord Justice Hamilton who succeeds Lord Justice Fletcher Moulton are in no way party appointments.

THE DECISION OF THEIR LORDSHIPS OF THE Judicial Committee in The Rangoon Botatoung Company, Ltd. v. The Collector, Rangoon, reported at p. 961 of the present issue, will cause surprise in this country in legal and lay minds alike. In this case, certain persons in Rangoon whose lands had been acquired for public purposes, being dissatisfied with the Collector's valuation, applied for and obtained a reference to the Chief Court as they were entitled to do under sec. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act. The reference was heard by a bench of two Judges of that Court. The hearing of the reference, as their Lordships do not fail to note, occupied 45 days, more than 100 witnesses were examined, a vast mass of documents was put in and the Judges at the request of the parties viewed the premises. In the result, they dismissed the reference, with the remark that the Collector had given the claimants "all

TO THE LAY MIND, IT WILL CERTAINLY APPEAR not a little surprising that the Privy Council which has so long been hearing and disposing of these appeals should suddenly discover after all these years that such appeals are incompetent and ought not to be entertained; and considering the position of that august tribunal, even a lawyer may be excused for finding difficulty in reconciling the apparently inconsistent positions taken up by the Judicial Committee. But no lawyer would nevertheless be justified in cavilling at the present decision merely on that ground, if in other respects it is based on sound reasoning. Our objection, however, is that it is more than doubtful that this is so.

THE ARGUMENT OF THEIR LORDSHIPS AGAINST the competence of an appeal is mainly based upon an interpretation of secs. 53 and 54 of the Land

Acquisition Act, and although sec. 596 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 (corresponding to sec. 110 of Act V of 1908) is not specifically mentioned in the judgment, their Lordships' main ground for dismissing the appeal is that the decree of the High Court in a Land Acquisition case is not a "decree" within the meaning of that section. But there appears to be another ground suggested at the conclusion of the judgment, vis., that the decision of the Court of Reference or of the High Court on appeal is in the nature of an "arbitration" and that the Judges are "arbitrators" for the purpose of valuing the property acquired. These expressions carry with them the suggestion of jurisdiction by consent and finality of decision. It seems to us that their Lordships' interpretation of the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act and the Civil Procedure Code is not at all justifiable and the use of the expression "arbitration" in connection with the Court's award on the question of valuation is without foundation and is also misleading.

UNDER SEC. 12 OF THE LAND ACQUISITION ACT, the award made by a Collector—and the Collector in these proceedings does not act judicially but as the agent of the Government or Company on whose behalf the acquisition is made (Esra v. Secretary of State, 7 C. W. N. 249, affirmed by the Privy Council in 9 C. W. N. 454)—is final and conclusive "as between the Collector and the persons interested," subject to the right of the latter if they do not accept the award to require that "the matter be referred by the Collector for the determination of the Court." The word "Court" is defined in sec. 3, cl. (d) of the Act as the "principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction unless the Local Government has appointed (as it is thereby empowered to do) a Special Judicial Officer within any specified local limits to perform the functions of the Court under this Act." Sec. 54 of the Act provides an appeal on facts from the decision of the Court as above defined to the High Court "irrespective of the value of the interests involved."

TO ONE FAMILIAR WITH THE JUDICIAL ADMINISTRATION of this country, the object of these provisions of law is obvious. When statutes for compulsory acquisition of land were first introduced in this country, serious objections were taken against the principle of these Acts which undoubtedly interfere with the proprietary rights of individuals, a right which has long been recognised to stand on nearly the same footing as the individual's right to personal liberty. The object of these provisions was to conciliate public opinion and safeguard private rights. The provisions, therefore, purported to provide that the contest as to valuation between the Collector and the owner should be determined—and determined judicially—by the Principal Civil Court or a Judicial Officer (and not an officer of Government occupying the same position as the Collector who in these proceedings is an agent of Government). The Act also provided that this decision would be open to review on questions of fact by the High Court. The object of authorising the Local Government to appoint Special Judicial Officers is well-known. In practice a Special Land Acquisition Judge is only appointed when land is acquired in any district on an extensive scale, so that the references against the Collector's awards may not be taken to the Ordinary Civil Courts and the current business of these Courts thus seriously blocked.

BUT FOR THE DEFINITION OF "COURT" IN sec. 3 of the Land Acquisition Act the references would undoubtedly lie to the Court of the Munsif, or the Subordinate Judge or the District Judge, as the case might be, according to the value of the interest in dispute, and but for sec. 54, an appeal would lie from the award of the Munsif or of the Subordinate Judge when the value fell below Rs. 5,000 to the District Judge and a second appeal to the High Court. Except in so far as by sec. 21, the scope of the inquiry is restricted to a consideration of the interests of persons affected by the objections—and thus indirectly by the terms of the reference and perhaps also of the declaration (sec. 6)—it can be hardly urged with any show of reason that the Act contemplates the setting up of special Courts with special jurisdictions outside the scheme of Courts established by the Civil Courts Act, and governed in matters of procedure by the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, including sec. 110 of that Code (Act V of 1908). This would also appear to be so by reference to sec. 4 of the Code. Secs. 3 and 54 of the Land Acquisition Act therefore never contemplated placing any restrictions on the ordinary rights of appeal under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code to the King in Council. These sections, as we have already seen, were in fact intended to confer on the claimant in all cases the privilege of carrying the matter in first appeal before the High Court and obtaining its judgment on the evidence irrespective of the value at stake.

THAT THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE HAVE DRAWN a contrary inference from those provisions of the Act is due, it seems to us, to their taking the provisions of the sections mentioned and of sec. 53 in particular piecemeal and placing their interpretation on the language of those sections without reference to the context. Sec. 53 lays down that "save in so far as they may be inconsistent with anything contained in this Act, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure shall apply to all proceedings before the Court under the Act." The saving clause of this section was obviously added to guard against any conflict between the Code and the special provisions of the Act. There is no provision made in the Civil Procedure Code to regulate the procedure on a reference like that made under sec. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act. The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code have in view the institution of a suit by a Plaintiff and a resistance thereof by a Defendant, and can therefore apply only by analogy to proceeding before the Court to which a reference has been made against a Collector's award.

THIS, IT SEEMS TO US, AFFORDS A SUFFICIENT explanation for the enacting of sec. 53. That this is the only explanation, is further borne out by the analogous provisions of secs. 55, 83 and 86 of the Probate and Administration Act. If the decision of the Privy Council in the case under notice be correct then we may reasonably apprehend that the next appeal that is taken before the Judicial Committee in a matter arising out of a proceeding under the Probate and Administration Act might also be thrown out as incompetent—a contingency which few lawyers and fewer litigants will contemplate with equanimity.

AFTER WHAT WE HAVE SAID ON THE TRUE INTERPRETATION of the scope and provisions of the sections of the Land Acquisition Act already referred to, it seems hardly necessary to add further comments on the use of the expression "arbitration" and "arbitrator" in connection with the award of the judges on a reference by the Collector. Sec. 18 makes it clear that a reference may be demanded as well on a question of the preferential right of one amongst several rival claimants to the compensation awarded or of the apportionment thereof between them, as on the question of the amount of the compensation due to the owners from Government; that the reference may arise as often out of a contest between the Collector and the owner as out of a contest between co-owners, and that recourse is had to the Court solely in order to have these disputes judicially determined, subject, as provided by sec. 54, to an appeal on facts to the High Court. To describe the proceeding before the Court as "arbitration" and the Judges as "arbitrators" is surely not warranted by the provisions of the Act or the procedure followed in such cases.

IT MAY BE SAID THAT AFTER ALL NO HARM WILL be done by this decision as it will be always open to the Judicial Committee to grant special leave to appeal. But the concluding paragraph of their Lordships' judgment would dispel any doubt with regard to the matter. Their Lordships go on to say :

It is impossible to conceive anything more inconvenient than that a Court in this country should be called upon to review the determination of arbitrators as to the value of a piece of land in India—a mere question of fact—without the advantage of any local knowledge or the privilege, if it be a privilege, of seeing the cloud of witnesses who engaged the attention of two Judges of the Chief Court of Lower Burma for 45 days, or even the opportunity and the interest of viewing a property the value of which seems so extraordinarily difficult to discover.

The right of appeal always ensures a very careful consideration of both the fact and the law by the Courts below. Very large private interests are involved in these cases and Government being a party to them, it is very desirable that the right of appeal to the Judicial Committee should not be taken away in Land Acquisition cases. But if matters continue to be disposed of by the Judicial Committee in the manner they are being disposed of, of late, the taking away of the right of appeal will be more of an advantage to suitors than otherwise.

IT IS NO DOUBT CONCEIVABLE THAT WHEN IT IS not a mere question of fact or a mere question of the "value of a piece of land in India," their Lordships may feel disposed to entertain an application for special leave to appeal. But the Civil Procedure Code as also long-established practice of the Board have led people to believe that an appeal will lie as a matter of right whenever the value of the suit is Rs. 10,000, or upwards, provided there are not concurrent findings of facts by Courts in India. Land Acquisition cases often involve claims far exceeding that value, and we cannot conceive why the Board should feel deterred from taking up Land Acquisition appeals for hearing on the same terms as other appeals. The argument advanced in the paragraph quoted above, if pushed to its logical consequences, would shut out all appeals on facts from India to the Judicial Committee. The gravity of principles above laid down can scarcely be exaggerated and the curtailment of the jurisdiction of the Privy Council especially in cases where the Government is a party is sure to be felt as a serious grievance by the people.

Review.

INTRODUCTION TO THE REGULATIONS OF THE BENGAL CODE. By C. D. Field. Calcutta : Messrs. S. K. Lahiri & Co.

Field's Regulations of the Bengal Code is still a standard work to which a practitioner or a Judge cannot but refer with profit to guide him through the intricacies of land tenure in Bengal. The only pity is that a valuable work like this has been allowed to grow out of date. By far the most valuable part of the late Mr. Justice Field's work was however his introduction which has now been republished in the volume before us, evidently to supply the needs of students for the B. L. degree for whom it has been made a text-book.

In this little book we find not only a careful and detailed account of the land tenures prevailing in Bengal but also one of the growth of the entire judicial system of Bengal from out of the system as it prevailed in the days of the Mahomedan Rule. This latter part of the work was the result of patient industry and researches of the late Mr. Justice Field and it will always be read as a statement of the facts of a most important chapter in the legal history of British India.

The Calcutta University is to be congratulated for having selected this book as a text-book for the B. L. Examination. A study of this work will not only give students a good grounding in the complicated land system of Bengal and an insight into the modern legal history of Bengal, but may stimulate in some a spirit of research and lead to the further clearing up of an obscure portion of Indian History—the history of the transition from Moslem to British Rule.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before CARNUFF AND IMAM, JJ. REVISION No. 958 OF 1911. HARGOURI ROY AND OTHERS, Petitioners v. THE EMPEROR. 8th August 1912.

Criminal Procedure Code, secs. 190, cl. (e), 191.

The complainant in this case made some allegations of general ill-treatment against the Petitioners before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Jamooi while he was on tour. The Magistrate without examining the complainant held a judicial enquiry into the matter in the course of which the complainant and several witnesses were examined. As a result after enquiry the Magistrate selected one instance of ill-treatment and summoned the Petitioners under sec. 374, I. P. C., and ultimately convicted them.

The Petitioners moved the High Court and a Rule was issued on the ground that the circumstances under which the Sub-Divisional Magistrate took cognizance of the case showing that cognizance was taken under sec. 190, cl. (c) and the Magistrate not having complied with the provisions of sec. 191, Cr. P. C., the conviction of the Petitioners was liable to be set aside being made illegally and without jurisdiction.

Their Lordships made the Rule absolute on the ground on which it was issued.

Raiyat—Ijaradar, settlement by—Settlement-holder, status of, after expiration of ijara.

The appeal arose out of a suit for rent which was decreed by the Court below. It was found that the village in which the land was situated was let out to an ijaradar and that this ijaradar settled the land in suit with the Defendant in 1297 and collected rent from him at the rate of Rs. 15 odd. The ijara terminated at the end of 1300 and after that the Plaintiff's men continued to collect rent at that rate. In 1304 a registered kabuliyat was obtained from the Defendant at the rate of Rs. 30. The only question of importance that arose in the appeal was whether this kabuliyat was rendered invalid by sec. 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. On this point the Subordinate Judge said that sec. 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not apply as the Defendant had taken settlement of an old tenant's land which he did not possess before his purchase. The Defendant, at the time when he executed the kabuliyat had been a raiyat on this land for 7 years.

Held, if an ijaradar gave a settlement of a holding to any one, that person became a raiyat on the land.

Atal Chandra Rishi v. Lakhi Narain Ghose (10 C. L. J. 55) referred to.

The case was remanded for decision whether he was a settled raiyat of the village or not.

[PRIVY COUNCIL.]

OF LOWER BURMA.]

LORD MACNAGHTEN.

LORD SHAW.

SIR JOHN EDGE.

Heard, 26, June.

Judgment, 16, July.

THE RANGOON
BOTATOUNG COM-PANY, LIMITED,
v.
THE COLLECTOR,
RANGOON.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), secs. 18, 53, 54—High Court's decision on reference against valuation of Collector, if appealable to Privy Council—Appeal, right of, not given by express enactment, if may be assumed—Court of reference, position of, that of arbitrators—Decision on award—Valuation, question of, appeal to Privy Council on, inconvenience of.

Appellants whose land had been acquired for public purposes under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, being dissatisfied with the Collector's valuation sought a reference under sec. 18 to the "Principal Court of Original Jurisdiction" which in this case was the Chief Court of Lower Burma. The reference was heard and dismissed by a Bench of two Judges of that Court:

Held—That no appeal lay from that decision to the Privy Council.

Sec. 53 of the Land Acquisition Act makes the Code of Civil Procedure applicable only to proceedings before the Court of Reference, and sec. 54, to proceedings in the course of an appeal to the High Court—a special and limited appeal given by the Act from the award of the Court of Reference. The force of sec. 54 is exhausted when the appeal to the High Court is heard, and no further right of appeal is given by the Act.

A claimant in Land Acquisition proceedings does not, once he is admitted to the High Court, acquire all the rights of an ordinary suitor, including the right to carry an award made in an arbitration as to the value of land taken for public purposes up to the Privy Council, as if it were a decree of the High Court made in the course of its ordinary jurisdiction.

An appeal does not exist in the nature of things. A right of appeal from any decision of any tribunal must be given by express enactment.

SANDBACK CHARITY TRUSTEES v. THE NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE RAILWAY COMPANY (1) referred to.

This was an Appeal from an award of the Chief Court of Lower Burma, dated the 11th day of May 1908. The facts were briefly as follows:—

By a Notification, dated 1st March 1906, which was published in the Burma Gazette of the 3rd March 1906, the Local Government took action to acquire certain lands under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894) for and on behalf of the Port Commissioners. These lands formed three properties belonging respectively to the Rangoon Botatoung Company, Ltd., Sheikh Kadir Baksh, and the British India Steam Navigation Company, Ltd. The Collector made awards, and from these awards the two former owners applied for a reference to the Chief Court. These two references were at the request of the parties heard together, the evidence recorded in the Botatoung Company's case being treated as evidence in Kadir Baksh's case also. The Collector awarded in the case of the Botatoung Company's case Rs. 1,10,000 per acre exclusive of the 15 per cent. statutory allowance, and in Kadir Baksh's case Rs. 1,00,000 per acre exclusive of the same allowance. In both cases the parties agreed as to the amount awarded under all other heads of sec. 23 of the Act, and the only question for determination was the market value of the lands at the date of the publication of the Notification, that is, on the 3rd March 1906.

The learned Judges of the Chief Court (Hartnoll and Robinson, JJ.) held that the sum awarded by the Collector exceeded the compensation to which the Petitioners were entitled. The Appellants thereupon applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council and the Chief Court granted a certificate that the case fulfilled the requirements of sec. 596 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Hence this Appeal.

The Respondents took a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal, namely, that under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, no appeal from the award of the High Court lay to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. Bailhache, K. C., Mr. Sankey, K. C., and Mr. Jolly for the Appellants submitted that the preliminary objection was not well-founded. There was no case in which the question was expressly raised and decided, but as a matter of fact such appeals have been entertained and heard by the Judicial Committee. The Land Acquisition Act did not in terms forbid such an appeal. The case came within the provisions of sec. 596, C. P. C. Secs. 53 and 54 of the Land Acquisition Act made the Code of Civil Procedure applicable to such proceedings and an appeal to His Majesty in Council lay under that Code. Reference was made to the following cases to show that such appeals were heard by the Judicial Committee, Secretary of State v. Charles Worth (2), Ezra v. Secretary of State for India (3), Secretary of State for India v. India General Steam Navigation Company, Ltd. (4).

Mr. Buckmaster, K. C., and Mr. Sargant for the Respondent submitted that the Appellants had no right of appeal to His Majesty in Council. No such appeal was provided for by the Land Acquisition Act. There was no appeal from an award. An appeal lies only from "a decree or order" and an award is neither of them. Reference was made to secs. 3, 4, 11, 18, 21, 23, 31, 51, 53 and 54. Sec. 18 provided for a reference only and sec. 54 for the first time gives a right of appeal to the High Court. The Act provided for one appeal only and no more.

[MR. AMER ALI.—If the reference were heard by one Judge of the Chief Court, would there have been an appeal?]

Yes. There would have been one to the High Court. But the case having been heard by two Judges the right has merged. The only question for determination is the market value of the land and it was reasonable to believe that the Legislature intended that the awards of the Judges in India (who being on the spot were more fitted to judge such matters) should be final. The proceedings are in the nature of an arbitration. The Appellants must show that they had a right to appeal under some statute. Reference was made to Sandback Charity Trustees v. The North Staffordshire Railway Company (1), Ex parte County Council of Kent (5), In re Knight (6), Burgess v. Morton (7).

THE RANGOON BOTATOUNG COMPANY, LIMITED v. THE COLLECTOR, RANGOON.

Acquisition Act to the High Court, and thereafter the Code of Civil Procedure regulated the proceedings. The Appellants have taken the two steps that were necessary.

Their Lordships intimated that they would give effect to the preliminary objection and would deliver their reasons later on.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—In this case a preliminary objection was taken to the Appeal. Having heard the point fully argued, their Lordships came to the conclusion that the Appeal was incompetent and they intimated that on that ground they would humbly advise His Majesty that the Appeal should be dismissed with costs.

The Appeal purported to be an appeal as of right from an award of the Chief Court of Lower Burma. Some land belonging to the Appellants had been taken for public purposes under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894. In due course the Collector made his award. The Appellants did not accept it. They were dissatisfied with the amount of the Collector's valuation. On that ground and on that ground only they demanded, as they were entitled to do, that the matter should be referred to the Court under the provisions of the Act. The expression "the Court" in the Act is defined as meaning "a principal Civil Court of Original Jurisdiction." The reference was taken by two Judges of the Chief Court. They sat as "the Court" and also as the High Court to which an appeal is given by the Act from the award of "the Court." The hearing of the reference occupied 45 days. More than 100 witnesses were examined. A vast mass of documents was put in and the learned Judges at the request of the parties viewed the premises. Then they made an exhaustive award dealing minutely with the evidence, and they held that the award of the Collector had given the Appellants "all and probably more than the full market value of their property," and so they dismissed the reference with costs. They were precluded by the Act from awarding less than the amount awarded by the Collector.

It was admitted by the learned Counsel for the Appellants that it was incumbent upon him to show that there was a statutory right of appeal. As Lord Bramwell, then Bramwell, J., observed in the case of the Sandback Charity Trustees v. The North Staffordshire Railway Company (1): "An appeal does not exist in the nature of things. A right of appeal from any decision of any tribunal must be given by express enactment." A special and limited appeal is given by the Land Acquisition Act from the award of "the Court" to the High Court. No further right of appeal is given. Nor can any such right be implied. The learned Counsel for the Appellants relied both on sec. 53 and sec. 54 of the Act. Sec. 53 enacts that, "save in so far as they may be inconsistent with anything contained in this Act, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure shall apply to all proceedings before the Court under this Act." That enactment applies to an earlier stage in the proceedings and seems to have nothing to do with an appeal from the High Court. Sec. 54 is in the following terms:—

"54. Subject to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure applicable to appeals from original decrees, an appeal shall lie to the High Court from the award or from any part of the award of the Court in any proceedings under this Act."

That section seems to carry the Appellants no further. It only applies to proceedings in the course of an Appeal to the High Court. Its force is exhausted when the Appeal to the High Court is heard. Their Lordships cannot accept the argument or suggestion that when once the claimant is admitted to the High Court he has all the rights of an ordinary suitor, including the right to carry an award made in an arbitration as to the value of land taken for public purposes up to this Board as if it were a decree of the High Court made in the course of its ordinary jurisdiction.

It is impossible to conceive anything more inconvenient than that a Court in this country should be called upon to review the determination of arbitrators as to the value of a piece of land in India—a mere question of fact—without the advantage of any local knowledge or the privilege, if it be a privilege, of seeing the cloud of witnesses who engaged the attention of two Judges of the Chief Court of Lower Burma for 45 days, or even the opportunity and the interest of viewing a property the value of which seems so extraordinarily difficult to discover.

CHAUDHURI, J. } SM. KHETTERMONI DASSI
1912, }
6, May. } SM. KADAMBINI DASSI.

Hindu Law—Inheritance—Widow's right to inherit—"Malignant hostility" to husband, if disqualifies a widow from inheriting—Hostility, meaning of.

The only qualification necessary for a widow to entitle her to succeed to her husband is physical chastity.

Where a wife refused to come to her husband's house when sent for after he had married for a second time:

Held—That such conduct was not evidence of such hostility to her husband as disentitled her to her inheritance where there was no evidence of any misconduct.

This was a suit for partition brought by the Plaintiff, a widow of one Nilmoni Dey, who died on 22nd May 1910, against her co-widow, the Defendant.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Messrs. B. C. Mitter and N. Sircar for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. B. Chakravarti, A. N. Chaudhuri and M. N. Basu for the Defendant.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is a suit brought by a Hindu widow against her co-widow, for partition of the estate of her husband Nilmoni Dey, who died on the 22nd May 1910. The Plaintiff was married in January 1860 and the Defendant in 1866. It is admitted that these are the only two heirs whom he left him surviving. The Defendant, however, questioned the Plaintiff's right to succeed on the ground that she bore "malignant hostility and bitterness towards her husband all through her life." It has been strenuously argued on behalf of the Defendant that, under the Hindu Law, she is under the circumstances not entitled to succeed. The contention, as I have understood it, is this. That the word Patni (पत्नी) in the text of Yajñavalkya, II, 136-137, means lawfully wedded wife, one married according to one of the approved forms of marriage. The word etymologically means a wife who is an indispensable associate of her husband in religious rites and observances. That being so, she must be a sadhwi [साध्वी] which is defined in Manu thus:—

पतिं या नमिचरति मनोवाग्देहं संयता ।

सा भर्तृ लोकमाप्नोति सद्भिः साध्वीति चोच्यते ॥

Manu V, 165.

The passage is rendered by Sir William Jones thus—"While she who slights not her lord, but keeps her mind, speech and body devoted to him attains her heavenly mansion and is called sadhwi by good-men." I may mention that Haughton in his Institutes of Manu, Ed. 1825, p. 372, refers to this couplet and the next one as not found in the three copies of Medhatithi that he had the opportunity of consulting. These couplets, however, appear in Kulluk Bhatta's commentaries, and we may proceed upon the basis that they are not interpolations. His note is as follows:—

वाकमनसाभ्यामपि पतिं न यमिचरेदिति विधा
नार्थो देहिकयमिचारिणो नृतेन कृताया अय-

namely, that so far as Vāk and Manas, speech and mind, are concerned this verse contains the Vidhan (विधान) and that so far as the body is concerned, the mention of it is an Anuvad (अनुवाद) a repetition, superfluous or self-evident. It has to be remembered that the Manava Dharma Shastra (मानवधर्मशास्त्र) is a book of mixed religion, morality and law, and in a great many instances contains appeals to one's moral side and it is impossible to accept the whole of it as a legal thesis. These couplets occur in a chapter of miscellaneous character, dealing with edibles, impurities, and methods of purification, and finally with rules relating to the duties of women (stridharma) and can hardly be looked upon as anything more than directions for regulating one's life, some of them in the way of precepts or moral injunctions. Verse 166 says that a woman by this course of life acquires high renown in this world, and in the next, the same abode with her husband. It is quite clear that the word sadhwi has not received the wider meaning that has been given to it in Manu Smṛiti in dealing with the question of inheritance. In Yajñavalkya the passage about the right of a widow to inherit is the subject of a long commentary. We find that Briddha Manu as there quoted says that "the widow succeeds keeping unsullied her husband's bed, and persevering in religious observances (व्रते स्थिता)." Katyayana is also there quoted "Let the widow succeed to her husband's wealth, provided she be chaste," the word used being abyabhicharini (अव्यभिचारिणी), which admits of no ambiguity. Then we find in the Vyavahara Mayukha, sec. 8, Part II, Katyayana is again quoted, followed by a quotation from "Harita" which has been thus translated.

"If a woman, becoming a widow in her youth, be headstrong (suspected of incontinence), a maintenance must in that case be given to her, for the support of life," II Cole. Dig. 536 cccix. The word used is (कर्कशा) which has been translated as headstrong, (suspected of incontinence)—Sankitavyabhicharaya.—See Viramitrodaya, Ch. III, Part I, sec. 10. In Vivadachintamani, Harita is again quoted. The passage has been thus translated "If a young widow is untractable," &c., II Cole. Dig. 538 cccix. The commentator says that the chaste wife is entitled to the property. In the Vishwakosa one of the meanings given to the word Karkasa is "unchaste." "Vyabhicharini." In Saraswati Vilash, § 528, Vishnu is quoted thus: "The share allotted to women who transgress their limits may be resumed"—"who transgress their limits" means "unchaste." Narada is quoted. The passage has been thus translated "His women if they keep their husband's bed inviolate shall be maintained till their death, but if they do not they shall not be." Narada xiii, 26.

In the Dayabhaga these passages from Briddha Manu and Katyayana are quoted, and also another from Vyasa which has been thus translated, "after the death of her husband let a virtuous woman observe strictly the duty of continence," Dayabhaga, Chap. XI, sec. 1, § 43, II Cole. Dig. 528 cccc. I do not think there is any doubt whatsoever that the only disqualification for a widow to inherit her husband's estate is that one of physical unchastity. To give it a more extended sense, that she forfeits her right or does not become entitled to inherit unless she has kept her mind, speech and body devoted to her husband is not justified by the interpretation which has been put upon the passages quoted. This is also the meaning put upon them by Srikrishna in his commentary. He says sadhwi [साध्वी] means "not adulterous." As regards the authority of Srikrishna, Mr. Justice 'Dwarka Nath Mitter says that "he is considered a greater authority as being superior even to the authority of Dayabhaga." I know that a later commentator of note does not consider Srikrishna of such high authority. But there is no question, it seems to me, upon a comparison of all the commentaries on these passages, that sadhwi [साध्वी] means a chaste woman who keeps the bed of her husband inviolate. These passages were elaborately discussed in what is known as the "Chastity Case" by Justice Dwarka Nath Mitter. See Kery Kolitany v. Moneeram Kolita (1). The question raised and decided in that case was that a Hindu widow who was unchaste was not entitled to succeed. On page 19 of the judgment the following passage occurs: "It has been said that some of the texts quoted above refer to many other virtues besides chastity, and that the argument in favour of forfeiture would be equally strong in the case of the widow's derelictions in respect of those virtues, as in the case of her failure to preserve her chastity. But the answer to this objection is very plain. A chaste widow who has failed to perform her duties to-day may perform them on some future date. But a widow who has once sullied the bed of her lord, not only causes her husband's soul to fall into a region of torment, but becomes from that time absolutely incompetent to do anything for his spiritual welfare." He held that if a Hindu widow failed in her other duties she might expiate and inherit the estate, but their non-performance was not a disqualification.

It has been further argued that, according to Narada XIII, § 21, an enemy to his father पिद्विद takes no share of the inheritance, that such disqualification extends to "enmity to the propositus"—

(1) 18 B. L. R. 1 (1873).

SM. KHETTERMONI DASSI v. SM. KADAMBINI DASSI.

(Golap Shas'tri's Hindu Law, 4th Edition, page 362) and as all grounds of disqualification which exclude males apply equally as against female heirs (Mitakshara II, 10 § 8, Mayne : 7th Edition, page 811), the Plaintiff in this case is not entitled to inherit. It was further argued that if disobedience and hostility were minor grounds for forfeiture, removeable by penance, the Plaintiff could not inherit until she had performed the prescribed penance, and the case of Bhola Nath v. Mr. Sabitra (2) was cited in support of the contention, but what the nature of the penance is to be, has not been suggested, and need not be considered. Now the expression पितृद्विष is thus explained in Saraswati Vilash, § 152, "Those who hate their father, i.e., those who say, 'this is not my father, &c.'" For otherwise when the son hates his father because of the latter's partiality, a share is ordained for him." In the Dayakrama Sangraha, Chap. III, sec. 3, "an enemy to his father" is interpreted as "one who ill-treats his father, during his lifetime, or one who is averse to performing his obsequies when dead." In Vivada Ratnakara, Chap. V, "He who hates his father" is thus interpreted: "He who hates his father is the enemy of his father. Such hatred terminates in compassing the death of the father when he is alive and in refusing to offer for the benefit of his soul libations of water, &c., when he is dead." In Vivada Chintamani the commentary is: "'Enemy of the father,' one who beats his father while alive and is averse to perform his sraddha, &c., after his death." In Dayatatwa "an enemy to his father" is said to mean "one who abuses him by beating and the like while he is alive, and who is unwilling to perform his funeral obsequies when he is dead."

Assuming that malignant hostility excludes, there is not a particle of evidence of such or any hostility against the Plaintiff. The only witness was the Defendant herself and most of her evidence was hearsay. She is also shown to be altogether unworthy of credit, as shown by the fact that she claimed properties in her deposition as gifts against her own written statement in this case. All that her evidence comes to is that the Plaintiff refused to come to her husband when sent for. After the husband married a second time, the Plaintiff found it impossible to live with him owing to the treatment she received. That is all that we have against her, which is no evidence of hostility. The expression "dvesh" in Narad's text, according to the commentators, means physical violation coupled with a refusal to perform his sraddh, &c., and one of them says that the hatred must be such as "terminates in compassing the death" of the propositus. I hold that the Plaintiff is not disqualified because she did not live with her husband or even if she refused to live with him and her co-wife. There is no evidence at all that she was guilty of any misconduct, in body, speech or mind.

I therefore declare that she is entitled to inherit the estate of her husband equally with her co-widow. The parties agreed that if I took the view that the Plaintiff was entitled to share the inheritance with her co-widow, the estate to be divided amongst them consisted of Government promissory notes of the value of Rs. 1,09,000 and a house No. 25, Hidaram Baneji's Lane. I direct that the Government securities be divided between them in equal shares. The house is also to be divided into two equal shares in the usual way. The estate is to be held by them as Hindu widows.

Costs of the hearing of the issues raised will be treated as costs in a partition suit, that is to say, each party will bear her own costs before the decree for partition. All subsequent costs will be according to their respective shares. The Defendant will bear her own costs of the commission and pay the Plaintiff her costs thereof taxed for three sittings only. Costs of the enquiry as to maintenance will be taxed as costs in the cause. The amount due from the Plaintiff on account of Kali Charan Dey is to be debited to her share. All other undisposed of costs will be costs in the cause.

Plaintiff offering no evidence, if Defendant may prove case in written statement—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 9, r. 8.

When the Plaintiff offers no evidence the Court can only dismiss the suit for want of prosecution. In such a case if the Defendant offers evidence in support of his case the Code of Civil Procedure does not provide for such evidence being received. When, however, the Plaintiff has adduced evidence, then notwithstanding that at the close of the Plaintiff's case, the Judge has formed an opinion in the Defendant's favour, the Defendant can insist on calling evidence to prove the case made in his written statement.

EXPARTE JACOBSON, IN RE PINCOFFS
(1) referred to.

This action was brought for the recovery of the sum of Rs. 2,69,000 from the National Jute Mills Co., Ltd., alleged to be the price of jute sold by the Plaintiff to the Co., such jute having been purchased for Rs. 2,42,000 as salvaged jute from the New Zealand Insurance Co., Ltd., of which Messrs. Andrew Yule & Co. were the managing agents. The National Jute Mills Co. in their written statement alleged that they never purchased any jute and Messrs. Andrew Yule & Co. in their written statement alleged that they had never sold any such jute and that the whole of the transactions mentioned in the plaint were false, fictitious and fraudulent and had no existence whatsoever in fact.

On the case being called on, no one appeared for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Norton (Messrs. Pugh and Pearson appearing with him) for the National Jute Mills Co.

As no one represents the Plaintiff the suit will naturally be dismissed. He would, however, like that some opportunity should be given him to clear the character of his clients against whom certain allegations were made in the plaint. He was prepared to put a witness into the box for the purpose.

Mr. Jackson (Messrs. Gregory and Langford James with him) for Messrs. Andrew Yule & Co. said that he was anxious to do the same thing, namely, to call a witness.

(1) 22 Ch. D. 312 (1882).

KESRI CHAND KOTHARI v. NATIONAL JUTE MILLS Co., Ltd.

[FLETCHER, J.—I cannot allow that. You are not called upon to answer a case until the Plaintiff gives evidence.]

Mr. Jackson.—What we want is to clear our character. The effect of disposing of the case like this might give rise to all manner of insinuations and suggestions. Your Lordship may have an application for restoration of the case. Furthermore he had come across an authority—a decision of Jessel M. R. in the Court of Appeal—under which the defence could insist upon evidence being heard, though the circumstances governing that case were not precisely those that prevail here. His contention with regard to the matter was that he was entitled to insist on a portion of his evidence being taken even though his Lordship was prepared to decide in his favour.

[FLETCHER, J.—There is nothing in our Code to suggest any such procedure.]

I submit that our Code does not differ from the English Code. The Judicature Act does not say that you are entitled to do it.

[FLETCHER, J.—There is nothing in the Judicature Act as to the form of trial.]

Your Lordship will permit me to draw your attention to the case. It is a decision of Sir George Jessel sitting in appeal, Ex parte Jacobson, In re Pincoffs (1).

—I only bring this matter to your Lordship's notice because it is a matter of considerable importance. We have had all the issues framed with reference to it. There are a number of other suits following this.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

FLETCHER, J.—There is nothing to say in this suit. The Plaintiff does not appear and Mr. Jackson and Mr. Norton on behalf of the Defendants say that they wish to open their case. That is a procedure which is not contemplated by the Code of Civil Procedure. The decision of Sir George Jessel in Ex parte Jacobson, In re Pincoffs (1) does not apply to this case at all. That case was that when the Master had heard the evidence given on behalf of the Plaintiff he said he was prepared to decide on the Defendants' side without calling for any evidence to be given for or on behalf of the Defendants. That of course is a position which the Defendant is not bound to take up. Under our Code notwithstanding that at the close of the Plaintiff's case the Judge has formed an opinion in favour of the Defendant, the Defendant can say that he is entitled to give evidence in proof of the case he has made in his own written statement; so that in the case of an appeal there may be no remand but the whole case may be disposed of. That is not a case where the Plaintiff offers no evidence. When the Plaintiff offers no evidence the Court has no jurisdiction except to dismiss the suit for want of prosecution. This case must be dealt with on that footing. The Plaintiff must pay to the Defendant the costs of this suit and of the commission to England on Scale No. 2.

Mr. Jackson.—Will your Lordship also include reserve cost, if any?

THE COURT.—Yes.

Messrs. Leslie and Hinds, Solicitors for the Defendants.

APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 109
OF 1911.

JENKINS, C. J.	{	PANCH DUAR THAKUR,
CHAPMAN, J.		and another, Judgment-
1912.		debtors, Appellants,
23, April.		v.
		MANI RAUT, Decree-holder, Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), secs. 2, 47, Or. 21, r. 66—Sale proclamation, valuation for purposes of—Order determining value if appealable.

An order by an executing court under Or. 21, r. 66, of the Civil Procedure Code, determining the valuation of immoveable properties attached and sought to be sold in execution of a decree is not appealable as a decree.

DEOKI NANDAN SINGH v. BANSI SINGH
(1) followed.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 27th of February 1911 against an order of Babu Charu Chandra Mukerjee, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Darbhanga, dated the 20th of January 1911.

The Respondent, decree-holder, applied on the 27th January 1910 for execution of a decree which she had recovered against the Appellants or their predecessor-in-title for Rs. 8,931-1-6 p., and costs amounting to Rs. 897-10 ans. 9 p., and attached certain immoveable properties belonging to the latter the value of which she assessed approximately at Rs. 11,000. The Appellants preferred an objection on the 14th June 1910, alleging that the real value of the property was not less than Rs. 65,000.

On 14th January 1911, the Court recorded the following order: "The judgment-debtors have put in the khatian which is relied upon by both sides. No other evidence is adduced. The decree-holder has filed the copy of the valuation register." On the 20th January 1911, the Court passed the following order: "The pleaders have calculated the value of Bhatgawan on a reference to the valuation-roll and it has been found that its value is Rs. 10,000. I assess the value accordingly. That of Maharajpur is found to be Rs. 28,000. I assess the value accordingly."

Against this order the judgment-debtors appealed on the ground that the properties had been undervalued, that the pleader for the Appellants had no hand in calculating the value of the properties, and that the Court below should not have proceeded on the materials prepared by the pleaders for the decree-holder alone, but should have examined the witnesses who were called and tendered in Court and admitted in evidence the documents produced by the Appellants.

Babus Baldeo Narayan Singh and Jyotish Chandra Sarker for the Appellants.

Babu Shib Chandra Palit for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

JENKINS, C. J.—This is an Appeal from an order, and it is objected on the part of the Respondent that no appeal lies. The point in dispute is one that arises under Or. XXI, r. 66, and the only point we have to consider is whether a determination of a matter under that Rule is a decree and as such within sec. 47 and so appealable. There are a number of decisions on the old Code, which favour the view that an appeal lies. On the new Code, however, there is one decision which has been brought to our notice, that is the decision of Mr. Justice Mookerjee in Deoki Nandan Singh v.

PANCH DUAR THAKUR v. MANI RAUT.

Bansi Singh (1). I am in complete agreement with Mr. Justice Mookerjee's view of this matter, and having regard to the new definition of the word 'decree' in sec. 2, sub-sec. (2) of the Code, I do not feel that it is necessary to go back to the earlier decisions which were based on a different definition.

The result is that, in my opinion, the preliminary objection must prevail, and the Appeal must be dismissed with costs, hearing-fee 3 gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

26th of May 1908 against an order of Babu S. C. Ganguly, Subordinate Judge of Jessore, dated the 15th of February 1908, affirming a decision of Babu Pramatha Nath Bhattacharjee, Munsif of Satkhira, dated the 5th of December 1906.

The suit out of which the appeal arose was for recovery of khas possession of certain rent-paying and rent-free lands described in Schedules ka, kha and ga to the plaint, after declaration of Plaintiffs' title by auction-purchase to the same.

The Plaintiffs alleged that the lands in suit belonged to Serajuddy Sheikh and others, the predecessors of the Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, that the interest of the said owners was purchased at auction by Plaintiff No. 1 and his brother one Bonamali Ghosh, deceased, the predecessor of the Plaintiffs Nos. 2, and 3, on 24th November 1879, that the said auction sale was confirmed on the 21st December 1879, and a sale-certificate obtained, that subsequently, on 14th February 1881, the purchasers obtained delivery of possession of the properties through Court and since then were in actual possession of the same, that the Defendants, Nos. 1 to 3 having, in August 1891, wrongfully dispossessed the Plaintiffs Nos. 1, 2 and the husband of Plaintiff No. 3, the latter three persons brought a suit for recovery of possession of the said lands and obtained a decree which was upheld up to the High Court, that subsequently they got possession of the properties in execution of the said decree and remained in actual possession of the same until 1311 when the Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in combination with the other Defendants wrongfully dispossessed them therefrom. Hence the suit.

Defendants Nos. 5 and 7 contested the suit alleging inter alia that in the exe-

This contention of the Defendants was overruled by both the lower Courts and the suit was decreed on the merits in the Plaintiffs' favour, whereupon the Defendants preferred this second appeal.

Babu Satindra Nath Mukerjee for the Appellants.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy and Harendra Krishna Mookerjee for the Respondents.

In support of this appeal, the only argument which has been advanced on behalf of the Appellants is that the lower Courts erred in law in not holding that the suit was barred by limitation. It has first been contended that the lower Courts should have held that the suit was barred under the provisions of Art. 120 of Schedule II of the old Limitation Act (XV of 1877). In this case, an order was passed in favour of the present Appellants under sec. 332, C. P. C., on the 7th August 1897, and the present suit was instituted on the 16th December 1905. It is contended that the suit was barred under the provisions of Art. 120 of the Limitation Act, because it was not brought within six years from the date of the order passed under sec. 332, C. P. C. In our opinion, this contention cannot prevail. The suit which has been brought by the Plaintiff is a suit for possession of immoveable property after establishment of title and for such a suit limitation was provided by Art. 142 of Schedule II of Act XV of 1877. Under that article, the period of limitation is twelve years and the suit has been instituted within that period.

It has next been contended that, if Art. 120 does not apply, Art. 11 or Art. 13 of the Second Schedule of Act XV of 1877 would apply. As to this argument, we have only to observe that in Art. 11 no mention is made of orders under sec. 332, though orders under other sections are mentioned, and that that article has clearly no application to an order under sec. 332. As regards the application of Art. 13, it is only necessary to observe that, under the provisions of sec. 332 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, the suit which the Opposite Party had to bring, was a suit to establish his right to the property, and not a suit to set aside the order under sec. 332. Art. 13 of Schedule II of the old Limitation Act, therefore, cannot apply, and this, in fact has been held by the Madras High Court in the case of Ayyasami v. Samiya (1). The points taken on the ground of limitation, therefore, fail.

Another point which has been taken is that, as the Appellants were not parties to the suit in execution of the decree in which the Plaintiffs are alleged to have taken symbolical possession, they are not bound by that proceeding, and that the Plaintiffs, by reason of that fact, are not entitled to claim that they are saved from the bar of limitation. This point, however, was not considered by the lower

MAINDI SARDAR v. GORA CHAND GHOSH.

Appellate Court, and there is a finding by that Court in the following words:—"I have no doubt that the Plaintiffs had actual and not constructive possession." That is a finding of fact which precludes us from taking up that point in second appeal.

The result, therefore, is that the points taken in support of the appeal fail and the Appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Public Demands Recovery Act (I, B. C., of 1895, as amended by Act I, B. C., of 1897), sec. 19, sub-sec. (2)—Suit to declare Defendant's purchase of land at certificate sale benami for Plaintiff, if maintainable—Civil Procedure Code (Act IV of 1882), sec. 317, if applies.

By virtue of sub-sec. 2 of sec. 19 of the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1895, as amended by Act I, B. C., of 1897, the provisions of sec. 317 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 (which correspond with those of sec. 66 of the Code of 1908) apply to the case of a purchaser at a sale in enforcement and execution of a certificate issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act and a suit by the Plaintiff for a declaration that the Defendant's purchase of certain lands in execution of such a certificate was benami on behalf of the Plaintiff was barred by the provisions of sec. 317 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882.

HARI CHARAN SINGH v. CHANDRA KUMAR DEY (4) followed.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 30th of March 1910 against the decree of Babu Danda Dhari Biswas, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Chittagong, dated the 17 h of December 1909, reversing the decree of Babu Narendra Nath Neogy, Munsif of Cox's Bazar, dated the 28th of April 1909.

The Plaintiff alleged that the Defendant who was his tehsildar purchased the lands in suit at a certificate sale with Plaintiff's money and benami for Plaintiff, that although kabuliya's had been nominally taken from the tenants in Defendant's name, the lands had been, ever since the purchase, in Plaintiff's possession, that Defendant having been recently dismissed by the Plaintiff for misconduct had commenced interfering with Plaintiff's possession and was trying to set up his own right in the lands. Plaintiff prayed for declaration of his title, and for khas possession in case Defendant should deny Plaintiff's present possession.

The Defendant in reply asserted his own title by purchase and possession and further urged that sec. 317 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 was a bar to the suit.

The Munsif found in Plaintiff's favour on the merits but held that the suit was not maintainable by virtue of sec. 317 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Subordinate Judge on appeal agreed with the Munsif's findings on the merits and decreed the suit holding sec. 317 of the Civil Procedure Code to be inapplicable.

The Defendant preferred this second Appeal.

Babu Khitish Chandra Sen for the Appellant.

Babu Dharendra Lal Khastgir for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT, OF THE COURT was as follows :—

CARNDUFF, J.—The short point raised by this appeal is as to whether the provisions of sec. 317 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, which correspond with those of sec. 66 of the Code of 1908 and bar a suit against a certified purchaser buying benami at a sale in execution of a decree, apply to the case of a purchaser at a sale in enforcement and execution of a certificate issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1895 (Being Act I of 1895), by virtue of sub-sec. (2) of sec. 19 of the said Act.

The application to such certificates of sec. 244 of the old Code, in Chap. XIX of which both that section and sec. 317 find place, has been the subject of a number of conflicting decisions. Thus, in Umedali Bhuya v. Rajlakshmi Debya (1), Brett and Woodroffe, JJ., held that sec. 244 was applicable; whereas in Raghubans Sahai v. Ful Kumari (2), Harington and Mookerjee, JJ., ruled that it was inapplicable. But as regards sec. 317 there is, so far as I know, only one reported case, namely, that of Ambika Frosad v. Gopal Buksh Das (3), in which Banerjee and Rampini, JJ., expressed an opinion against the applicability of the provision. That opinion, however, was really an obiter dictum, the case having been decided on other grounds, and the learned Judges were then construing sub-sec. (2) of sec. 21 of the Public Demands Recovery Act of 1895, as it was enacted in the first instance, when it ran as follows :—The procedure prescribed in Chap. XIX (with the exception of sec. 310A) shall, so far as it is applicable, be the procedure followed in execution proceedings to enforce such certificate and realise the amount recoverable thereunder.

Sec. 19, sub-sec. (2), which has, by sec. 12 of the Bengal Public Demands Recovery (Amendment) Act, 1897, (Bengal Act I of 1897), been made to take the place of the earlier provision, is, however, very differently expressed in these terms :—

"Such certificate may be enforced and executed in the manner provided by Chap. XIX of the Code of Civil Procedure for the enforcement and execution of decrees for money; and all the provisions of that chapter, except sec. 310A thereof, shall apply so far as they are applicable."

Now the words of the present provision seem to me to be perfectly clear, and I would construe them exactly as they were construed by Woodroffe, J., in Hari Charan Singh v. Chandra Kumar Dey (4). They begin by declaring that certificates are to be enforced and executed as if they were decrees for money under the Civil Procedure Code; and then they go on expressly to render applicable, so far as may be, all the secs. 223 to 343 to be found in Chap. XIX of that Code, with one carefully specified exception. What we are now asked by the learned Vakil for the Respondent to do is to qualify the latter part of the enactment by in-serting the words "for the enforcement and execution of a decree" after the words "that chapter," or by adding after the word "applicable" the words "for the enforcement and execution of a decree." I think that it is not open to us to do anything of the kind. It seems to me, indeed, that the only argument in favour of the Respondent's view is that mentioned by the lower Appellate Court, namely, that if sub-sec. (2) of the new sec. 19 be sufficient to draw all the provisions of Chap. XIX of the old Code, then the new sec. 20, which explicitly applies to secs. 311 and 313 of that chapter, becomes superfluous. But that is an argument which, standing alone, seems to me to carry but little weight: it is useful only as an additional argument where there are already others to be supported. For it is well known that the Legislature, sometimes it may be per incuriam, and sometimes doubtless Pro majori cautela not infrequently commits itself to redundant provisions; and, if the construction which I have indicated makes sec. 20 of the amended Act superfluous, my reply is that the construction for which the learned Vakil for the Respondent contends, reduces the latter part of sub-sec. (2) of sec. 19 to a similar superfluity. In other words, if the latter part of that sub-section is to be read as limited to such provisions only as bear upon enforcement and execution, then it carries the earlier part not a step further.

In my view the only limitation upon the application of any of the provisions (other than those of sec. 310A) contained in Chap. XIX of the old Code is that imposed by the words "so far as they are applicable," and I can find nothing in sec. 317 of that Code in any sense inapplicable to a purchase at a sale in execution of a certificate. On the contrary, its provisions are salutary and appropriate, and there is no difficulty whatever in applying them mutatis mutandis, to purchasers at such sales.

The result is that the Respondent's suit was, in my opinion, rightly dismissed by the original Court. This Appeal must, therefore, be allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court discharged, and that of the Court of first instance restored, with costs throughout.

CHAPMAN, J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 69—Decree for rent against recorded tenant who had sold his share before the whole of the amount sued for fell due—Sale in execution set aside by deposit by a co-sharer—Latter's right to recover from recorded tenant—Contribution, suit for—Suit brought after recorded tenant ceased to own any interest in the tenure if suit of Small Cause Court nature—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 41—Second appeal—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 102, Or. 21, r. 89.

Plaintiff owned a 3/7th and the Defendant No. 1 a 2/7th share in a tenure. In the beginning of 1308, B. S., the latter transferred his share to a stranger. Thereafter the landlord sued Defendant No. 1, who was the sole recorded tenant, for arrears of rent for the years 1307 and 1308 and had the tenure sold. The sale was set aside under sec. 310A, Civil Procedure Code, (1882), upon the application of the Plaintiff who deposited the whole amount with the statutory compensation to the purchaser. Subsequently he sued for recovery of two-sevenths of the sum deposited from the Defendant No. 1 without making the latter's vendee a party or asking any relief from him :

Held—That the Defendant as the recorded tenant was "bound by law" to pay the amount of the decree passed against him, within the meaning of sec. 69, Contract Act, and the Plaintiff as a person interested in the payment of the debt within that section was entitled to be reimbursed by the Defendant No. 1 ; and the fact that he had transferred his share before the arrears for 1308 accrued due was no defence against the portion of the claim which related to that year.

Held: further—That the fact that at the date of the institution of the suit the Defendant No. 1 had no interest in the tenure did not put the case outside the scope of Art. 41 of the Second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, and the provisions of sec. 102 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, restricting the right of second appeal, did not apply to it.

KRISHNA v. GOPI (1) explained and distinguished.

Quære :—Whether the Plaintiff was in law entitled to recover more than 2/7th from the Defendant No. 1.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 4th of April 1910 against the decree of Babu Jogendra Nath Bose, Additional Subordinate Judge of Zillah Rajshahye, dated the 17th of May 1909, modifying the decree of Babu Jadav Chandra Bhattacharjee, Munsif of Nattore, dated the 16th of May 1908.

The Plaintiff, the Defendant No. 1 and some others were co-sharers of a putni down to the end of 1307. At the end of 1307, the Defendant No. 1 sold his interest to Raja Ramoni Kanta Roy of Chowgram by a registered kobala. The name of the purchaser not having been registered in the sherista of the zemindar, the latter brought a rent suit (being Suit No. 356 of 1902) on account of the rent of the putni for the years 1307 and 1308 against Defendant No. 1 alone. A decree for Rs. 346-7½ annas was passed ex parte in that suit. The zemindar then executed the decree and brought the putni tenure to sale. The Plaintiff thereafter had the sale set aside on paying the decretal money with costs and interest plus the purchaser's compensation. The Plaintiff instituted the present suit to recover Rs. 146-2-4 pies from the Defendant No. 1 as the sum proportionately due on account of his share of the property. The other co-sharers, it was stated, had paid their shares of the debt to the Plaintiff. The Defendant No. 1 did not dispute the allegation of the Plaintiff and did not also deny that the amount claimed was due on account of the share of the property which belonged to him down to the end of 1307. But his contention was that as he had parted with the property, he was no longer liable to contribute, and that the amount should be realised from Raja Ramoni Kanta Roy of Chowgram who ought to be made a party to this suit.

The Munsif passed a decree for the claim in full but on appeal the Subordinate Judge held that the Defendant No. 1 was not bound to reimburse the Plaintiffs in respect of whatever fell due during the year 1308. The Plaintiff preferred this second Appeal.

Babu Rama Kanta Bhattacharyya for the Respondents took a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal. The appeal was valued at Rs. 75 and the suit being cognizable by the Court of Small Causes, there was no second appeal. The suit was not exempted under Art. 41 of the Sch. II to the Small Cause Courts Act. Krishna v. Gopi (1).

Babu Jotindra Nath Lahiri for the Appellants submitted that the suit clearly fell under the exception of Art. 41. Krishna v. Gopi (1) does not apply under the new Act. The decision was obsolete. Relied upon Bhatoo Singh v. Ramoo Mahton (2).

[RICHARDSON, J.—But you are not a co-sharer in respect of the rent for the year 1308.]

The nature of the suit is to be determined by the pleadings. The portion of my claim for the year 1307 was certainly not cognizable by the Small Cause Court, and I could not split up my cause of action. The liability was under a decree. The Defendant cannot get behind his liability as determined by the decree obtained by the landlord. It was not open to him now to say that he had parted with his interest in the tenure. All those defences he could take only when the landlord brought his suit for arrears against him alone. Besides we do not know what his covenants with his vendee may be. It may be that he stipulated to clear up all arrears. The kobala is not before your Lordships. I was interested in the payment and the suit clearly comes within the broad terms of sec. 69 of the Contract Act. The provisions of the Contract Act are not exhaustive with regard to suits for contribution. See Ajodhya Singh v. Jamroo Lal (3), Umesh Chandra v. Khulna Loan Co. (4). Manindra Chandra v. Jamaher Kumari (5) also is in my favour.

Babu Rama Kanta Bhattacharyya.—I did not derive any benefit. I had already parted with my interest. The landlord should have made the purchaser a party.

Babu Jotindra Nath Lahiri in reply.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

STEPHEN, J.—The Plaintiffs and others including the Defendant No. 1 were co-sharers in a certain putni tenure, the share of the Plaintiff being three-sevenths of the whole and that of the Defendant No. 1 two-sevenths. It appears however that the name of the Defendant No. 1 was alone recorded in the landlord's books as the holder of the tenure. The tenure, therefore, so far as the landlord was concerned was represented by that Defendant. In that state of things in the year 1307 the latter sold his share of the tenure to a stranger who is not a party to the suit, and the case has been argued on the footing that the share passed to the vendee with effect from the beginning of the year 1308. Subsequently the landlord brought a suit for recovery of arrears of rent of the tenure in respect of the years 1307 and 1308, and no steps having been taken for the rectification of the landlord's books in which the name of the Defendant No. 1 still stood as the holder of the tenure, the suit was brought and a decree was obtained against him alone. In execution of the decree the tenure was sold by auction but the sale was set aside under the provisions of sec. 310A of the Code of 1882 upon the Plaintiff depositing in Court the sum of Rs. 383-8-6 consisting of the amount (Rs. 358-8-6) due under the decree and the amount (Rs. 25) due as statutory compensation to the auction-purchaser. The Plaintiff's claim in the present suit relates to the sum so deposited and may be stated as follows. Deducting three-sevenths of the whole as payable in respect of his own share of the putni, he seeks to recover two-sevenths from the Defendant No. 1, liability for the balance being assigned in the plaint to other shareholders who have since paid what was due from them and with whom in this appeal we are not concerned. The Defendant No. 1 by his written statement denied all liability on the ground that he had parted with his share of the tenure. The first Court found in the Plaintiff's favour and gave him a decree for the whole amount of his claim against the Defendant No. 1. On an appeal preferred by the latter the Subordinate Judge in the Court below held that he was liable only in respect of so much of the claim as could be attributed to default in the payment of rent due for the year 1307 and that no liability rested upon him in respect of the year 1308. The Subordinate Judge accordingly modified the decree of the first Court and reduced the amount recoverable by the Plaintiff thereunder by one-half. The Plaintiff has appealed to this Court on the ground that no such reduction should have been made.

Two questions have been urged before us. The first arises upon a preliminary objection taken on the Respondent's behalf to the admissibility of the appeal. It is contended that inasmuch as at the date of the institution of the suit, the Respondent had no interest in the tenure, the suit falls outside the scope of Art. 41 of the Second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and being therefore a suit of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes no second appeal lies (sec. 102, Civil Procedure Code). The second question is as to the liability of the Respondent in respect of the year 1308. He no longer disputes his liability in respect of the year 1307.

Before dealing with these questions it will be convenient to indicate the nature of Respondents' position in the suit brought by the landlord.

As regards the year 1308 the Appellants' claim against the Respondent is based upon the fact that the decree obtained by the landlord was made against the Respondent alone. Now it may be—and for the present purpose it must be assumed—that the landlord was entitled to sue the Respondent alone. But it must be admitted that as between himself and the other shareholders in the tenure during the period to which the landlord's suit related, the Respondent occupied the position of Defendant in that suit in a representative capacity. He represented the shareholders for the time being. As regards the year 1307 he represented himself and others. As regards the year 1308, he had then ceased to have any interest in the tenure, and under the cloak of his name the real Defendants were his vendee, the Appellant and others.

The fact then that as between himself and the other co-sharers for the time being the Respondent as Defendant in the landlord's suit filled a representative capacity has to be borne in mind in dealing with the questions which were argued before us.

The first of these questions is decided by the frame of the suit as disclosed in the pleadings. From this there can be no doubt that the Plaintiff's claim was based on the assertion that he was a co-sharer with the Defendant. The Plaintiff has indeed sued on the assumption that Defendant No. 1 was a co-sharer in 1308 an assumption which is incorrect in fact, and the purchaser is not included in the suit as perhaps he might have been : but this cannot alter the nature of the suit as it stands. The case of Krishna Kamini v. Gopi Mohun (1) cited by the Respondent has no bearing on the present case, as it was not a suit for contribution between co-sharers, and was decided with reference not to Art. 41 of the Second Schedule to Small Cause Court Act, but to an earlier enactment. As regards the second question the case is not so clear. In the suit brought by the landlord the present Respondent alone was sued because he was the registered tenant. In so far as other persons, including his own vendee in 1308, were interested in the property in respect of which he was sued, he was therefore as between him and them their representative, and whether he was a co-sharer as was the case in 1307 or was not, as was the case in 1308, his position as their representative would be the same. Had he paid anything which was in fact due from them he might no doubt have his remedy against them. But his remedies against others cannot affect his liability to the landlord when once a decree against him is passed. He then becomes "bound by law to pay" the decreed amount to the landlord, in the terms of sec. 69 of the Contract Act. There is no doubt that the Plaintiff was a person interested in the payment of this debt, and the consequence follows that he is liable to be "reimbursed" by the Respondent. In terms this seems to give the Plaintiff a right to recover the whole of the money that he has paid to the landlord. It cannot however be supposed that he could compel the Respondent to pay him money which the Respondent became "bound by law" to pay as his representative. But is it necessary to read any further restrictions into the very general terms of sec. 69 ? No question arises here as to the Respondent's liability to reimburse to the Plaintiff the money which he paid, but which was really due from the other original co-sharers in respect of their shares ; because those co-sharers have repaid those sums to the Plaintiff. But where the Respondent has introduced a new co-sharer, whom he represents as much as he does the other co-sharers, is there any reason for saying that the reimbursement is to stop short of the money paid for the benefit of the assignee of the man bound by law to pay, who also represents him ? No clear authority has been produced before us to show that this section should be considered not to apply to co-sharers ; and if it does the law seems to cast the burden of collection from defaulting co-sharers whose common interests are affected by a decree on the person bound by law to pay rather than on the person who in fact pays because he is interested in the payment, and this consideration applies with special force when such person is the assignor of one who may be taken to be a defaulting co-sharer. For these reasons we consider that the Appellant is entitled to recover from the Respondent the amount he has paid in respect of the rent of the Respondent's purchaser for 1308.

The Appeal is therefore allowed. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside, and that of the Munsif restored. The Appellant is entitled to his costs in this Appeal.

Revenue Sale Law (Act XI of 1859), sec. 37—Onus of proof—Lakhiraj or mal lands.

In a suit for khas possession free of incumbrance of lands on the ground that they were included within a taluk purchased by the Plaintiff at a revenue sale it was found that the Defendants held certain rent-free tenures within the estate and that these tenures existed from before the Permanent Settlement.

Held—That the onus was on the Plaintiff to prove that the lands in suit were included within the mal lands of the estate.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 19th of August 1908 against the decree of Babu Kishori Lal Sen, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Dacca, dated the 8th of May 1908, reversing the decree of Babu Tarak Nath Bose, Munsif at Munshigunj, dated the 9th of August 1907.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Joges Chandra Roy and Chandra Kanta Ghosh for the Appellants.

Babu Harendra Narain Mitter for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The Plaintiffs-Respondents in this Appeal are the purchasers of estate No. 230 on the roll of the Collectorate at Dacca, at a sale for arrears of Government revenue and, by virtue of that purchase, they claim to be entitled to recover khas possession of certain lands which are admittedly in the possession of the Defendants-Appellants. The Plaintiffs instituted the present suit against the Defendants apparently under sec. 37 of Act XI of 1859, claiming to be entitled to recover possession of the lands in the estate which they had purchased as it was at the time of the original settlement and free from all incumbrances which had subsequently been imposed upon it. The Defendants claimed to be in possession of the lands in suit under a lakhiraj title and they alleged that the Plaintiffs had no right to eject them from the lands or to recover khas possession. The lakhiraj title which the Defendants set up dated from before the Permanent Settlement. The defence, therefore, was that the suit brought to eject them under the terms of sec. 37 of Act XI of 1859 could not succeed.

The Munsif supported the plea set up by the Defendants. He held that it was proved that the lands were within the estate purchased by the Plaintiffs but he found that the Defendants were in possession of the lands and that they had proved the lakhiraj title which they had set up and that that lakhiraj title was in existence from before the Permanent Settlement. In these circumstances, he held that, as the Defendants claimed the lands in suit under cover of that lakhiraj title, the onus rested on the Plaintiffs to prove that the lands from which they claimed to eject the Defendants were mal lands of the estate and not lakhiraj lands covered by the Defendants' title. He found that the Plaintiffs had failed to prove that the lands in suit were mal lands of the estate which they had purchased and, therefore, he held that the suit must fail.

On appeal, the lower Appellate Court has set aside the judgment and decree of the Court of first instance and has decreed the Plaintiffs' suit. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court, in disposing of the case, held that the Plaintiffs had proved that the lands in suit were included within the estate purchased by them and that the Defendants had proved that they held certain rent-free tenures in that estate and that these tenures existed from before the Permanent Settlement; but, finding that the Defendants had failed to prove that the plaint lands formed any part of the said rent-free tenures or that the said lands were held as parts of the said tenures in the time of the original grantee or afterwards, he held that the Defendants had failed to prove a prima facie case which the Plaintiffs might be called upon to rebut.

The Defendants have appealed and in support of their appeal, it is urged that the lower Appellate Court erred in law in holding that, in this case, the onus lay on the Defendants to prove that the lands in suit were covered by their lakhiraj title. It is contended that, as the Defendants were admittedly in possession of the lands in suit and as both the lower Courts have found that the Defendants have established a lakhiraj title to lands within the ambit of the estate purchased by the Plaintiffs, therefore, it becomes a question, as between the Plaintiffs and the Defendants of parcel or no parcel and the onus lay on the Plaintiffs to prove that the lands from which they claimed to eject the Defendants were mal lands of the estate. In support of this contention, reliance is placed on the decisions of this Court in the cases of Bacharam v. Peary Mohun (1) and Narendra v. Bishun Chandra (2). Those two cases, no doubt, related to suits for the resumption of invalid lakhiraj lands; but it is contended that the same principle would apply in the present case and that this is clear from the decision of this Court in the case of Rajendro Kumar v. Mohim Chandra (3). In that case, the learned Judges of this Court relied on certain passages in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Hunryhur v. Madab (4). The case before their Lordships of the Privy Council was one brought by a zemindar to compel the Defendant to pay rent. In that suit, the Defendant claimed the land in respect of which rent was sued for, excepting a small portion, as his lakhiraj. Their Lordships held that an admission made with reference to some of the lands in question by the Defendant that they were included within the estate of the Plaintiff was not by itself sufficient to relieve the Plaintiff from the onus of proving his case, namely, that he was entitled to recover rent in respect of it from the Defendant. Their Lordships remarked:—"It was, at most, an admission that the lands were within the ambit of the estate, not that they had ever been mal lands." Their Lordships were of opinion that, where, as in that case, a suit for recovery of rent was brought and an adverse title was set up by the Defendant and where the Defendant had established that he had been adversely in possession of the land, the question between them resolved in itself into one of parcel or no parcel and, therefore, the Plaintiff could not be relieved from the ordinary rule of establishing his own case. This was the view taken by the learned Judges of this Court in the case of Rhidoy Kristo v. Nobin Chunder (5). The present case is clearly not one falling within the provisions of sec. 37 of Act XI of 1859. The Defendants do not claim to have any protected rights under that section in the lands which they hold in the estate but they claim under a separate and distinct title alleging that the lands are rent-free lands and that the Plaintiffs have no right to recover khas possession. The case of Wise v. Bhoobun Moyee (6) and the case of Ambika Churn v. Daya Gazi (7) on which the learned pleader for the Respondents relies cannot, therefore, be taken to have any application to the facts of the present case. This is not a case in which, as apparently the lower Court has held, the Defendants must be compelled to make out a prima facie case that the lands in suit are included within the lands held by them as lakhiraj. The Defendants in the present suit are clearly in possession of the lands and, as the learned Munsif has pointed out, they have substantiated the defence which they set up that they hold the lands within the ambit of the estate purchased by the Plaintiffs under a lakhiraj title. The onus ordinarily, in such a case, would be on the Plaintiffs to prove their case. The Plaintiffs' case is that the lands in suit are included in the mal lands of the estate which they have purchased. The Defendants, however, are in possession and they have proved that they have a lakhiraj title to lands in the estate and the Munsif has held that, in those circumstances, the Plaintiffs are not relieved from the ordinary onus of proving their own case and that the question between the parties becomes one of parcel or no parcel and the onus lies on the Plaintiffs to make out that the lands in suit are included within the mal lands of the estate. In our opinion, the view of the law which the learned Munsif has taken is supported by the rulings on which the learned pleader for the Appellants relies. We think that the learned Subordinate Judge erred in law in holding that the Plaintiffs were entitled to succeed because the Defendants failed to make out a prima facie case which the Plaintiffs were called upon to rebut. In fact, in the present case, the possession was with the Defendants. Both the lower Courts have found that the Defendants have proved that they hold the lands under a lakhiraj title within the estate and, in those circumstances, the question between the parties, in our opinion, must be held to be one of parcel or no parcel and the onus lies on the Plaintiffs to prove that the lands in suit are included within the mal lands of the estate which they have purchased. We agree with the Munsif that, as the Plaintiffs have failed to prove that fact, the suit must fail. We, therefore, decree the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore those of the Court of first instance with costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 332, 403, 437—Discharge, order of, by High Court Sessions, if any bar to fresh proceedings—Nolle prosequi.

An order of discharge by the High Court in the exercise of its Original Criminal Jurisdiction is no bar to fresh proceedings being taken before a competent Magistrate upon complaint or upon a police-report or under sec. 190 (c) of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

MIR AHWAD HUSSAIN v. MAHOMED AS-KARI (1) referred to.

Where an accused person was put upon his trial before the High Court Sessions on charges punishable under secs. 363 and 366 of the Indian Penal Code and an order of discharge was passed upon the Advocate-General entering a nolle prosequi, and subsequently the accused being again sent up to take his trial upon the same charges, the Deputy Magistrate held that he could not be so tried :

Held—That the Magistrate was wrong in declining jurisdiction which he undoubtedly had, and he was bound to adjudicate on the charges properly laid before him against the accused.

Held also—That the order of discharge by the High Court Sessions could not be set aside by any tribunal and it did not require to be set aside for initiation of fresh proceedings on the same charges.

(1) I. L. R. 29 Cal 726 F. R. : s. o. 6 C. W. N. 638 (1902).

This was a Rule issued on the 22nd of April 1912 calling upon the District Magistrate of 24-Pergunnahs to show cause why further enquiry should not be made in the case of Sheikh Idoo on charges under sec. 376 and other sections.

On an information laid by one William Julia Clifford, Secretary to the Society for the protection of children in India, at the Entally Thanina, Calcutta, on 23rd September 1911, the accused Sheikh Idoo was sent up by the Police before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, to stand his trial for offences punishable under secs. 363 and 366 of the Indian Penal Code ; and on the 31st January 1912 he was committed before Mr. Justice Stephen, presiding over the High Court Sessions. Before the said Court of Sessions the indictment was drawn up by the Clerk of the Crown under secs. 363, 366 and 376 of the Indian Penal Code. The offence under sec. 376 said to have been committed, having been alleged to have been committed at Sealdah and so outside the local limits of the Ordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction of the High Court the charge under that section was struck out and the accused was put upon his trial upon the other charges.

In the course of the trial Mr. Justice Stephen intimated that as the evidence that had already been placed before him to prove the offence under sec. 366, if believed, would prove that the accused had committed rape, the accused ought to be tried for the latter offence which was a graver offence but he had no jurisdiction to try the charge of rape on the abovenamed ground. Thereupon the Advocate-General entered a nolle prosequi and accused was discharged. Subsequently, however, on 9th March 1912 the accused was re-arrested by the Police and was produced before the Deputy

THE PUBLIC PROSECUTOR, 24 PERGUNNAHS v. SHEIKH IDOO.

Magistrate of Sealdah, within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the evidence shewed the offence of a rape was committed, to take his trial again upon charges punishable under secs. 363, 366 and 376 of the Indian Penal Code. An objection was then taken on behalf of the accused to the legality of the proceedings on the ground that the learned Advocate-General having entered a nolle prosequi the accused could not be re-arraigned again.

Thereupon the Deputy Magistrate passed an order that the accused could not be tried under secs. 363 and 366 of the Indian Penal Code but the prosecution might go on only under sec. 376 of the same Code.

Mr. B. C. Mitter, Standing Counsel, and Babu Hemendra Nath Mitter for the Crown, Petitioner.

Mr K N. Chaudhuri and Babu Satish Chandra Ghosh for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

We think that the question raised on this Rule can be simply answered by pointing out that the order of discharge made by Mr Justice Stephen cannot be set aside by any tribunal and does not require to be set aside.

Upon all the authorities an order of discharge does not operate as any bar to fresh proceedings being taken before a competent Magistrate upon complaint or upon a Police report or under sec. 190 (c), Cr. P. C. This was finally settled in the case of Mur Ahwad Husain v. Mahomed Askari (1) by a Full Bench of this Court. If this is the rule of law in the case of Presidency and Provincial Magistrates where the higher Courts have been specially empowered to interfere and order fresh enquiry, and if in those cases it is unnecessary to set aside the order of discharge or order fresh enquiry, a fortiori it is unnecessary in the case of a discharge by the High Court in the exercise of its Original Criminal Jurisdiction, where there is no authority that can interfere with the order of discharge. We do not order further enquiry in this case since it is unnecessary. It is enough for us to lay down that the Magistrate is mistaken in declining jurisdiction which he undoubtedly has, and he is bound to consider and adjudicate on any criminal information properly laid before him against the accused.

REPORTS (See Index.)

THE APPELLATE JUDGMENT OF MR. JUSTICE Woodroffe in the Midnapore conspiracy case (Peary Mohan Das v. Weston and others), for its inordinate length, its tone and temper, its wholesale condemnation of the Plaintiff's case and his counsel and witnesses, its almost unqualified acceptance of the plea advanced by the Defendants' counsel at the Bar, its unseemly observations concerning the judgment of a colleague on the Bench and its sweeping aspersions against people who were in no sense under trial before the Court, is unsurpassed in the history of judicial pronouncements in this country. We have not yet had either the opportunity or the privilege of making a survey of the length and depth of this portentous judgment and can but claim only a superficial acquaintance with it from the newspaper reports. When even the presiding Judge himself after a severe determination to read it through in open Court from morning till evening broke down on the third day, we are sure we shall be pardoned if, overlooking all its declarations and dissertations we confine ourselves to some very simple issues in the suit which nothing can obscure.

THE CASE AS FAR AS WE HAVE BEEN ABLE TO follow, shows the Plaintiff who was a man of 70 years of age, the District Magistrate of Midnapore and two other officers for having arrested him and kept him in confinement for putting pressure on his son to induce him to confess to a very grave criminal charge for which his son was convicted by the Additional Sessions Judge of Midnapore and sentenced to 10 years' transportation. The assessors had found his son Santosh not guilty and on appeal the conviction and sentence were set aside by the Chief Justice Sir Lawrence Jenkins and Mr. Justice Mookerjee. The conviction was based on a confession of the Plaintiff's son which was found by the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Mookerjee to have been obtained by pressure brought to bear on the father and the son by the Magistrate and the Police officers who were Defendants in the present case. The real issue in the present suit was whether what Mr. Weston and the Police officers did in connection with Peary's arrest and Santosh's confession amounted to conspiracy and whether they could be mulct ed in damages for any wrong that they had so inflicted on the Plaintiff.

A REVIEW OF THE GENERAL POLITICAL SITUATION which followed the Partition of Bengal is a matter more for the historian than for a Court of law. We consider it utterly useless and irrelevant to discuss it at the present moment either in connection with this case or otherwise. It will suffice for our present purpose to mention that, following up the discovery of a bomb conspiracy at Maniktolla, and the trial of those concerned in it at Alipore (Emperor v. Barindra Ghose, 14 C. W. N. 1114) proceedings were taken to establish a similar conspiracy at Midnapore and to prove the complicity of some of its leading citizens therein. Judicial proceedings in this connection hopelessly failed and the honour of the people concerned was vindicated.

WITH REGARD TO THE ALLEGED MIDNAPUR conspiracy which was so much made of at one time, we must mention that it is hardly material in connection with the present suit. The Plaintiff was at no time charged with any complicity in this alleged conspiracy and had nothing to his discredit on that account. Even in the informer's or other police reports his name was never mentioned. Following up the informer's reports which more than one Judge have found to be false, Plaintiff's house was searched on the 8th of July 1908, and a bomb was discovered in his baitakkhana (visitor's room) alleged to have been kept there by his son. (His son was arrested on that day and remanded to custody. Peary, the Plaintiff, was neither arrested on the day the bomb was discovered nor was it ever suggested at any time before the present case came in that the Plaintiff was arrested because an explanation was needed from him with reference to the bomb found in his house.

TAKING THE ABOVE FACTS AS ALSO THE WHOLE course of conduct of Mr. Weston and the Midnapur Police in connection with Santosh's confession and his father Peary's arrest, this most voluminous judgment falls far short of convincing any reasonable man that the confession of Santosh was in any sense voluntary or that Peary's arrest had nothing to do with it. The plea that has been put forward in this case that the arrest of Peary was under the Explosive Substances Act utterly fails when it is considered that he was not arrested before a fortnight had elapsed since the discovery of the bomb and that during this time suggestions were thrown out by Mr. Weston to the Plaintiff for the obtaining of his son's confession. The plea that he was waiting for the report of the Chemical Examiner also fails considering that Captain Weinman had reported as to the dangerous character of the bomb immediately after it was found and that the Chemical Examiner's report that it was a basar bomb rather detracted from the gravity of the case than otherwise. The plea utterly fails when it is further considered that when a similar bomb was found in another man's house, Mr. Weston never arrested him.

THE PUBLIC HAVE READ THE LONGEST JUDGMENT that has ever been delivered in India and are still complaining that it throws no light on the crucial questions in the case. Why is it that Mr. Weston between the date of this discovery and Plaintiff's arrest made engagements with Peary for interviews with him in his own house? Why is it again that Mr. Weston granted such frequent permits to Peary to visit his son in Jail and have prolonged interviews with him? Are we to believe that Mr. Weston, whom even Mr. Justice Woodroffe reluctantly finds to be an officer possessing an excess of executive rigour and also very unpopular with the people, was so overflowing with the milk of human kindness for this old and distressed father and had such a soft corner in his heart for his son Santosh, that these interviews were "arranged" for either the welfare of the son or the exchange of paternal and filial felicitations?

It is indeed taxing human credulity too far to try to induce the public to believe in the face of these and other admitted facts that the arrest of Peary upon which the confession followed had nothing to do with it.

UNDER THE CIRCUMSTANCES WE FEEL constrained to accept the common sense view of the matter which also found acceptance with the learned Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Mookerjee, Mr. Justice Fletcher and the two assessors at the Midnapur bomb trial (see 13 C. W. N. 861). We must also confess that we in common with the general public in this country share the view of the learned Judges above-mentioned that the bomb which was brought out from the Plaintiff's baitakkhana was placed by some one other than Santosh and it is unnecessary to discuss who that other person was or may have been. We find that Mr. Justice Digambar Chatterjee practically agrees with the findings of Mr. Justice Fletcher in these and many other respects. People have been asking how it is then that he agreed with Woodroffe and Coxe, JJ., in allowing the appeal with costs. This is a question which we never hope to be able to answer.

IN ONE PORTION OF THE JUDGMENT, THEIR LORDSHIPS (Woodroffe and Coxe, JJ.) have in the usual discursive manner discussed the questions whether Mr. K. B. Dutt should have accepted the brief for the Plaintiff and having accepted his brief whether he should not have gone into the witness-box while he was engaged in conducting the case. This question was raised by the defence counsel in the course of the trial of the suit and Mr. Justice Fletcher decided the question in Mr. Dutt's favour. Before we go into the views of the Appellate Court we must observe that we do not consider it at all proper on the part of the counsel for the Appellants in this case to have formulated some questions in their own way with regard to the decision of the first Court and with reference to the facts of a case which was still pending before the Appeal Court and submitted them for the opinion of the Bar Council in England. We expected the Appellate Court to enlighten us with their views as to the propriety of the course adopted by the Defendants' counsel in this respect. But in keeping with the tenor of the whole judgment the observations of their Lordships in this case are all one-sided. We do not know whether it was disclosed to the Bar Council by the counsel for the defence that their opinion was sought for being used in a pending case. If it had been, we are sure that the Bar Council would never have agreed to express any opinion with regard to the questions. Mr. Dutt conducted the case under great difficulties and he acted wisely by not adding to them by raising such side issues. He also acted with befitting dignity and thorough straightforwardness by not objecting to the opinion of the Bar Council, so obtained, being used against him by his opponents and referred to by the Bench. Nor did he care to prefer any charges of impropriety against his opponents on this account, but the Court in our opinion should have taken notice of the fact and expressed its opinion in order to discourage such practice.

MR. JUSTICE WOODROFFE CONSIDERS THAT MR. Dutt should not have accepted the brief in this case because he had taken part in local politics and had personal knowledge of many of the men and events of Midnapur where he lived and practised. This is such an absurd proposition on the face of it that we may dismiss it without any serious consideration. One may not surely use his personal knowledge of men and things in one's professional capacity but what is there to preclude him from acting if the same information is conveyed to him in his instructions? We also fail to appreciate or comprehend what was there to disqualify Mr. Dutt from appearing as counsel for an aggrieved person simply because he had acted sometimes as counsel in a series of judicial proceedings connected more or less directly or indirectly with Plaintiff's case and at other times made representations to the executive heads of Government as a citizen for the protection of his fellow townsmen including, it may be, himself, against some acts of the local police and the executive which he regarded as lawless and oppressive. To accept Mr. Justice Woodroffe's proposition would amount to depriving people of the services of lawyers in the mofussil where, as in this case, their life, honour and liberty may at times be in danger.

THE NEXT QUESTION THAT MR. JUSTICE WOODROFFE raises is whether having accepted his brief Mr. K. B. Dutt ought to have gone into the witness-box and corroborated or given a denial to the statements of the Plaintiff by reference to his instructions? It is a matter of common knowledge that a counsel should not act both as counsel and witness if he can help it. The learned Judges do not say who was to have called him to depose in the witness-box? Mr. Justice Woodroffe admits that "it is recognised by the Courts and the profession that as a general practice it is undesirable when the matter to which Counsel depose is other than formal, that they should testify either for or against the party whose case they are conducting." If Mr. Dutt had volunteered to depose on behalf of his client or advised his client to have him examined as a witness he would have laid himself open to a charge of professional impropriety. His opponents, perhaps, might, with much less impropriety, have called him to contradict his own witnesses. Apart from the question of the professional propriety of such a course, did the Defendants ever call Mr. Dutt into the witness-box and did Mr. Dutt ever decline to depose? So we must say that the reflections passed by the Hon'ble Judges on Mr. Dutt in this connection are both unjust and unmerited.

THEIR LORDSHIPS PROCEEDED TO CITE SOME cases in this connection which seem to have little relevancy to the question they discuss. Every member of any standing at the Calcutta Bar well remembers the question of professional conduct which came up before Sir Francis Maclean and to which their Lordships refer and from the proceedings of which they give some extracts without stating what the case was about. The question in that case was whether Counsel was justified in visiting the place of occurrence before trial and questioning witnesses regarding the occurrence and then at the hearing of the case using the personal knowledge so derived to contradict such witnesses. We are not aware that Mr. Dutt did anything of the kind in the Midnapur case and we fail to see what earthly relevancy that case has with the present. Corea v. Parris (14 C. W. N. 86), which their Lordships cite in this connection also furnishes no ground for their Lordships' adverse comment on Mr. Dutt. The Privy Council decided in that case that where the Court of first instance refused to receive the evidence of counsel tendered by the client himself, the Appellate Court was justified in calling and examining him. So according to this authority it is their Lordships who should have called and examined Mr. Dutt before them if they thought that his evidence was either material or necessary to their coming to a proper finding.

THE LEARNED JUDGES BLAME MR. DUTT FOR NOT volunteering into the witness-box and corroborating or contradicting statements made by his client on oath regarding the conversations that he had with Mr. Weston before his arrest and which he said he had reported to Mr. Dutt. If he had done so, we would not have been at all surprised if the same learned Judges had found him guilty of professional misconduct. We do not profess to understand also why any corroboration was needed particularly from Mr. Dutt as counsel, when the story of the Plaintiff in this respect was corroborated by his son Ashu who had accompanied his old father in all his visits to Mr. Dutt and had heard all that he had narrated to Mr.

Dutt. There is no authority in law which would justify their Lordships' drawing any adverse inferences from Mr. Dutt's most honourable disinclination to volunteer as a witness on behalf of his client.

THE OPINION OF THE BAR COUNCIL SUBSEQUENTLY obtained and referred to by their Lordships does not also touch Mr. Dutt's case. What is there to show that Mr. Dutt knew or had reason to believe that he would be an important witness in Peary's case? The Defendants did not object to his appearance as a Counsel at the outset, but raised the question of his being a witness in the case some time after. The Bar Council expressly say that in the case of its becoming apparent "before the concluding of the evidence in the case" that Counsel is a witness on a material question of fact he might retire from the case if he can do so "without jeopardising the interests of his client." Since it did not appear to the trial Judge before the concluding of the evidence that Mr. Dutt was a material witness, Mr. Dutt could not surely be blamed for not retiring from the case or going into the box. The proviso added by the Bar Council relating to the interest of the client being the supreme consideration is conclusive that after all Mr. Dutt was the best judge whether he could or could not retire from the case without jeopardising the interests of his client.

AS REGARDS THE QUESTION OF MR. DUTT'S professional propriety being impugned in the case, their Lordships have gone the length of noticing the charge of bribery recklessly made by a most disreputable witness put forward by his opponents only to suggest and not to proceed to any proof with regard to the allegation. Mr. Dutt was thoroughly justified in treating these suggestions with the contempt that they deserved. The letter alleged to have been written by him in this connection was never attempted to be proved by the defence and it has been declared by the Indian colleague of their Lordships, who is familiar with the Bengalee character in which it is written, to be a flagrant forgery. Are their Lordships aware that this defence witness, Akshaya Pal, had since his deposition been convicted of forgery in another case and is now lodged in jail? Yet it is on the evidence of such witnesses and such materials that Woodroffe and Coxe, JJ., have not hesitated to throw dirt on a counsel of Mr. Dutt's position and standing both at the Bar and in society. This unique and unprecedented judgment carries its own condemnation with it all through. We have for many years entertained a very high opinion of Mr. Justice Woodroffe as a Judge and the judgment has, therefore, come upon us as a painful surprise.

UNCERTIFIED ADJUSTMENTS OF DECREE.

Cl. (3) of r. 2 of Or. 21 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 expressly provides that a payment or adjustment of a decree which has not been certified or recorded in a proceeding before a Court of execution shall not be recognised by any Court executing the decree. This provision of law which has been reproduced with hardly any modification from the Code of 1882 was enacted with the object—a very laudable one—of making all adjustments or payments of decrees matters of record, so that a dispute which has already terminated in a decree may not give rise in course of execution proceedings to fresh disputes requiring fresh adjudication upon evidence; such a course, if permitted, would no doubt to a great extent neutralise the main purpose of a decree, viz., the final settlement of a dispute. But in order that the remedy may not be worse than the disease, the judgment-debtor, where the adjustment has not been certified in execution proceedings, is merely prevented from resisting execution on the ground of such adjustment. The provision in question leaves it open to the judgment-debtor to sue the decree-holder for damages for fraud, when the adjustment or payment has not been certified owing to the decree-holder's fraud or for breach of contract when the decree has been executed in breach of a valid agreement for adjustment of the decree.

Now, if all judgment-debtors were wise, they would, having regard to the express provisions of the Statute, always insist upon adjustments or payments of decrees being certified in Court within the period of limitation allowed by law; and when from any circumstance, a judgment-debtor has failed to do so or has been prevented from doing so, he ought not to set up the plea of payment or adjustment against the decree-holder's application for execution, but should quietly suffer execution to proceed. But no person likes to pay a debt twice over, and a judgment-debtor of all debtors is the least inclined to be generous towards a judgment-creditor. Therefore, following the dictates of his own feelings and in the teeth of the express prohibition of the statute, he usually opposes the application on a plea of an uncertified adjustment. In such circumstances the obvious duty of the Court which has to apply the express provisions of a statute without regard for considerations of abstract justice or hardship, would be to reject the judgment-debtor's plea, and call on him to satisfy the decree, leaving him to seek his remedy in a fresh suit. To tell the judgment-debtor to sue for damages, would however in most of such cases be a counsel of perfection because a judgment-debtor who has had to pay a decree twice over would not ordinarily, unless he is a man of substance who resists a just claim for mere pleasure, have the means to launch into a fresh litigation. Courts, therefore, are frequently found disinclined to carry out the letter of the law, and whilst professedly accepting it seek by arguments not always convincing to get round it.

Two very apposite illustrations of this tendency are to be found in Biron v. Faimurat, reported in the last number (16 C. W. N. 923), and Babar Ali v. Shisir Kumar, reported in this issue (16 C. W. N. 951). In the former case the judgment-debtor withdrew an appeal he had preferred against the decree by reason of an adjustment with the decree-holder. The fact of such adjustment, (though not in terms) was mentioned before the Appellate Court, but the decree-holder nevertheless, after the appeal had been withdrawn, applied for execution of the decree, whereupon the judgment-debtor set up the adjustment as an answer to the application. The High Court held that the fact of the adjustment should be investigated by the executing Court. In the latter case, another Bench of the High Court held that where one of two joint decree-holders had, in a partition suit between them in which the question of the enforceability of the decree had been directly in issue, solemnly admitted in his written statement that the decree had been satisfied by payment, it was open to the judgment debtor to rely on the admission in resisting an application for execution by the legal representatives of the decree-holder. In the former case, the Court held that the application for withdrawal of appeal, in which the fact of the adjustment was mentioned, and the subsequent petition before the executing Court asking for an investigation together constituted a compliance with the provisions of Or. 21, r. 2, whilst in the latter case the Court declared that the question in that case was not one of adjustment or payment of decree at all, and that Or. 21, r. 2, did not apply to the case.

These decisions, however consonant they may be with natural justice, are, we are constrained to say, quite irreconcilable with the provisions of Or. 21, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. But when Judges of the High Court find themselves in the interest of justice under the necessity of not applying the plain provisions of a statute, it is surely arguable that the provisions in question are on the whole not conducive to justice. Why should not the provisions of the Rule be so modified as to make admissible statements and admissions made by the decree-holder in judicial proceedings before Courts other than the executing Court? Such an amendment would not run counter to the purpose the Legislature obviously had in view in enacting the rule. We think one of the first duties of the Rules Committee of the Calcutta High Court, when constituted, would be to recommend an amendment of the rule so as to enable Courts of execution to recognise adjustments of decrees evidenced in the pleadings of the parties whether before the executing Court or any other Court.

Sec. 32, cl (1)—Dying declaration

Where the verbal statement of a dying person is sought to be proved the proper and legal mode of proving it is by eliciting from the person who heard the deceased make the statement which the deceased made. If the statement was taken down in writing by the witness or by some one in the presence of the witness the witness would be entitled to refresh his memory by referring to such writing; otherwise the writing itself is not relevant unless it is in the nature of a deposition taken in the presence of the accused.

The one thing necessary for the admission of the evidence of an expert witness as to handwriting is that the writing with which the comparison is made should be proved beyond doubt to be that of the person alleged. Statements made by witnesses in the course of a departmental enquiry into the conduct of police officers who were subsequently put upon their trial on charges of taking illegal gratification are not privileged under secs. 123, 124 or 125 and the accused are entitled to cross-examine the witnesses under sec. 153 of the Evidence Act on the statements made by them at the departmental enquiry.

HARBANS SAHAI, 16 C. W. N. 431.

Sec. 132—Taking of a thumb impression, not equivalent to asking a question

Where a Magistrate believing that the complainant had given false evidence in the course of a trial by denying the fact of a previous conviction had his thumb impression taken out of Court for the purpose of identification in a future prosecution under sec. 193, I. P. C., and there was nothing to show that the latter had objected to the taking of it,

Held, that the thumb impression was admissible in a subsequent trial for giving false evidence and that the proviso to sec. 132 of the Evidence Act was not applicable inasmuch as the taking of such an impression was not equivalent to asking a question and receiving an answer.

CURRENT CIVIL CASES.

Guardians and Wards Act, sec. 12, cl. 3 (b)—Court if may order debtor to deposit money in Court pending disposal of guardianship application.

In this case on an application by H to be appointed guardian of J and for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of a debt owing to J from G or other order to protect the property of the minor the Court had passed an order in the absence of G directing G to forthwith deposit the amount of the debt in Court. G took out summons on H to show cause why the order should not be set aside on the ground that he had not appeared as the notice which H had served on him simply stated that an application for appointment of receiver was to be made.

Held, that the order of the Court was legally passed. As G had received notice of the application he had no grievance, for the petitioner could not possibly know beforehand what order the Court would make. On the application that had been made the Court had in the circumstances of the case jurisdiction to pass the order under sec. 12 of the Guardians and Wards Act.

Civil Procedure Code (1882), sec. 539—Suit against trespass for possession of property impressed with trust, if opinion of court under sec. 539—Hindu Law—Right of heir and of widow—Res judicata.

A by his will directed his executors to dedicate a property to the god Shiva. The executors died without completing the dedication. After the time named for the dedication had arrived this suit was brought by the heir of A in the Court of a Subordinate Judge to eject Defendants as trespassers from the house, to get possession of property, for the appointment of trustees, the settlement of a scheme and other reliefs which fell within the scope of sec. 539 of C. P. C. of 1882 (sec. 92 of the new C. P. C.). But the suit was not brought under the provisions of that section. In a previous suit by the same Plaintiff as heir of A against the same Defendants for possession of A's estate including the property in dispute the Plaintiff had succeeded with reference to all the property except this property which was excluded on account of the trust impressed on it.

Held—That though some of the reliefs claimed fell within the scope of sec. 539, the suit for possession as against a trespasser was not within that section simply because the property was impressed with a trust.

The executors having died without executing trust, Plaintiff as the heir of A was authorised under Hindu law to take steps for carrying out the trust after recovering possession of the property from a trespasser. That gave him such title as would entitle him to recover.

The decision in the previous suit was not res judicata as here the Plaintiff sued as a trustee though the trusteeship arose out of heirship while in the previous suit he had sued in his own right.

Chandavarkar, J. GHELABHAI v. UDERAM, I. L. R. 36 Bom. 29.

Indian Contract Act, sec. 19—Registered deed of gift—Validity if may be impugned by third party.

The Plaintiff in this case sought to recover possession of a property under a registered deed of gift from one J. The Defendant having failed to make out his title as adopted son of J's admitted heir sought to impugn the deed of gift as procured by undue influence or misrepresentation.

Held—That the Defendant being a person without title to the property, and the Plaintiff having made out a prima facie title was entitled to succeed unless Defendant made out a better title in himself.

It was not open to a stranger to a deed like the Defendant to attack it upon grounds of misrepresentation, undue influence, &c., which might have been available to the donor herself and so long as the registered deed stood it could not be attached on such grounds by a stranger.

Scott, C. J. MOTILAL v. CHANDRU SANGHVI, I. L. R. 36 Bom. 42.

Res judicata—Impartibility—Agreement if can make an estate impartible—Permission of Court to a compromise where minor a party.

Where a village was claimed to be impartible on the grounds (1) that under an agreement with Government all tenants were jointly responsible for the revenue and (2) that in a previous suit, where a minor was a party it was settled on compromise that the lands in the village were not divisible and that therefore the question was res judicata.

Held—That the agreement with Government could not determine relations of tenants inter se. The decision in the previous suit being on a compromise without any issues being raised was not res judicata. The sanction of the Court not having been obtained to the compromise it was not binding on the minors.

The fact of an arrangement between the parties that an estate should be undivided could not make it impartible. Impartibility could only arise by custom. Agreements against partibility of estates were against public policy.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD AND IMAM, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 907 of 1912. MANIK CHANDRA CHAKRAVARTI AND OTHERS, 1st Party, Petitioners v. PRANNATH KOIR AND OTHERS, 2nd Party, Opposite Party. 15th August 1912.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 145—Puja, dispute between persons one of whom claims to represent the public—Constructive conditional possession.

In this case a proceeding was drawn up under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., in respect of a plot of land. The nature of the dispute between the parties will appear from the following portion of the Magistrate's judgment:—"The first party claims that it is their ancestral land where Bhadrakali Puja is held from the time of their ancestors. The second party claims to represent the general public and alleges that for over three hundred years a Barwari Puja has been held on that land out of public contribution. The Puja is held on the last day of Bysak."

The Magistrate after examining witnesses on both sides found that the second party were in constructive conditional possession of the land from a very long period for the performance of the Barwari Puja on the last day of Bysak. The first party thereupon moved the High Court and obtained a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate and the Opposite Party to show cause why the order passed under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., should not be discharged on the grounds—

(1) that the public who claim the right of easement for one day in the year cannot be a party to sec. 145 proceedings,

(2) that constructive conditional possession is not known to the law.

Their Lordships after hearing both sides made the Rule absolute.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD AND IMAM, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION MISCELLANEOUS No. 113 of 1912. RAM BANDHAN TEWARI AND OTHERS, Petitioners v. THE EMPEROR. 16th August 1912.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 526—Transferee—Remark by Judge showing preference—Refusal of bail in bailable case on appeal.

The Petitioner, Ram Bandhan, and four others were tried under secs. 147 and 323, I. P. C., by the Deputy Magistrate of Sambalpur who convicted three of the accused and acquitted two including the Petitioner, Ram Bandhan. The accused persons who were convicted appealed to the Sessions Judge of Manbhum and Sambalpur who in dismissing the appeal made some observations against the Petitioner, Ram Bandhan, and remarked as follows—"The next point raised is that two of the accused were acquitted though identified by four men. But I am of opinion that they were acquitted from excess of caution. . . . Even the learned vakil admits that there is little to be said as to Ram Bandhan."

Thereafter the Petitioners were convicted by the Deputy Magistrate of Sambalpur in another case under sec. 164 of Act VI of 1901 and were sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one year each. They preferred an appeal to the said Sessions Judge who at the time when the application for the admission of the said appeal was made asked the Petitioners' pleader, "Is it the same Ram Bandhan who was acquitted?" The Sessions Judge admitted the appeal but rejected the Petitioners' application for bail although an offence under sec. 164 of Act VI of 1901 is bailable.

The Petitioners moved the High Court for the transfer of the appeal and obtained a Rule.

Their Lordships after hearing both sides made the Rule absolute and directed that the Appeal should be heard by another Sessions Judge.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before CARN-DUFF AND IMAM, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1020 of 1912. TRILOCHAN ROY, Petitioner v. EMPEROR. 20th August 1912.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 193, Perjury—Statement made on a point not material—Intention—Motive.

In this case the Petitioner was convicted under sec. 193, I. P. C., and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three months and to pay a fine of Rs. 100, for, having made a false statement in cross examination in a case in which he was the complainant. The Sessions Judge in appeal affirmed the conviction but in reducing the sentence of imprisonment to one of a month found among other things that "the statement in respect of which the Appellant is said to have committed perjury was undoubtedly false. . . . The only question for consideration is whether the statement in question was material in the case in which it had been made . . . There was no particular advantage to be gained" (by the Appellant).

The Petitioner moved the High Court and obtained a Rule calling on the District Magistrate to show cause why the conviction and sentence should not be set aside on the ground that in the absence of any evidence or finding to show that the Petitioner intended to give false evidence by making the statement alleged to be false and especially in view of the findings of the Sessions Judge showing that the Petitioner had no intention to make the alleged false statement and that the said statement was not material to the case the conviction was liable to be set aside.

Their Lordships made the Rule absolute and set aside the conviction and sentence.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MOOKFRJEE and BEACROFT, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 119 OF 1910. PAR-SANIA, Appellant v. HARI CHARAN DAS, Respondent. 3rd July 1912.

Letters of Administration—Muth—No assets for administration.

The Appeal was directed against an order for grant of letters of administration to the estate of one Mohanth Ganga Dass who died in 1904. He left a widow, a daughter and a son, leaving him survived. The son came into possession of the properties, and had his name registered in the Collectorate, and died in 1908. On the 20th September 1909, the Respondent, claiming to be the chela of the deceased Mohanth, made the present application for letters of administration. He stated explicitly that as an attempt had been made by the son of the deceased Mohanth to take possession of the estate, that is the Asthal, a certificate might be granted to him under Act V of 1881. The District Judge granted the application because he was satisfied that the widow of the deceased Mohanth was endeavouring to keep the property as if it belonged to her husband personally.

Held—"A Mohanth is not the owner of the property of the muth and on his death a person claiming to be his successor in office cannot apply under Act V of 1881 for letters of administration in respect of the muth property."

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before SHARFUDIN and COXE, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1828 OF 1910. JOGESH CHANDRA ROY, Appellant v. ANNADA CHURN CHOWDHRY AND OTHERS, Respondents. Heard, 30th July and 2nd August. Judgment, 7th August 1912.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), secs. 22, 54. Injunction—Brick-making—Kabhuyat.

The Defendants in this case were the Plaintiff's tenants and the suit was brought to obtain a declaration that the Defendants were not entitled to make bricks on the land or alter the condition and also for an injunction. The kabhuyat provided that they would not make any digging (khad), tank, gift or mutation.

The suit was originally dismissed but on appeal to the High Court was remanded for a fresh decision, the lower Appellate Court being directed to decide the purpose for which the tenancy was created, the question of res judicata and other questions. The suit was again dismissed and the Plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Held, that the suit fell under sec. 54 read with sec. 22 of the Specific Relief Act.

The fact that one suit for injunction had been dismissed did not preclude the Plaintiff from bringing another suit, if further damage was done.

JABBAR SHEIKH v. TOMIZ SHEIKH.

This was a Rule granted on the 11th of March 1912 against the order of Mr. H. P. Waddell, Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Tangail, dated the 4th of January 1912, acquitting the accused under sec 245, Cr. P. C.

The order of the Magistrate who tried the accused summarily for offences under secs. 143, 447 of the Indian Penal Code and acquitted them, was in the following terms :—

"I have made a local enquiry in this case and seen the spot. There is . . . no doubt as to the title of accused and their mahks. As regards possession the huts of accused are close to the disputed land and have been there for at least 1 year. When there are these facts to go upon, the oral evidence which can easily be produced by both parties is of little value. The fact that complainant party have instituted sec. 9 suits in the Civil Court for adjoining land indicates that they are now out of possession. I am of opinion that accused party were in possession of the land in question and did not act illegally in cutting the paddy. Accused are all acquitted."

Babu Atulya Ch. Bose for the Petitioner.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Rule must be made absolute on the ground on which it was issued. We are surprised to find that the learned Sub-Divisional Officer should so misapprehend the provisions of the law under sec. 263,

That section does not excuse the Magistrate from hearing the evidence of the complainant from re-examination of the evidence. It is an elementary principle that the evidence is not the same as hearing evidence. In all criminal cases if the accused denies the charge, the complainant and such witnesses as he may produce must be examined and the case must be decided upon the effect of their evidence. The order of acquittal is therefore clearly without jurisdiction having been made without evidence having been heard.

The order of the lower Court is set aside and there will be a retrial before any Magistrate the District Magistrate may direct

Rule made absolute.

Revenue Sale Law (Act XI of 1859), sec. 54—Share of revenue-paying estate, sale of—Mortgagee who has sold the share in execution of mortgage decree and purchased it before the estate fell in arrear, if may use mortgage as "shield" against purchaser at revenue sale, when mortgage sale confirmed after last date of payment—Extinction of incumbrance on date of sale—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec 320—"Keeping alive mortgage," right of—Land Registration Act (VII of 1876, B C)—Removal of name from register, order of Court for.

A mortgagee of a share in certain villages forming part of a revenue paying estate obtained a decree on his mortgage and had the same sold in execution thereof and purchased it himself on the 19th March 1900, and the sale was confirmed on the 23rd April following. Meanwhile the March kist of the Government Revenue fell in arrear on the 28th March 1900, and the share of the villages in question along with a corresponding share in the remaining villages of the estate was sold under sec. 54 of Act XI of 1859 for its own arrears of revenue :

Held—That the right, title and interest of the mortgagor in the properties in question passed to the mortgagee on the 19th March 1900, and the mortgage incumbrance became extinct when on that date he became the complete owner of the properties, and that it was not open to him after that date to use that incumbrance as a "shield" against the purchaser at the revenue sale.

That from the 19th March 1900 the mortgagee became responsible to Government as owner for payment of the revenue.

This was an Appeal from the High Court of Calcutta, dated the 10th of January 1908, setting aside a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya, dated the 27th of January 1905

The suit was brought by the Plaintiff Appellant to obtain from Defendant No. 1 (Respondent) possession of a certain share amounting to five annas $1\frac{1}{2}$ pies in four villages situate in Taluk Agamgash, Pergunnah Shaharghati, in the Gaya district. The share had been mortgaged in the year 1886 to the mother of the Respondent and in the year 1898 the Respondent as her heir brought a suit to enforce the said mortgage wherein a decree was passed in his favour against the mortgagors and an order absolute was made for the sale of the mortgaged properties on the 19th of December 1899. In execution of the said decree the Respondent caused the said mortgaged properties to be sold and on the 19th of March 1900 himself purchased them, such purchase being subsequently confirmed by a certificate of the Court, dated the 23rd of April 1900.

On the 29th of March 1900, Government revenue for that kist upon the said share together with a similar share in 67 other villages forming part of the same estate (the aggregate of which shares are referred to in the case as the ijmali or "residue" share in the said villages) became overdue and on the 6th of June 1900 the whole of the said ijmali share was sold by the Collector for realisation of the arrears and was purchased by one Durga Prasad (Defendant No. 3) in the name of Hulas Narayan, Defendant No. 2. The last named Defendant subsequently executed a formal document disclaiming all interest in the properties in favour of Durga Prasad by whom the same were on the 20th of September 1902 transferred to the Appellant, his wife, by a deed of gift of that date.

The question for determination in the case was whether the title of the Appellant to the 5 annas $1\frac{1}{2}$ pies share in the said four villages based upon the aforesaid revenue sale of the 6th of June 1900 prevailed over the claim of the Respondent under his said mortgage or auction sale.

The Subordinate Judge held that what was sold at the said revenue sale was merely the right, title and in crest of the mortgagors which (so far as concerned the share of the four villages in suit) had already passed to the Respondent under the previous execution sale, and that therefore the Appellant had acquired no interest therein by his purchase at the said revenue sale, and he accordingly dismissed the Appellant's suit with costs.

The High Court on appeal (Brett and Mookerjee, JJ.) differed from the Subordinate Judge.

MUSAMMAT BHAWANI KUMAR v. MATHURA PRASAD SINGH.

The learned Judges held that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge that the purchaser at the revenue sale purchased merely the right, title and interest of the defaulting proprietor on the date of sale and consequently purchased nothing, because his interest had already passed to the Defendant was not well-founded, being contrary to the policy of the Revenue Law and opposed to the decisions of the Court in, amongst other cases, Debi Das v. Bipra Charan (1) and Annoda Prasad v. Rajendra Kumar (2); that the purchase by the mortgagee at the sale in execution of his decree was not completed under sec. 316 of the Civil Procedure Code till the date of the confirmation of the sale on the 23rd April, 1900, as between the date of the sale on the 19th March 1900 and the date of the confirmation there was a possibility of an application to set aside the sale under sec. 311, Civil Procedure Code; that therefore on the 28th March 1910, the mortgagee had not become the owner of the property and he was not "a proprietor at the time of default"; that the fact that before the date of the revenue sale, the mortgagee had by the confirmation of the sale become full owner made no difference in the position of the parties and that the decision of the Judicial Committee in Sham Kumari v. Rameswar Singh (3) was distinguishable from this case; that the mortgage incumbrance was not extinguished by the debt having been converted into a judgment debt [Drake v. Mitchell (4)] and that although there was authority [Bibijan Bibi v. Sachi Bewah (5)] for holding that a security is extinguished upon the actual sale of the mortgaged properties and the distribution of the proceeds, yet a mortgagee who has purchased at a sale in execution of a decree upon his mortgage is entitled to rely upon his mortgage as a shield against a subsequent incumbrancer [Debendra Narayan v. Ramtaran (6)]; that as in this case it would be for the mortgagee's benefit to keep alive the mortgage it should be presumed on the principle of the cases of Gokaldas v. Puranmal (7), Mohesh Lal v. Bawan Das (8) and Dinobandhu v. Jogmaya (9), that the lien had been kept alive as against the purchaser at the revenue sale. "It would" observed Mookerjee, J., "be manifestly unjust to hold that because by a mere accident the mortgage sale was confirmed a few days before the revenue sale, the rights of the mortgagee were completely lost."

In the result their Lordships discharged the decree of the Subordinate Judge and passed a decree in the Plaintiff's favour for possession conditional upon redemption of the mortgage of the Defendant within six months, the suit being declared liable to dismissal on the failure to redeem within that period.

The Plaintiff preferred this Appeal to the Privy Council.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Lowndes for the Appellant.—The Respondent's mortgage was not an incumbrance upon the properties in suit at the date of the revenue sale. The mortgage had been extinguished by the auction sale on the 19th March. The auction-purchaser's title accrued from the date of his purchase i.e., the 19th March, and not from the date of the certificate. From that date the auction-purchaser became liable for Government revenue. He also became entitled to any accretions to the property and to sue for mesne profits in respect of it. The default in payment of revenue was made after the 19th March. Reliance was placed on the case of Bhojrab v. Soudamini (10). Sec. 316, C. P. C., does not affect that decision. It applies to the parties to the suit and not to third persons. That section has been differently construed by the Judges, but the construction for which the Appellant contends has found favour with the Legislature. Sec. 65 of the new Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, lays down that the property vests from the date of actual sale. Sec. 28 of Act XI of 1859 does not alter the date of sale. This Board has decided that when sale or purchase is spoken of in connection with time, "the time meant is that at which the sale takes place in fact, not that to which its operation is carried back by relation"—Sham Kumari v. Rameswar Singh (3). In any case the auction sale was confirmed on the 23rd April. Thereafter the mortgage certainly came to an end. There could be no incumbrance on the 6th June. The High Court is wrong in holding that the auction-purchaser was entitled in equity to use his old right of a mortgagee as a shield. No equitable considerations arise here. The true test is what are the rights and liabilities of every auction-purchaser.

Gokaldas v. Purnamal (7) has no application. All the rights the mortgagee had merged in his decree, and the auction sale gave him a new title as an ordinary purchaser. Counsel discussed the cases mentioned in the judgments of the Judges of the High Court, and also referred to the following:—

Abdool Bari v. Ramdas Coondo (11), Adhur Chunder v. Aghore Nath (12), Dagdu v. Pancham Singh (13), Bibijan Bibi v. Sachi Bewah (5).

Mr. G. E. A. Ross for the Respondent submitted that the view taken by the Court below was right. The auction-purchase was not complete till after the confirmation of the sale, and the title vested from the 23rd April under sec. 316, C. P. C. The Respondent was entitled to rely upon his mortgage and use it as a shield against the revenue sale purchaser.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SHAW.—This is an Appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Calcutta, dated the 10th January 1908, which set aside a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya in Bengal, dated the 27th January 1905.

The suit was brought by the Appellant as Plaintiff to obtain possession of a certain share, amounting to 5 annas $1\frac{1}{2}$ pies, in four villages in the Gaya district, which are named in the plaint. The Appellant's rights are those of a purchaser who bought these properties at a revenue sale,—that is to say, a sale for arrears of revenue. The Appellant pleads that he has received, in his character of purchaser and as from the date of sale, a right which cannot be defeated by the Respondent. The Respondent was a mortgagee holding a security over the property for money lent thereon, and in respect of this loan the property was sold in execution to him. It is out of this conflict between the rights of the former, who may be called the revenue vendee, and the latter, who was mortgagee and purchaser at the execution sale, that the suit has arisen.

As their Lordships are unable to agree with the views which have been taken with regard to this case, either by the Subordinate Judge or by the High Court, it is necessary to mention certain dates which are material, and to test crucially what were the rights of parties at those dates.

On the 9th August 1886, a mortgage for Rs. 5,000 was granted in favour of the Respondent over the shares aforesaid of four out of seventy one villages. On the 31st May 1899, the Respondent obtained a decree on his mortgage bond, which was made absolute on the following 19th December. He executed his decree, a sale in the ordinary course took place, and on the 19th March 1900, which is the first important date in the case, the mortgaged property was sold, and it was purchased by himself, the mortgagee.

Nine days thereafter, namely, on the 28th March 1900, the March instalment of Government revenue on the 71 villages, amounting to Rs. 1,554, fell into arrear, and the whole, including the four which had just been purchased by the mortgagee, were notified for sale by the Collector. The situation of matters accordingly then was that, so far as the ownership of the property was concerned, a transaction of sale thereof in favour of the mortgagee as purchaser had in point of fact taken place, and this at a time when, by the use of the ordinary information available as public facts, or upon enquiry with regard to the property purchased it, would have been found that the period of the falling due of revenue was almost at hand, and that proceedings preliminary to a sale in respect of arrears then left unpaid would inevitably be commenced.

The mortgagee, however, did not pay the revenue which fell due at the end of March. Without doing so, he went forward with proceedings to get the sale to himself in execution of the mortgage confirmed. On the 23rd April he obtained a certificate confirming the sale, the certificate bearing that he "has been declared the purchaser at sale by public auction on the 19th March, 1900 . . . and that the said sale has been duly confirmed by this Court on the 23rd April 1900."

It was maintained in argument for the mortgagee that the true meaning of this was that the sale to him did not become a legal fact until the 23rd April. In their Lordships' opinion, this is an under-statement and a misstatement of the mortgagee's rights. It is true that upon that date the sale was confirmed, but what was, as the certificate bears, confirmed, was a sale "by public auction on the 19th March 1900." There seems little reason to doubt that upon the 19th March all the lands sold had been transferred to the mortgagee, and that if there had been any accretions to the property between that date and the date of confirmation, those accretions would have become the property of the purchaser. On the other hand, there seems no legal principle which would leave un-transferred to the mortgagee any obligations which arose during the same period. Furthermore, if the properties which were the subject of sale were liable to attachment for sums due from the lands as revenue, and falling into arrear subsequent to the actual date of sale, namely, the 19th March 1900, it was not within the legal right of the mortgatee on the one hand to claim as against the mortgagor that the ownership of the property had been transferred, and at the same time to claim against the Government, or in respect of third parties unconnected with either mortgagor or mortgagee, that the mortgagor had not transferred the rights of ownership to the mortgagee, but himself remained in the position of owner. For the mortgagee to be permitted to say to the mortgagor that the ownership had been transferred, and to say to an outsider, like the Collector of Revenue, that the ownership had not been transferred, is a conclusion not supported by good sense and, in the opinion of their Lordships, they are not forced to it by any canon or rule of law.

If the date of sale be taken as the true and actual date in fact, which, in their Lordships' opinion, was, as explained, the 19th March 1900, it appears to their Lordships equally clear that what was in fact then sold was the estate itself and nothing other or less than this which might be denominated by the terms "right, title, or interest" of the mortgagor only, or the like. And it would seem to follow as a necessary consequence that when the mortgagee thus became the purchaser and owner of the subjects mortgaged, he was not in a position to maintain as against himself, or as against third parties unconnected with mortgage transactions upon the property, the position that his mortgage still remained an encumbrance thereon.

In their Lordships' opinion it is clearly unsafe to apply considerations as to the rights of prior and succeeding mortgagees to questions like the present. For in the present case no question arises as between a first and succeeding mortgagee, and no right or duty emerges with regard to the avoidance of an inequitable priority alleged to arise inferentially by acquisition of the estate. On the 19th March 1900, the crucial date in question, there were no interests of any kind to enter into account or consideration so as to impede the full and complete transfer of ownership of the estate as such.

In these circumstances, when the 29th March 1900 was reached, the property which fell then into arrear of revenue and became liable to subsequent sale was the property in fact and in law of no one but the purchaser, namely, the mortgagee. It is admitted,—the concession was logically unavoidable,—that if at the sale on the 19th March the mortgagee himself had not purchased, but a stranger or outsider had, then such purchaser would have stood liable for the obligations accruing on the property and been responsible to Government for the payment of revenue and for the consequences which would ensue if the revenue fell into arrear. It seems somewhat difficult to discern why these consequences, which would be inevitable in the case of a stranger purchaser should be avoided because the mortgagee was purchaser himself.

The above considerations seem substantially to dispose of the whole case and lead their Lordships to a conclusion the opposite of that reached by the High Court, who think that it was possible for a mortgagee to maintain the ownership of the property in himself with an encumbrance which he should use to defeat, or, to use the term which the learned Judges employ, as a "shield against" the rights of third parties.

Upon this subject it is true that the language of sec. 54 of the Act No. XI of 1859—the Bengal Statute as to sales of land for arrears of revenue—provides that when a share or shares of an estate may be sold "the purchaser shall acquire the share or shares subject to all encumbrances, and shall not acquire any rights which were not possessed by the previous owner or owners." This provision, however, appears to their Lordships (1) to confirm the view that what is taken by a revenue vendee is nothing less nor more than what belonged to the former owner, and (2) to negative the idea that it is open to an owner to protect himself as by "a shield" against the consequences of that full transfer by keeping incumbrances alive against the revenue vendee. These incumbrances had become extinct and lost in the mortgagee's overriding right when he became the complete owner of the lands. To keep them alive as sought would introduce confusion into the mechanism of transfer and an insecurity into the rights in real estate which are not warranted by the Act.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the judgments of the Courts below be reversed, and that the Plaintiff be declared entitled to the lands in suit in terms of the plaint, that possession be delivered to the Appellant of the properties in dispute the possession of the Respondent being removed, that the name of the Plaintiff be caused to be entered in the Land Registration Office accordingly, the name of the Defendant being expunged and his illegal possession removed, and that the cause be remitted to the High Court for the ascertainment of mesne profits for the period of dispossession up to the date of delivery of possession and for a decree therefor against the Respondent. The Respondent will pay the costs both here and in the Courts below.

THE NEW ZEALAND INSURANCE CO., LD.

Policy of Marine insurance—Perils of the sea—Wear and tear not included within the words.

Where a boat was insured against perils of the sea, and it was proved that it sank in fair weather and smooth water without any assignable cause and where it was not proved that the bottom plates had sprung a leak in consequence of the alleged bumping of the boat, and where also there was some evidence of the boat having been deliberately scuttled, which if not accepted would lead to the inference that the bottom plates had corroded in consequence of age and ordinary wear and tear:

Held—That the case was not covered by the terms of the policy.

The term "perils of the sea" refers only to fortuitous accidents or casualties of the sea. The words do not cover every loss of which the sea is the immediate cause and so wear and tear do not come within the meaning of those words. There must be some casualty, something which could not be foreseen as one of the necessary accidents of adventure.

W. STEWART v. THE NEW ZEALAND INSURANCE CO., LD.

The facts material to the report are sufficiently stated in the judgment.

Messrs. Langford James and Pankridge for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. B. C. Mitter, L. P. E. Pugh and H. G. Pearson for the Defendants.

CHAUDHURI, J.—The Plaintiff is the owner of a Steam Launch named The Fox. It was an old Government boat which the Plaintiff purchased. He had it repaired and eventually chartered it to a firm in Chittagong. It was sent to Chittagong where there was some difficulty with the charterers whose creditors appeared to have attached the boat. After some considerable trouble, the Plaintiff succeeded in getting the boat away. It apparently started back some time after July 1910 and arrived at Port Canning. The Plaintiff states that it met with rough weather on the return voyage and lost two water tanks and a jolly boat, but no damage was done to the boat itself. He himself took charge of the boat at Matla and came to Calcutta on the 8th or 10th October 1909. The delay was due to the crew and want of coal. The boat had been insured for the return voyage with the Defendant company, but when it arrived at Port Canning the Plaintiff wrote to them that having regard to the delay which had taken place further insurance was necessary. At last an insurance was effected with the Defendant company on the 17th of September 1909, for one year, for Rs. 15,000 the amount of the policy in suit. Out of the premium payable to the Defendant company a sum of Rs. 187-8-0 had been paid before the loss of the boat and Rs. 562-8-0 remained unpaid.

The Plaintiff alleges that the boat has been totally lost to him. It sank on the other side of the river near Shibpur, and was a total wreck and he claimed the amount of the insurance Rs. 15,000 less the amount of the premium due. He claimed this amount as covered by his insurance as against "perils of the seas."

It appears that after the boat was brought to the Shalimar side, opposite Shibpur, there was a gale on the 17th of October; the ship broke loose and drifted to the Calcutta side. It was towed back by the Port Commissioners to the Shibpur side on the 18th of October. The Plaintiff states that no damage was done to the boat except that some portion of the wood work had been washed away. He says he intended to beach the boat in order to give it a coat of paint, and that he left orders with the secunny for that purpose, but his orders were not carried out. The secunny is said to have made various excuses and at last wanted a dinghy to carry ropes from the vessel to the shore, for the purpose of beaching it and that the Plaintiff eventually engaged a dinghy two or three days before the accident took place. Even then his orders were not carried out, upon which he sent his son, Donald Stewart, to the vessel on the 22nd of October to see that it was beached. A friend of this young man of the name of West accompanied him. They went at night and West's account is that they went to sleep, Donald Stewart leaving orders that the men were to wake him up at 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning in order to beach the boat. They went to sleep in the same cabin. They were however suddenly roused about day dawn on being told that the ship was filling with water. They came down and had just time to get into a dinghy, when the vessel sank. It sank in fair weather and smooth water. According to the Plaintiff there are only two theories possible, namely, that either the boat was deliberately scuttled, or that the bottom plate had corroded and sprung a leak. He said that simple corrosion of the bottom plate would not account for the leak, if any, but there must have been bumps superadded to start the plate leaking, and he stated that he had heard from his son that on the night of the occurrence he had distinctly felt a bump of what he thought was a country boat. His explanation was that it was possibly due to this collision, added to the fact that the bottom plate had probably corroded which had started a leak and in consequence of which the vessel sank. He stated that all the plates of this boat had been renewed three years before the accident, except the bottom plates which could not be renewed without the boiler being lifted, and as that involved much expense, they were not changed. Unfortunately we have not got the evidence of Donald Stewart who had died since the accident, but the statement of the Plaintiff finds no corroboration from that of the secunny. The Plaintiff stated that the secunny had corroborated his son shortly after the accident. The secunny however stated in the witness-box that he knew nothing of any boat bumping that night. Therefore, so far as the collision theory is concerned, I must reject it as without evidence. It was never suggested at the earlier stages of the case, and seems to have been an after-thought. The evidence is that the boat was in a water-tight condition up to the night of the accident and suddenly sank in smooth water and fair weather.

The boat, as I have said, sank in the morning of the 23rd of October. No intimation was given by the Plaintiff to the Insurance Company that day or the next. He says 23rd October was a close holiday, 24th October was a Sunday, and he received a letter on the morning of the 25th from the Insurance Company calling his attention to the fact that his boat had sunk. He immediately sent a reply. He promised to see Mr. Legatt of the Insurance Company on the 28th, but did not go to him before the 30th. His explanation is that inasmuch as the secunny was ill, he could get no information from him. So far as the statement of the illness is concerned, it is not supported by the secunny. He was not ill. He was somewhat fatigued and distressed according to his own account. But the Plaintiff's description of the illness was somewhat graphic. When stating that the secunny was ill, the Plaintiff showed how he shook with fever when he came to him. The secunny denies that he had fever. This seems to be an invention on the part of the Plaintiff. There was no protest made by the secunny until the 23rd of November 1909 and it is important to see what is stated there. The secunny's statement on that occasion was that the boat had started a leak in the forehold and in consequence gone down. Now, the Plaintiff says the boat could not have started a leak in the forehold. The plates had been changed, and he says it was the secunny's mistake. The leak must have started according to him in the engine hold, which is the centre hold, somewhere under the ash-plate of the boiler. The water must have rushed into the middle hold through the bottom plate and from there forced its way into the forehold, and he stated as his ground for so saying, that the boat had sunk stern foremost. It is difficult to accept a theory of that kind, when the man who was actually on the boat states that the leak must have sprung in the forehold. The protest also suggests that some of the rivets must have got loose during the storm on the 17th of October. This is not supported by the Plaintiff at all. He does not suggest it, the secunny also does not support it, and the statements made in the protest are contradicted by the evidence which has been given. The Plaintiff denies he knew what the secunny was going to say in the protest, but the language used does not seem to be the secunny's. He no doubt made his statement in Bengali, but the way the protest puts the case, I doubt, if the secunny could have put it.

There was considerable evidence given about the finding of a plug, a gland attached to the plug, and some pins. The plug is said to belong to one of the sea-cocks. If the plug was removed from the sea-cock, it is conceded that the boat would have made water and sunk. The evidence of the Defendant company is this, that one Capt. Haines was employed by them to raise the boat. The boat was raised on or about the 18th December. On the morning of the 19th a man of the name of Metcalfe who was employed on the boat was there, Capt. Haines was there and a coolie who was working on the boat brought up from the bottom of the boat a plug and a gland, the same as produced. At that time one Mathieson, a Chief Engineer of the River Steam Navigation Company, was there also. These things were brought up in their presence from the hold of the boat. We have the evidence of Capt. Haines on this point: Mathieson has been examined and Metcalfe also. So far as Capt. Haines is concerned, he was examined on commission. When application was made for the issue of a commission, it was strenuously opposed by the Plaintiff on the ground that it would be impossible for him to join in it, as he could not afford the expense, but the learned Judge, who heard the matter and ordered the commission, thought that no sufficient ground had been shown by the Plaintiff against its issue. Counsel for the Plaintiff protested at that time as he said it practically prevented his client from cross-examining Capt. Haines. He further stated that his client was not going to join in the commission; but subsequently the Plaintiff did join in the commission. His Attorney wrote to the Registrar asking for leave to join in the commission and such leave was given, and the commission was sent out to Moulmein on the 23rd of January. The practice in this Court is that when a commission issues in this way the parties have to appear before the commissioner and get a date fixed for the examination of the witness. It appears that a summons in this case was issued on Capt. Haines on the 15th of February at the instance of the Defendants' lawyers. The Plaintiff did not appear on that occasion, or on any other. He was not present, nor was he represented. He made no attempt to appear before the commissioner. He did not even communicate with him. The examination was fixed for the 19th February and the commission was returned on the 28th of February 1912. During this time no attempt was made by the Defendant to take any steps for the cross-examination of the witness, and although the case was not heard till long afterwards, no application was made by him, either for the purpose of being allowed to cross-examine Capt. Haines, or for getting an order that his evidence could not be used, as he alleged he had no notice when the commission had issued. He had joined in the commission and it was incumbent upon him to communicate with the commissioner if he intended to appear. I think that the Plaintiff allowed this witness to go un-cross-examined in the hope of getting his evidence rejected by not appearing at Moulmein. Having regard to the case, Gregory v. Dulichand (1), in which it was held that the opposing party had a right to notice of every proceeding held under a commission, I was at first inclined not to admit this evidence, but having regard to the facts subsequently elicited, I have allowed it. My conviction is that it was a deliberate omission on the part of the Plaintiff not to take any steps for the cross-examination of Capt. Haines. The evidence of Capt. Haines, if accepted, is almost conclusive. He speaks about the discovery of the plug and the conclusion one must draw from the facts stated by him is that the boat must have been scuttled. The plug must have been deliberately removed, it could not have been forced out of its place by the water coming in. But although I have admitted the evidence of Captain Haines, I do not think it is safe to rely upon it without corroboration. It is un-cross-examined testimony. I have, therefore, to consider the evidence of Metcalfe and Mathieson. Metcalfe speaks about finding the plug, and I do not see any reason why he should be disbelieved. His account is very clear. He mentions who the persons were, who were present on that occasion and how the plug was found and the only ground suggested for disbelieving this witness is the allegation that Capt. Haines has some improper relationship with this man's sister, a married sister, with whom he does not correspond. I think it is a cruel suggestion to make, and not at all a worthy one. There is no evidence in support of it except a statement by the Plaintiff that Capt. Haines at one time lived in a room, which belonged to Mrs. Elder, Metcalfe's sister, in a house which the Plaintiff was occupying. With regard to Mathieson also I see no reason for disbelieving him. His recollection is not quite clear as regards the things found on the occasion he says he was present. He spoke about a spanner, a gland, a plug &c. being found. His impression is that all the things were found at the same time, one after the other. This does not agree with the version of Metcalfe who speaks to the plug being found in his presence, and the other things later. No reason has been suggested why Mathieson should be disbelieved. He holds a respectable position, under a well-known firm in Calcutta and appears to be an independent witness. Except for this discrepancy as to the time when all these articles were found, there is nothing against his evidence. A pencil entry in his log-book is also challenged as suspicious. He says that he wanted to keep a record of what happened, but as it was not official he made a note in pencil. As to the note I am not inclined to give it much weight, but I see no reason to doubt his veracity. There is also the evidence of Captain Stewart who did not see any leaks or cracks in the plate, and speaks to the hold being water-tight. Taking all this evidence together I hold the plug was out of its place, that it was found in the bottom of the boat and had been removed and that the removal of the plugs caused the boat to sink.

As against this evidence we have the evidence of a man of the name of Domingo. He was a very unsatisfactory witness, and although he did not show any signs of being drunk, it was suggested by the Plaintiff's Counsel in his reply that he must have been drunk. He was for a considerable time in the witness-box and appeared to me to be entirely unreliable and untruthful. He said that he was asked by Captain Haines to find a plug and gland, as they would be necessary for the Insurance Company, suggesting by that, that he had been asked by Captain Haines to remove these things and that they were going to be utilised for making a case that the sea-cocks had been left deliberately open. He says that when he was cleaning the mud out of the boat, after it had been raised, he saw these things in their place. He mentioned the matter to Captain Haines, but to his astonishment next morning these things had disappeared. He informed Captain Haines that they were gone, which made Captain Haines very angry. He stated that he believed that Captain Haines had deliberately caused the disappearance of these things. He subsequently withdrew from that, but came back to it again, and charged Captain Haines with having engineered this incident. It appears to me that the Plaintiff felt that some answer should be given about the plug not being found in its proper place and that Domingo was put forward to supply that evidence. He was discovered by a man of the name of Murray who stated that he had at one time been a partner of Capt. Haines. His evidence was simply that he went to see this boat after it had been raised, and found Domingo working there. "He did not go on the boat, and knew nothing about its condition. One day Domingo casually met him, long after the date of his visit to the boat. Murray took him home, and had a talk with him about the accident and thought that his evidence would be useful for the Plaintiff. He sent Domingo with a letter to the Plaintiff and the Plaintiff sent him on to his Attorney to make a statement. On Domingo being asked if he had mentioned any of the facts stated by him in the witness-box to Murray he at first said "No," but within a minute afterwards he said he had made a complete statement to Murray. I entirely disbelieve the evidence of Domingo as regards the charges made against Captain Haines and the way he says the plug disappeared from its place.

Upon this evidence, I am inclined to believe that the Plaintiff knew how the plug had been removed. It is unnecessary for me to deal with this matter at any length, as I consider that the case is not covered by the terms of the policy. It is an insurance against perils of the seas, and there is abundant authority for holding that a boat sinking under these circumstances in fair weather and smooth water did not sink by a peril of the sea. The term "perils of the seas" refers only to fortuitous accidents or casualties of the sea. It does not include the ordinary action of the wind and waves. It is well settled that it is not every loss or damage of which the sea is the immediate cause, that is covered by these words. They do not protect for example against the natural and inevitable action of the winds and waves, which result in what may be described as wear and tear. There must be some casualty, something which could not be foreseen, as one of the necessary accidents of adventure. See Lord Herschell's judgment in The "Xantho" (2).

Reference was made to the case of Anderson v. Morice (3) and also to the cases of Gibson v. Small (4), Thompson v. Hopper (5), Fawcett v. Sarsfield (6) in support of the proposition that there is no implied warranty of seaworthiness in Time policies.

In Anderson v. Morice (3), the boat went down in fine weather, but there was a large body of evidence given as to the cause of the accident, and upon that evidence the jury came to the conclusion that it was covered by the terms of the policy.

It is unnecessary to deal with the other cases which were referred to during argument, except Blackburn v. The Liverpool and Brazil River Plate Steam Navigation Company (7). That was a case of injury to goods which were insured. A plug had been left open and water came in, and damaged the goods. The case depended on what is known as the "negligence clause." Lord Halsbury held upon the facts that the injury was covered by the words "perils of the seas." He however affirmed the principle laid down in Hamilton v. Pandorf (8), that there must be something fortuitous and unexpected, that wear and tear did not come within the words "perils of the seas." If the boat was not deliberately scuttled, the only other explanation offered is that the bottom plate had corroded, through natural causes.

I hold that the Plaintiff's suit fails and dismiss it with costs on scale No. 2.

Mr. Pearson—The costs will include the costs of the commission and the De bene esse examination.

Nos. 355 AND 356 OF 1912 AND

RULE No. 4041 OF 1912.

BRETT, J.	}	THE EASTERN MORTGAGE

Judgment,	}	RAKKA KHATUN and

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 94 (d), Or. 40, r. 1—Receiver, appointment of, in mortgage suit—Mortgagee's right—Court's discretion—Interest and Government revenue left in arrears, if sufficient ground—Nomination of Receiver.

Though the appointment of a Receiver pendente lite is a matter entirely within the discretion of the Court, it must in the exercise of that discretion be guided by the circumstances of each particular case; and it has been laid down as a general rule that the appointment of a Receiver will be made as a matter of course on the application of a mortgagee if the interest payable under the security is in arrears.

Where it appeared that the original mortgage debt sued upon had trebled and no interest whatever had been paid to the mortgagees and that on the other hand the mortgagees had been compelled to advance money to pay the Government revenue on the mortgaged properties in order to save them from sale for arrears and that to recover the sums so advanced they had been compelled to bring another suit:

THE EASTERN MORTGAGE AND AGENCY COMPANY, LIMITED v. RAKEA KHATUN.

Held—That it was a fit case for the appointment of a Receiver.

As a general rule the right to propose a person for appointment as Receiver belongs to the party interested in obtaining the appointment and effect will be given to his nomination. But if the Court appoints a Receiver at the instance of a mortgagee—the mortgagee not having, without the assistance of the Court, power to appoint a Receiver—then the Court exercises its discretion as to who shall be appointed Receiver and appoints the Receiver whom, having regard to the interest of both mortgagee and mortgagor, the Court considers the best person.

These were Appeals preferred on the 26th of June 1912 against the order of Babu Lal Behari Bhaduri, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah Backergunge, dated the 10th of June 1912.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Mr. B. C. Mitter, Babus Provash Chunder Mitter and Ambica Pada Chowdhury for the Appellants.

Babus Jogesh Chunder Roy and Gunada Charan Sen for the Respondents.

These two Appeals, Nos. 355 and 356 of 1912, are directed against two orders passed by the Subordinate Judge of Backergunge in two mortgage suits brought by the present Appellants, the Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co., Ltd., against the Defendants-Respondents, Rakea Khatun, widow of the late Tajamal Ali Choudhury and others, to recover the principal and interest due on two mortgage bonds executed by Tajamal Ali Choudhury and others on the 18th September 1896 and the 9th September 1897 respectively. The former bond covered a loan of Rs. 8,800 and the latter a loan of Rs. 3,50,000 and contained a proviso that Rs. 1,00,000 should be afterwards lent if the conditions under which the original loan was made were complied with. One of the conditions imposed in the mortgage deeds was that Messrs. Garth and Weatherall were to be appointed managers on behalf of the mortgagors of the mortgaged properties and that they were to pay off the mortgage debt with interest out of the profits of the mortgaged properties and also to take their own commission. These two gentlemen were duly appointed managers and the additional Rs. 1,00,000 was afterwards advanced. Obstruction to the management is said to have been offered by the mortgagors with the result that the managers were unable to collect the rents from the mortgaged properties or to pay to the mortgagees any portion of the mortgage debt or of the interest.

Meanwhile in consequence of quarrels between the mortgagors and their co-sharers in the properties covered by the mortgages as well as in other properties belonging to the family, on the 14th December 1901, Messrs. Garth and Weatherall applied to the Collector of Backergunge asking that steps should be taken to prevent a breach of the peace and to enable them to obtain possession of the properties covered by the mortgages. The Collector sent on the application to the District Judge in whose Court it was numbered as Misc. Case No. 74 of 1901. The result of the proceedings taken on this application in the Court of the District Judge was that on 27th March 1902, he called on the co-owners in the estate to appoint a common manager. They failed to do so and, on the 1st May

THE EASTERN MORTGAGE AND AGENCY COMPANY, LIMITED & RAKHA KHATUN.

1902, the District Judge passed an order under sec. 95, cl. 2 of the Bengal Tenancy Act directing that the management of the estate should be taken over by the Court of Wards; and as a temporary arrangement he appointed, on the 12th August 1902, Abdul Ali Chowdhury as common manager of the estate. On the 23rd December 1902, the Court of Wards declined to take over the management and Abdul Ali Chowdhury was allowed to remain on as common manager. On the 8th May 1903, the District Judge removed Abdul Ali Chowdhury from the managership as his management was not satisfactory and as he was related to some of the co-owners. The Judge on the application of Messrs. Garth and Weatherall then appointed Babu Nibaran Charan Dass as common manager but, on the 9th September 1903, another application was made by Messrs. Garth and Weatherall that the estate should be placed under the management of the Court of Wards.

On the 16th September 1903, the Court of Wards agreed to take over the management subject to the condition that the Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co., Ltd., would remit the sum of Rs. 1,50,000 from their debt subject to the condition that the loan was paid off within a certain time. This was agreed to and the estate was under the management of the Court of Wards from the 17th September 1903 to the 15th May 1912. The Court of Wards on the 15th March 1912 gave notice that they would give up the management on that date.

Meanwhile, on the 11th September 1911, no payments having been made up to that date in discharge of the mortgage debt or the interest, the Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co., Ltd., instituted the two suits to recover the whole sum due on the mortgage bonds with interest to date and also another suit on a promissory note for money advanced by the company to pay the Government revenue which had fallen due on the mortgaged properties.

After receipt from the Court of Wards of the intimation that it proposed to give up the management on the 15th May 1912, notices were issued by the District Judge to the co-owners of the estate to show cause why a common manager should not be appointed and no cause having been shewn the District Judge on the 7th May 1912 appointed Babu Debendra Nath Dutt, a pleader of his Court, as common manager of the Estate.

On the 5th June 1912, application was made by the Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co., Ltd., to the District Judge to set aside the order appointing the manager on the ground that it had been made without notice to them though they were co-proprietors having purchased 87 items of property in the estate but on the same date the District Judge passed an order refusing the application.

On the 28th June 1912, a Rule was obtained from this Court on the mortgages and other co-owners of the estate to show cause why the order of the District Judge of the 5th June should not be set aside on the ground that it appeared to have been passed without sufficient evidence and without any notice to the Petitioners. This Rule is Rule No. 4081 of 1912.

On the 5th June 1912, applications were made to the District Judge in both of the suits (Nos. 442 and 444 of 1911) brought on the mortgages, for the appointment of a Receiver pending the disposal of the two suits. These applications were disallowed by the Subordinate Judge in a long order recorded on the 10th June 1912.

THE EASTERN MORTGAGE AND AGENCY COMPANY, LIMITED v. RAKEA KHATUN.

Appeals from Orders Nos. 355 and 356 of 1912 are against these two orders.

At the request of the parties the hearing of these two Appeals and of the Rule No. 4081 of 1912 have been expedited and all these will be disposed of in this judgment.

Dealing first with the two Appeals we are of opinion that the grounds given by the Subordinate Judge in his order of the 10th June 1912 are not sound and cannot be maintained. It appears from the statements of the learned Counsel for the Appellants that the original mortgage debt of Rs. 4,50,000 has trebled and has now risen to over Rs. 12,00,000. Meanwhile no interest whatever appears to have been paid to the mortgagees and on the contrary the mortgagees appear to have been compelled to advance money to pay the Government revenue on the mortgaged properties in order to save them from sale for arrears, and to recover the sums so advanced they have been compelled to bring another suit on the promissory note.

Though the appointment of a Receiver pendente lite is a matter entirely within the discretion of the Court it must in the exercise of that discretion be guided by the circumstances of each particular case; and it has been laid down as a general rule that the appointment of a Receiver will be made as a matter of course on the application of a mortgagee, if the interest payable under the security is in arrear (see Coote, Law of Mortgages, page 946, and the leading cases referred to therein).

Disagreeing therefore with the Subordinate Judge we hold that in the case of the applications with regard to which these two appeals have been brought the mortgagees are entitled to have a Receiver of the properties covered by the mortgage appointed pending the disposal of the two suits.

We understand that the Subordinate Judge who recorded the judgment in which the order was passed disallowing the application has retired. It is therefore not necessary for us to express at any length our opinion on the language and substance of his judgment. We need only observe that the learned pleader for the Respondent has not attempted to support the grounds on which the Subordinate judge has based his order and in our opinion they are altogether insufficient, and many of the suggestions made in his judgment appear to have no foundation in any facts.

We therefore decree both the Appeals and set aside the order passed by the Subordinate Judge refusing the applications made by the mortgagees.

As to the selection of a Receiver the parties before us have differed in opinion. Dealing with this question we have to observe that as a general rule the right to propose a person for the appointment of a Receiver belongs to the party interested in obtaining the appointment, and effect will be given to his nomination. Also if the Court appoints a Receiver at the instance of a mortgagee, the mortgagee not having, without the assistance of the Court power to appoint a Receiver, then the Court exercises its discretion as to who shall be appointed Receiver, and appoints the Receiver whom it thinks best to appoint for the interest of the mortgagee and of the mortgagor; a person whom having regard to the interests of both the Court considers to be the best person:—(Coote, Law of Mortgage, page 958).

Before us both parties are agreed that it is desirable that the gentleman appointed as Receiver should be one fully acquainted with and experienced in the management of Estates, and that the selection of a member of the bar who has no such experience or knowledge should not be approved. They are also agreed that in the interest of both parties it is much to be desired that the offices of common manager and Receiver should be united in one individual.

The learned Counsel for the Appellant has suggested on behalf of his clients that Mr. Thomas Cunliffe Tweadie, who has considerable experience and knowledge of zemindari management, should be selected as Receiver of the properties covered by the mortgages, and from the testimonials which have been filed we agree that that gentleman would be a suitable selection.

On behalf of the mortgagors exception to his appointment is taken on the ground that Mr. Tweadie is managing other Estates on behalf of the mortgagees. This however does not appear to us to constitute any valid objection to his being appointed as Receiver in the present suits. Certainly he would be the person best suited for the appointment in the interest of the mortgagees and in these suits the interests of both parties are in fact identical, namely, to secure a careful and firm management of the property and a proper collection and appropriation of the profits.

In our opinion therefore the application of the mortgagees should be granted and Mr. Tweadie should be appointed Receiver of the properties covered by the mortgage bonds pending the disposal of the suits.

We have now to deal with the Rule of 1912 which is directed against the order of the District Judge appointing Babu Upendra Nath Dutt as common manager. Neither party have expressed any opinion against the character and probity of this gentleman but both are agreed that it is desirable in the interests of the Estate that a gentleman, having greater knowledge and experience of the management of Estates than he has, should be appointed as common manager. In these circumstances we think that the Rule should be made absolute and the order of the District Judge appointing him as common manager should be set aside. We have received from the learned pleader who represents the Respondents in Appeal No. 356 of 1912 a list containing the names of four gentlemen who are suggested for the appointment of common manager. They are M. Najimuddin Ahmed, Babus Benoy Bhusan Gupta, Upendra Nath Sen, Basanta Kumar Guha.

The learned Counsel for the Appellants has not offered any objection to the second-named. It must however be left to the District Judge to make his own selection from these gentlemen and Mr. Tweadie; and in doing so we think he should endeavour to make such an appointment as will be best for the interests of the Estate and of both parties.

The Appellants are entitled to their costs in these two Appeals. We fix the hearing-fees at three gold mohurs in each. Each party will bear their own costs in the Rule.

Let the records be sent down to the lower Court without delay.

Appeals allowed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
SURENDRA NATH RAY and others, Defendants,
Respondents.

Decree, if may be set aside as fraudulent, on proof that it was based on perjured evidence—Res judicata, bar of—Review of judgment upon newly discovered evidence showing previous evidence perjured.

A decree obtained in a suit cannot be set aside in a subsequent action brought for that purpose on mere proof that the previous decree was obtained by perjured evidence.

If evidence not originally available comes to the knowledge of a litigant and he can show thereby that evidence on which a decree against him was obtained was perjured, his remedy lies in seeking a review of judgment. But the rule of res judicata prevents him from re-agitating the matter on the same materials, or on materials which might have been laid before the Court in the first instance.

ABOULOFF v. OPENHEIMER (6), VADALA v. LAWES (7), PRIESTMAN v. THOMAS (8), COLE v. LANGFORD (9) referred to.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 27th of August 1909 against the decree of Mr. F. Roe, District Judge of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 7th of June 1909, affirming the decree of Babu Raj Krishna Banerjee, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 28th of January 1909.

The appeal arose out of a suit brought by the present Plaintiff who was the Defendant in a previous suit for ejectment instituted in 1906 by the present Defendants as Plaintiffs, to set aside an ex parte decree passed against him in that suit on the ground that the decree had been obtained by fraud. The fraud complained of was, (1) that the present Defendants had in their plaint in the suit for ejectment included lands which did not in fact belong to them, and (2) that the evidence on which the Defendants had obtained that decree was, to their knowledge, false. The Plaintiff alleged that he had, as the Defendants well knew, a mourasi mokurari tenancy, or at any rate a good raiya right, in the land in suit, and he prayed for a decree declaring his right of occupancy in the land; for a declaration that the decree in the ejectment suit was illegal and fraudulent and fit to be set aside, for a perpetual injunction restraining the Defendants from executing that decree and for other reliefs.

On this occasion also Plaintiff appeals not to have been ready to go on with his case on the day fixed for hearing, and the Munsif had to decide the case without any evidence adduced by the Plaintiff.

MUNSHI MOSUFUL HUQ v. SUREDRA NATH RAY.

The Munsif found in the materials before him that the decree in the ejectment suit had been passed ex parte against the Plaintiff because an application for time made by him on an adjourned date of hearing had been refused, and, not being ready to go on with the case, he had retired and abstained from cross-examining his adversaries' witnesses. The Plaintiff had thereupon preferred an appeal against that decree on all the grounds specified in his present plaint, but without success, and a second appeal to the High Court was also dismissed. He had also preferred an application under sec. 108 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, also unsuccessfully, and had carried that matter up to the Appellate Court but without success.

On the 4thth September 1908, he instituted the present suit. The Munsif observed that in this case the Plaintiff did not even allege that he had been prevented from substantiating his defence in the ejectment suit by any fraud of his adversaries, that both the so-called grounds of fraud alleged in the present plaint were really grounds of defence in the previous suit and had in fact been relied upon by him in that suit. Under the circumstances, he was of opinion that the suit was not maintainable. He accordingly dismissed the suit.

On appeal this judgment was affirmed by the District Judge who in the course of his judgment observed: "He now appeals on the ground that he was prepared to prove that the ejectment decree was obtained by perjury. If this was all he was required to prove, he would be able to keep this question of ejectment going in the Courts for the whole of his natural life and bequeath it to his heirs as a pastime for generations. He is required also to prove that by fraud the Court was prevented from detecting the perjury. This has not even alleged in his plaint."

The Plaintiff then preferred this Second Appeal.

Mr. B. Chuckerbutty and Moulvi Nur-uddin Ahmed for the Appellant.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghosh, Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty, Mohendra Nath Roy, Tarak Chandra Chuckerbutty, Ramesh Chandra Sen and Biraj Mohan Mojumdar (for the Deputy Registrar) for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is a Second Appeal against the decision of the District Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge and dismissing the Appellant's suit for the setting aside of a decree on the ground of fraud.

In 1906, the Appellant was sued in ejectment by the Respondent, and a decree was obtained against him ex parte. An application for the discharge of that decree and the re-hearing of the suit was made under sec 108 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882; but it was refused and the refusal was affirmed on appeal. A regular appeal against the ex parte decree was next preferred; but it was dismissed by the first Appellate Court, and a second appeal to the High Court was equally unsuccessful. The suit out of which the present second appeal arises, was then instituted: and the only fraud complained of in it is that the description in the plaint of the subject-matter of the Respondent's suit of 1906, and the evidence on which the Respondent obtained the ex parte decree against the Appellant, were alike false. Both the Courts below have held that this suit was not maintainable, and the short point raised before us is as to whether an action will lie for the setting aside of a decree merely on the ground that it was based upon perjured evidence.

In Mahomed Golab v. Mahomed Sulliman (1), Petheram, C. J., laid it down that where a decree has been obtained by a fraud practised on another whereby that other has been prevented from placing his case before the tribunal which was called upon to adjudicate upon it in the way most to his advantage, the decree is not binding upon him and may be set aside in a separate suit; but that "it is not the law that, because a person against whom a decree has been passed, alleges that it is wrong and that it was obtained by perjury committed by, or at the instance of, the other party, which is of course fraud of the worst kind, he can obtain a re-hearing of the questions in dispute in a fresh action by merely changing the form in which he places it before the Court, and alleging in his plaint that the first decree was obtained by the perjury of the person in whose favour it was given." "To so hold would," the learned Chief Justice continued, "be to allow defeated litigants to avoid the operation, not only of the law which regulated appeals, but also of that which relates to res judicata as well;" and reference was made to the reasons why this could not be, given by James, L. J., on behalf of himself and Thesiger, L. J., in Flower v. Lloyd (2): "Where," Lord Justice James enquired, "is litigation to end, if a judgment obtained in an action fought out adversely between two litigants sui juris and at arm's length could be set aside by a fresh action on the ground that perjury had been committed in the first action, . . . ? There are hundreds of actions tried every year in which the evidence is irreconcilably conflicting and must be on one side or other wilfully and corruptly perjured. In this case, if the Plaintiffs had sustained in their appeal the judgment in their favour, the present Defendants, in their turn, might bring a fresh action to set that judgment aside on the ground of perjury of the principal witness and subornation of perjury; and so, the parties might go on ad infinitum. . . . Perjuries, falsehoods, frauds, when detected, must be punished and punished severely: but in their desire to prevent parties litigants from obtaining any benefit from such foul means, the Court must not forget the evils which may arise from opening such new sources of litigation, amongst such evils not the least being that it would be certain to multiply infinitely the mass of those very perjuries, falsehoods and frauds."

It is true that the observations of Sir Comer Petheram in Mahomed Gulab's case (1) are not binding upon us because the actual decision in it reduced them to the level of obiter dicta. But the view his Lordship expressed was cited and acted upon by a Division Bench of this Court in Abdul Huq v. Abdul Hafez (3), and, as that decision is precisely in point, it is an authority which we must, under Rule 1 in Chap. V of the Appellate Side Rules, follow or make the subject of a reference to a Full Bench. Another Division Bench, it appears, has recently in the case of Lakhmi Churn Saha v. Nur Ali (4) refused to be so bound, because, the learned Judges (D. Chatterjee and N. R.

Chatterjea, JJ.), said, "the authority on which the judgment of Sir Comer Petheram, C. J., was based, has never been recognised as an authority in England," and, therefore, neither it nor any case based upon it was, in their opinion, binding upon them. We are not disposed to adopt this reasoning; and, in any case, having the two opposing rulings before us, we prefer to follow Abdul Hug v. Abdul Hafez (3). We find that a Division Bench of the Madras High Court has, in Venkatappa Naick v. Subba Naick (5), taken the contrary view and ruled that a suit will lie to set aside a judgment on the ground that the Defendant had obtained it by fraud in that he had committed deliberate perjury and suppressed evidence. The learned Judges (Boddam and Moore, JJ.) there declare that the law in England has been authoritatively and finally laid down in Aboulloff v. Oppenheimer (6) and Vadala v. Lawes (7), and that it is the same in India. With all deference, be it said, we doubt the completeness and finality, even in England, of these two cases. They are, of course, very high authorities: but in each of them the judgment impeached is a foreign judgment, and foreign judgments unquestionably stand on a footing of their own. Priestman v. Thomas (8) and Cole v. Langford (9) are the only English cases we know of which at all support the Appellant. In respect of the judgments of our own Courts—and neither of these seems to us to be a very clear or very decided authority on the point now before us—in the former there was an alleged collusive compromise followed by an order for probate, and the case is relevant only in so far as it shows that probate may be revoked on the ground that it was the result of a fraudulent compromise. Such a fraud would probably be within the meaning of the word as explained by Chief Justice Petheram in Mahomed Golab's case (1), and moreover the revocation of probate is governed by a law of its own. And the judgment of Ridley and Phillimore, JJ., in Cole v. Langford (9) is a very bare pronouncement following Priestman v. Thomas (8).

On the other hand the case of Patch v. Ward (10), which relates to an English judgment and was referred to and relied upon in Mahomed Golab's case (1), tends in the same direction as Flower v. Lloyd (2), while in Baker v. Wordsworth (11), Wright and Darling, JJ., were guided by the remarks of James and Thesiger, L., JJ., in Flower v. Lloyd (2), and held that a judgment in an action could not be set aside on a subsequent action brought for that purpose on mere proof that the judgment was obtained by perjury on the part of the Plaintiff in the former action.

Our conclusion is that the maxim interest reipublicæ ut sit finis litium should prevail, and that the view taken by both the Courts below is sound and should be affirmed. If evidence not originally available comes to the knowledge of a litigant and he can show thereby that the evidence on which a decree against him was obtained, was perjured, his remedy lies in seeking a review of judgment; but the rule of res judicata prevents him from re-agitating the matter on the same materials or on materials which might have been laid before the Court in, the first instance.

We may add that the present suit might apparently have been disposed of without the raising of the general question which we have been discussing; and this was, indeed, pressed upon us on behalf of the Respondents. For the Plaintiff-Appellant failed to adduce any evidence on the date fixed for the hearing, his application for an adjournment was refused, and his suit might have been dismissed for want of prosecution under sec. 102 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. But this course was not taken, and the application for an adjournment was thrown out on the same ground as the suit itself, namely, on the ground that no such suit was maintainable and, on the pleadings, further proceedings would be futile. That being so, we felt it incumbent upon us to deal with the important question of law raised by the judgments of the Courts below.

The result, as we have already foreshadowed, is that this appeal must, in our opinion, fail, and it is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE NO. 4601 OF 1911.

BRETT, J. SHARFUDDIN, J. 1912, 20, May.	}	MR. K. B. DUTT and another, Receiver, Gopal Lal Seal's Estate, Decree- holders, Petitioners, v. GOSTHA BEHARY BHUIYA and others, Judgment- debtors, Opposite Party.
--------------------------------------------------	---	------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 148A, 158B, Sch. III, Art. 6—Decree by co-sharer landlord for share of rent if a rent decree—Limitation, special, if applies.

A decree for rent obtained by a co-sharer landlord in a suit not brought under sec. 148A or sec. 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act is a money decree and the special limitation applicable to applications for execution of rent decrees does not apply to such a decree.

This was a Rule granted on the 14th of August 1911 against the order of T. S. Macpherson, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Hugbly, dated the 26th of April 1911, affirming the orders of Babu T. P. Chatterjee, Munsif of Uluberiah, dated the 3rd of September 1910.

The facts of the case were briefly as follows:—

The Petitioner brought a suit in the Court of the first Munsif of Uluberiah, for recovery, as a co-sharer landlord, of a sum of Rs. 26 6-6 (and costs) due from the Defendants on account of his share of the rent and cesses and obtained a decree.

In that suit the other co-sharer landlords of the Plaintiff were not joined as parties, and the claim was a claim for money on account of Plaintiff's share of the rent and cesses.

An application for execution of the said decree was dismissed on the 21st September 1908 for default, in Execution case No. 315 of 1908.

On the 14th July 1910, another application for execution was made in the Court of the second Munsif of Uluberiah, in which it was prayed that the Petitioner's claim under the decree might be realised by attachment and sale of the moveable and immoveable properties, and if necessary, by the arrest, of the judgment-debtors.

On the objection of one of the judgment-debtors, the learned Munsif, Babu

MR. K. B. DUTT v. GOSTHA BEHARY BHUIYA.

T. P. Chatterjee, dismissed the application with costs as barred by limitation, under the special provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, Sch. III, Art. 6. An appeal to the District Judge against this order was dismissed and the Petitioners moved the High Court and obtained this Rule.

Mr. S. P. Sinha and Babus Provash Chandra Mitra and Norendra Chandra Bose for the Petitioners.

No one appeared for the Opposite Party

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

No one appearing to oppose the Rule, we are of opinion that it should be made absolute and for the reason that the suit in which the decree was obtained by the Petitioners was a suit to which the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not apply. The suit was not one brought by the present Petitioners as co-sharer landlords under the provisions of sec. 148A or sec. 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act and, in such circumstances, the decree which they obtained was a simple money decree and, so far as we can ascertain from the materials before us, there is nothing to indicate that, in that decree, the Petitioners invoked the application of the provisions of any section of the Tenancy Act. In our opinion, the present case is distinguishable from the case of Thakumoni Dasi v. Mohendra Nath Dey (1) on which the lower Courts relied, so that, even if we were prepared to follow the decision in that case, as to which it is not necessary for us in this case to express any opinion, it would not, in our opinion, be applicable to the facts of the present case. The result, therefore, is that we make the Rule absolute, set aside the orders of the lower Courts and direct that the execution do proceed according to law. As there has been no appearance on the part of the Opposite Party in this Court, we make no order as to the costs of this Rule; but in the lower Courts, the Petitioners will be entitled to recover their costs from the Opposite Party.

Rule made absolute.

MEAJAN and others,
Accused, Petitioners,
v.

SHARAFATULLAH KHAN,
Complainant,

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 441—Criminal trespass, distinguished from civil trespass—Placing haystacks and manure on another man's land—Intention to cause annoyance, must be found.

The placing of haystacks and manure on another man's land may be civil trespass. It may cause annoyance in fact, but the act cannot be treated as criminal trespass unless it is found that it was intended by the accused to be annoyance.

"The distinction between civil and criminal trespass is one which is lost sight of by too many of the subordinate Magistrates."

One Sharafatullah Khan complained to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Feni, District Noakhali, that the three Petitioners with others were about to take forcible possession of a tank, owned and possessed by him in mourashi niskar right, by erecting 12 haystacks on its bank and depositing cowdung there. The defence was that from the time of their ancestors the accused were possessing the disputed land by putting haystacks there and using the water of the tank for drinking purposes. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate in a summary trial convicted the three Petitioners under sec. 447, I. P. C., and sentenced them to a fine of Rs. 100 each, in default one month's rigorous imprisonment and directed Rs. 60 to be paid out of the fine as compensation to the Complainant. The Magistrate recorded the following reasons :—

"Admittedly the tank belongs to the complainant. It has been in his possession from the time of their ancestors. The tank and the bank were recorded in the name of the complainant's father during the cadastral survey operations of chakla Roshanabad. From the evidence of D. W. 2 Bhairab Saha it will appear that there was a dispute between the parties before the Assistant Settlement Officer Annada Babu. The tank and the bank therefore appears to have been recorded in the possession of the complainant's father after deciding a dispute by the Assistant Settlement Officer. Hence I am not prepared to believe that the accused had their haystacks on this bank from a very old time as alleged. The accused Meajan appears to have been convicted for cutting a tree from the bank of this tank. Another accused Ahmed Ali appears to have cut a tree on another occasion, and he paid the cost and compromised the case. Thus it will appear that the tank and the bank have always been in possession of the complainant, and that the accused have never been in possession though they have made attempts now and then to take forcible possession. Hence I find the accused guilty under sec. 447, I. P. C. A deterrent punishment seems to be necessary to put a stop to this sort of affairs."

The Petitioners then moved the Sessions Judge for referring their case to the High Court, but without success. They then moved the High Court and obtained a Rule on the ground that there was no finding of anything constituting criminal trespass and that the dispute was purely of a civil nature.

Babu Ramdoyal Dey (with Babu Pramatha Lal Dutta) for the Petitioners.

No one appeared to show cause.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Rule must be made absolute on the ground on which it was issued. The explanation of the Magistrate admits that there is no finding that the accused's claim was in the nature of a sham or pretext. It may have been or it may not have been so, the only finding is that the land was in the possession of the complainant. The placing of haystacks and manure in another man's land need not necessarily be annoyance. It is not annoyance in law. It may be annoyance in fact. If it is annoyance in fact, then it must be clearly found in the judgment not only that it is annoyance but that it was intended by the accused to be annoyance. There is no such finding in this judgment and there is no other possible ground upon which a purely civil trespass can be treated as criminal trespass. The distinction between civil trespass and criminal trespass is one which is lost sight of by too many of the subordinate Magistrates.

The conviction and sentence are set aside and the fine if paid will be refunded.

Rule made absolute.

HIGH COURT, APPELLATE SIDE } H. T. CULLIS,
The 28th August 1912. } Registrar

WE HAVE NOW GOT THE FULL TEXT OF THEIR Lordships Woodroffe and Coxe, JJ's judgment in the Midnapur case. We find that the fact that Akshaya Pal has since been convicted of forgery in another case is noticed in their Lordships' judgment. There was no reference to this fact in the newspaper reports of the judgment and we are sorry to have been misled by them. We regret also that in this connection we inadvertently made use of expressions which we are sure on further consideration we would have omitted. We take this opportunity of rectifying the above error and withdrawing the expressions used in its connection.

WE PUBLISH IN ANOTHER COLUMN AN ARTICLE reviewing the law of gaming and betting in India with reference to the Cotton Figure Case. In our opinion, as we have said before, the decision of Holmwood and Imam, JJ., was strictly in accordance with the existing provisions of the law and we do not think that their Lordships would have been justified in stretching the law to meet the cases. All the same it may serve a useful purpose, especially in view of prospective legislation, to have a general review of the case-law in connection with the questions raised in that case.

THAT STRICTNESS OF A GENERAL RULE OF LAW leads at times to hardship has seldom been so glaringly illustrated as in a recent case disposed of by Carnduff and Imam, JJ. [Reference No 18 of 1912, and Appeal No. 433 of 1912] In this case five accused persons had been tried and convicted of dacoity with murder by the Sessions Judge of Chittagong who upheld the verdict of the jury and sentenced two of the accused to death and the three others to transportation for life. The evidence as to the facts on which the accused were convicted was practically the same for all but the remedy that they had on appeal was different. On the capital sentence case being referred to the High Court for confirmation of the death sentence, their Lordships considered the whole of the evidence and acquitted the men. The appeals on behalf of the three other persons were also before the same learned Judges, but notwithstanding the view of the facts that they had taken in the capital sentence case their Lordships felt bound to dismiss the appeal on behalf of these persons because there was no point of law or misdirection by the Judge made out in the case which would give them jurisdiction to interfere with the verdict of the jury accepted by the Sessions Judge.

THE ONLY COURSE THUS LEFT TO THE APPELLANTS was to appeal to His Excellency The Governor for mercy, and we are sure that His Excellency will give the most careful consideration to the case. But we should like also to point out that an amendment of the law seems to be called for in meeting cases of this kind. It is singularly anomalous that where the High Court has jurisdiction to enter into and decide on the facts of the case on appeal by one of the accused in a case, they should be precluded from giving the benefit of their findings to other accused in the same case for the simple reason that capital sentence had not been passed on them. Where more than one person are tried together and one of them is sentenced to death no technical bar ought to prevent the learned Judges of the High Court from hearing the whole case for all the accused on the same footing and giving the relief to all the accused without distinction, to which they may be found to be entitled on a consideration of the evidence.

THE LAW ALLOWING PERSONS IN INLIGENT CIRCUMSTANCES to sue as paupers is, as it is, very stringent and its rigour surely requires some relaxation in order to afford any real relief to people who cannot pursue their legal remedies owing to poverty. Pending more liberal legislation in this direction, we expect the Courts of Law to take an equitable view of the existing law and not to bar such remedies as at present exist on technical or fanciful grounds. In Rao Sheb Mungar v. Khandoo Baloo, I. L. R. 36 Bom. 279, Davar, J., of the Bombay High Court has laid down that even this privilege is a purely personal one and passes away with the death of the pauper. If the pauper has left a will, the executor, the learned Judge holds, must prove himself to be a pauper to enable him to carry on the litigation as such. In other words, the pauper testator must either appoint a pauper executor, or find another who will be ready to pursue his testator's claim at his own expense. It is always difficult to find executors who would take the personal trouble of looking after testators' affairs and the possibility of finding executors who would be prepared to finance suits on behalf of pauper testators is very remote indeed. The effect of the decision will therefore be that the pauper's right to sue, obtained after submitting himself to a very humiliating inquisition, must die with him.

In Bhagbut Dass v. Bularam Dass, 3 W. R. (Mis.) 20, which his Lordship calls "a very ancient case," a Bench of Judges of the Calcutta High Court had actually held that as there was no provision in the Code of Civil Procedure for an enquiry as to whether the applicant who claimed to be the representative of an admitted pauper was a pauper or not, such an applicant ought to be allowed to continue the suit in forma pauperis. With reference to this case his Lordship says: "This is a case which I have tried to understand the reasoning of and I regret to say I have failed. . . . I confess I absolutely fail to grasp the reasoning of the decision. I should have thought that the absence of such provision in the Code was a very strong argument for holding the other way," and his Lordship added whatever might be the meaning of that judgment he was not prepared to follow it. The reasoning which His Lordship confesses to have failed to follow is, however, so obvious that no explanation seems to us to be needed to make it more intelligible. That a legal representative stands in the shoes of the deceased is a very elementary proposition. This most modern style of criticism by Davar, J., of an "ancient decision" of some judges, who are certainly entitled to respect, is more bold than judicious since all its sarcasm which is so singularly misplaced only serves to make the observations all the more ridiculous.

* WHETHER LEGISLATION IS NECESSARY.

The comments now submitted to the public on the decision in the Cotton Figure Gambling case, Emp. v. Rampratap Neemani, are somewhat late, but inasmuch as the Legislature has not as yet drafted a Bill to amend the Police Act, it is hoped that these comments may prove of some use to the law-givers in considering the necessity of amending the Act. The decision of the Criminal Bench of the High Court in this case would seem to have for its ultimate authority the case of Watson v. Martin, 15 Cox. C. C. 3, decided in 1864 by the Court of Queen's Bench, which decision has been adopted as the final authority by the High Court in every case that has come up with regard to "gaming" and "instruments of gaming," and the words or rather the loose remarks of Justices Mellor and Crompton have been quoted with approval, without regard to the relevancy of their remarks and without considering the advance in legal ideas that has been made since 1864. The case of Watson v. Martin was under the Vagrant Act (5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 4) passed in the reign of George IV. The Judges who have followed it religiously seem to have overlooked the fact that that case was a case of very little authority inasmuch as it was not argued by counsel on both sides as only the accused was represented.

There were, in all, three cases in the Bombay High Court in which the case of Watson v. Martin was looked upon as a binding authority with respect to "instruments of gaming." They are as follows:—

(1) Reg. v. Rama Zelu, (an unreported case, decided in June 19th, 1873, by West and Nana-bhai, JJ. It was a case under sec. 11 of the Bombay Gambling Act III of 1860).

(2) Imperatrix v. Vitthal Bhaichand, 6 Bom. 19 (1881).

[This case was also under sec. 11, Bom. Gambling Act III of 1860, and decided by Melvill and Pinhey, JJ.]

(3) Queen-Empress v. Govind, 16 Bom. 283 (F. B.) [1891].

[This case was under sec. 12, Bom. Gambling Act IV of 1887 as amended by Bom. Act I of 1890, and decided by Birdwood, Jardine and Parsons, JJ.]

In all these cases the point for determination was whether coin was an "instrument of gaming" within the meaning of the Gambling Act; and it was held, on the authority of Watson v. Martin, that it was not, and that the expression "instruments of gaming" as used in the Act means instrument "devised or intended for that purpose."

With all respect to the learned Judges who decided these three cases, we are constrained to say that it is impossible to accept their view. Coin may be an instrument of gaming by being perverted to a use for which originally it was certainly not intended. Take for instance when a rupee is tossed and the game is to successfully guess whether head or tail will turn up; or if six rupees are shaken in a dice-box and thrown down to guess the number of heads or tails that turn up. Here it is just as if the rupees took the place of dice and the heads and tails, the black spots of the dice. All will agree that dice are "instruments of gaming," and will any one deny in the instance put that rupees are not instruments of gaming? It is for this reason we do not agree with the views expressed either by the Bombay High Court, or of the case of Watson v. Martin, on which the Bombay cases are founded. We cannot overlook the fact that later Acts, both in England and Bombay, have not only included coin within the expression "instruments of gaming" but have given much wider significance to the expression; and this is as it should be. And the learned Judges of the Criminal Bench (Holmwood and Imam, JJ.), who are not bound to follow the Bombay High Court, would have done well in reasoning out the question for themselves on broader principles.

Their Lordships have not thought it fit to exercise their own free judgment in following the Bombay High Court in the case of Queen-Empress v. Narotam Dass Motiram, 13 Bom. 681 (1889), which lays down that there is a distinction between "betting" and "gaming." This case considers that betting is not prohibited in India but gaming is; that there must be a game before there is gaming, and to constitute a game there must be a contest and an active participation of certain persons. The Judges held that these tests were wanting in the case before them where the accused were charged under the Bombay Act IV of 1887 with keeping a shed for the purpose of a "common gaming house." Keeping a common betting house is not an offence in India but keeping a common gaming house is. Therefore the ratio decidendi in this case is based on the distinction between gaming and betting. The Judges have tried to find a distinction by referring to Wharton's Law Lexicon and Johnson's Dictionary. The conclusion to which the learned Judges arrive is that rain-betting is not a game and the place not a common gaming house. The error in the judgment and the reasoning on which it is founded is so subtle that at first sight it is impossible to detect the error and we are inclined to yield to the conclusion although our moral sense does not accede to it.

The difference between betting and gaming is only in the lettering, and not in the meaning. The author of the article "Gaming and Wagering" in the Encyclopædia Britannica very properly says that these terms are so closely allied that it is impossible to differentiate between them. The ingenuity of man is so great that even an operation of nature can be used for purposes of gaming. It is therefore necessary to take a broader and a deeper view in dealing with the prevention of such social mischiefs and see what the Legislature intends to prevent, and it is the duty of the Judge to give effect to the intention of the Legislature, even if the gambling be under the plea of amusement, when the chances are not equal. See Roberts v. Harrison, 101 L. J. "R. 540 (1909). The Judges in the Bombay case referred to lay down a test and by that measure the facts before them, and by this process of reasoning the mistake they make is that the test is not comprehensive standard. For instance, playing with dice is allowed to be gaming between two persons who stake money on the throw of the dice, and the keeper of a house or room where such playing is carried on is properly in law amenable for keeping a common gaming house. But if the keeper keeps the dice and dice-box in the house and the public are admitted and the keeper shakes and throws the dice, and the visitors bet with each other as to the result of the throws, the winners paying a commission on the money won, is not this gaming although the persons betting do not use the dice or dice-box? Will the law be so impotent as to say this is "betting" and the house, a "common betting house"? We respectfully beg to differ and therefore we morally and legally refuse to give our consent to the correctness of the decision in L. L. R. 13 Bombay series.

In the twentieth century a legal mind finds it difficult to draw the fine distinctions which lawyers attempted to make between the words "gaming" "betting" and "wagering." The more the old cases are examined the less satisfactory do they now appear. The Act of 1710 draws a distinction between gaming and other bets or wagers. The Vagrants Act of 1873 provides: "Every person playing or betting by way of wagering or gaming...with any table or instruments of gaming or any coin, card, taken or other article used as an instrument or means of gaming at any game of chance....." Here we find all the three words "gaming" "wagering" "betting" used. In our dictionaries gaming is defined as playing for stakes; gambling; Carruthers, J., says more specifically "any sport or play carried on by two or more persons depending on skill or chance on the occurrence of an unknown future event on the result of which some valuable thing...is transferred from one to the other."

Mr. William Feilden Craies, Bar-at-Law, in his article in the last edition of the Encyclopædia Britanica on "Gaming and Wagering" says: "It is somewhat difficult exactly to define or adequately to distinguish these terms of allied meaning." The learned Judges (Holmwood and Imam, JJ.) have quoted from this article, describing the author as the "well-known authority on the interpretation of statutes." As a matter of fact Mr. W. F. Craies (and not "C. F. Craes" as appears in the judgment) is not the original author of the work which now bears his name, but Mr. Henry Hardcastle was the original author. Mr. Craies has only revised and edited Hardcastle's Statutory Law. The last edition (1911), which is Mr. Craies' Second Edition, is "founded on and being the fifth edition of Hardcastle on Statutory Law."

We would not have troubled ourselves with Mr. Craies so much but for the fact that the learned Judges have fallen into the error, first, in regarding him as the well-known authority (sic) on interpretation of statutes, and, secondly, in adopting Mr. Craies' remarks as "their own on the subject." Our readers may judge for themselves how far their Lordships were justified in adopting Mr. Craies' remarks as their own views in a case of such considerable importance. We have already said that their Lordships were wrong in following the Bombay rulings in giving too narrow a meaning to "instruments of gaming" which meaning was based on Watson v. Martin, an ex parte decision of little value. We have shown also that their Lordships have not exercised proper discretion in adopting the remarks of Mr. Craies on the distinction between gaming and wagering. We have also shown the unsubstantial nature of the distinction drawn by the Bombay High Court in Narotam Dis' case. Now let us see what the English Judges say and how they have dealt with such cases and with the Statutes. In the case of Roberts v. Harrison, 101 Law Journal Report 540, Lord Alverstone, C. J., said: "The players gambled for amusement or money's worth and I see no reason why this way of wasting money should be encouraged." Mr. Justice Jelf said: "It encourages the spirit of gambling in the boys who play it." "Did the facts which were placed before them show that the gambling was or was not within the mischief aimed at by the statute." He was of opinion that it was. The grounds for the learned Judges' decision of the case may be shortly stated thus:—(i) Persons cannot gamble even for amusement. The spirit of the statute is against it; (ii) gambling even for amusement where it leads to waste of money should not be encouraged; (iii) that if the facts disclose that the game is within the mischief aimed at by the statute, then the court will use its power to stop it; (iv) that the spirit of gambling in whatever form it assumes should not be encouraged, and the arm of the law is long enough to seize and crush it. Our Indian Judges have not followed these sound principles in crushing what Mr. Justice Holmwood declared as "a most pernicious form of gambling." In Smith's case, 4 Ch. at p. 614 (1869), Selwyn, L. J., remarked. "It is not the duty of a Court of Law to be astute to find a way in which the object of an Act of the Legislature may be defeated."

In Collier's Case, Sir R. Palmer speaking in Parliament, February 1872, laid down that "the meaning and spirit of a Statute is as much law as what is within the very letter of it, and that which is not within the meaning and spirit, though it seems to be within the letter, is not the law. That effect must be given to the object, spirit and meaning of the Statute is a rule of legal interpretation."

We would also say a word or two as to the interpretation of penal Acts. It has been said that penal statutes must be construed strictly. This means "that when the Legislature imposes a penalty the words imposing it must be clear and distinct." [Willis v. Zipp, (1675) L. R. 10 Q. B. 383 at p. 388.] "A hundred years ago" said the Court in Lyon's case, (1858) B. C. C. 38, 45, "Statutes were required to be perfectly precise and resort was not had to a reasonable construction of the Act and thereby criminals were often allowed to escape. This is not the present mode of construing Acts of Parliament. They are construed now with reference to the true meaning and real intention of the Legislature. It comes to this: that penal provisions like all others are to be fairly construed according to the legislative intent as expressed in the enactment, the Court refusing on the one hand to extend the punishment to cases which are not clearly embraced in them and on the other equally refusing by any mere verbal nicety, forced construction or equitable interpretations to exonerate parties plainly within their scope." [Vide Craies' Statute Law, pp. 459-460 (1911)]. Taking the section enacted against gambling and construing it on the principles now adopted by Judges, can it be maintained that the accused in the cotton figure gambling case does not come within the provisions of the section? The words, dice, cards, are not exhaustive and are not the only instruments. The Legislature could not enumerate all the possible forms which the ingenuity of man can devise.

We doubt not that if the principles enumerated above had been placed before the learned Judges who heard the Cotton Figure Gambling Case they might have decided against the accused who was instrumental in introducing amongst the Calcutta public "a most pernicious form of gambling" and their decision and their interpretation of the ambiguous section would have been in conformity with the principles which have actuated their English confreres to put down gambling.

III.—THE INDIAN PENAL CODE.

Sec. 4—Effect of the section.

Sec. 4 cannot affect a specific statute of Parliament and under 57, 58 Vict., c. 60 (The Merchant Shipping Act) the substantive law applicable to the case of a British Indian who is on his trial in the High Court of Calcutta for having committed murder on a British vessel in the Red sea is the English law.

EMPEROR v. SALIMULIA, 16 C. W. N. 471.

Sec. 99—Right of private defence.

Even if the accused does not specifically plead private defence he may be acquitted if the evidence shows that he was acting in self-defence.

VURANA NADAN, 1 Mad. W. N. 1912, p. 404.

Sec. 124A—Sedition—Publication.

Sending a seditious matter by post addressed not to a private individual but to the representative of a large number of men (e. g., Captain of a school) amounts to publication if it is opened by anybody.

SURESH CHANDRA SANVAL, 16 C. W. N. 812.

Sec. 147—Rioting—Right of person in actual possession.

If the persons who have actually grown the crop on the disputed land were no parties to the civil suit for possession which was decreed against their landlord or to the delivery of possession of the land, they are justified in claiming the crop they have grown and in resisting the action of the complainant in attempting to take possession under the decree of the Civil Court.

GOVINDRO GORAI, 15 C. L. J. 80.

Sec. 151—Persons liable under the section.

It is impossible to punish in every case under sec. 154, I. P. C., every person who has any interest in the land. The responsibility must depend upon the fact of the person who caused the riot being himself the person who has an interest in the land or an agent or manager of such person.

SIVA SUNDARI CHAUDHURANI, 16 C. W. N. 768. (see also BROJENDRA KISHORE ROY CHOWDHURY, 16 C. W. N. 255 N.).

Sec. 225—Illegal arrest—Rescue.

It is no offence under the section to rescue a person arrested by a constable without giving any intimation to the person arrested as to the provision for bail in the warrant on the authority of which the arrest is made.

SHYAM CHARAN MAJUMDAR, 16 C. W. N. 549.

Sec. 235—Case where the section does not apply.

This section was held not to apply to a case where the accused coined false rupees not for the purpose of making gain by passing them off on the public as good coins but for the purpose of putting them into the house of their enemies and thus getting them implicated.

LALCHAND, 13 Punj. L. R. 129.

Sec. 293—Test of obscenity—Religious or classical work.

The test of obscenity is whether the tendency of the matter charged as obscene is to deprave and corrupt those into whose hands the publication might fall. A religious or classical work does not become obscene simply on account of its containing some objectionable passages because the tendency of such publications is not to deprave or corrupt morals:

Sec. 296—Offence under the section.

Where certain people who with the sanction of the public authorities had been carrying flags to a temple in procession through a public street were attacked by persons who objected to the procession it was held that such attack constituted a disturbance of the performance of a religious ceremony within the meaning of the section.

Review.

HINDU LAW as administered in British India
By Sir Ernest John Trevelyan, D. C. L., late Judge, High Court, Calcutta. Fellow of all Societies College and Reader in Indian Law in the University of Oxford. Thacker, Spink & Co., Calcutta.

This work is a complete exposition of the whole body of Hindu Law as administered in British India parts of which the learned author dealt with in his well-known volumes on Hindu Family Law and Hindu Law of Inheritance. In this work he has incorporated these two works with up-to-date references to decisions and has dealt with some other subjects such as Gifts in the chapter on Will, and has added a chapter on Religious Endowments. To those of our readers who have had occasion to carefully study the previous works of the author this volume would require little introduction. The work of revising the original works and the treatment of additional subjects now incorporated have been done with the same painstaking care and scrupulous accuracy that has won for the earlier works such a ready welcome with the profession. We have looked up many of the matters dealt with in this volume and have found the case-law thoroughly up-to-date, complete and comprehensive. The real point in the decision which throws light on any question is brought out with an amount of care and accuracy which we have seldom seen in any other work. A no less remarkable feature of this treatise is the terseness of expression in the exposition of legal principles. The thoroughly systematic and artistic arrangement of the subject-matter combined with the above noticed features of the work makes it an invaluable book of reference for the practitioner.

The author's attempt has been to systematically state the existing case-law and although he has very judiciously avoided any elaborate criticism and discussion of debatable points yet in cases of conflict between decisions he has not hesitated to indicate which of the views is in the author's opinion the more reasonable.

The author, although he is unacquainted with the Sanskrit language, has taken pains to give copious references to the texts which are available in translations. Where the author has had to deal with matters involving a knowledge of Sanskrit, the author has mainly preferred to follow treatments of those subjects by English and Indian authors of repute. But with all the care that the author has evidently exercised he has through want of familiarity with the Sanskrit texts in the original not been able to avoid some slips in the preliminary portion of the subject. Thus in dealing with the sources of Hindu Law, (at p. 7), the author distinguishes between Smritis and Sutras and Sastras. There is no such class of works as Sastras in Sanskrit. The word is a generic name for what might perhaps be loosely called science. Dharma Sastras are not any department of any specific branch of sacred or legal works called Sastras. The Dharma Sutras and works like the Manava Dharma Sastra are themselves Smritis. We are not aware of any extant works other than these Sutras and Dharma Sastras that are called by the name of Smriti in law. We have also noticed an occasional misprint for instance at p. 54, the words "Brahmins" occurs for "Brahmas". But such errors are rare and so far as we have been able to trace of very little importance and do not in any way detract from the great value of the work. We have pointed them out to help the author in removing them from future editions.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Lloyd v. Grace Smith & Co. Before THE LORD CHANCELLOR, LORDS HAINSBURY, MACNAGHTEN, ATKINSON AND SHAW. 18th July 1912.

Solicitor's responsibility and liability for the frauds committed by his managing clerk.

This was an Appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal. The facts, admitted or proved, were as follows:—

The Appellant, Mrs. Lloyd, had bought some property, and thus had come to know of the De-Defendant, a Solicitor. She had doubts about having got her money's worth, and went to the Defendant's office to inquire. When there, she saw one Sandles, the Defendant's managing clerk, and was induced by him to give him instructions to sell or realize this property, and for that purpose to give him the deeds and to sign two documents which she neither read nor knew the tenor of, but which put into Sandles' possession her interest therein. She gave him the deeds as the Defendant's representative. Having got them and the signed documents, he dishonestly disposed of this lady's property and pocketed the proceeds.

The Court dismissed the appeal. In the course of his judgment LORD LORNBURN said:—

It is clear, to my mind, upon these simple facts that the jury ought to have been directed if they believed them to find for the Plaintiff. The managing clerk was authorized to receive deeds and carry through sales and conveyances and to give notices on the Defendant's behalf. He was instructed by the Plaintiff, as the representative of the Defendant's firm—and she so treated him throughout—to realise her property. He took advantage of the opportunity so afforded him as the Defendant's representative to get her to sign away all that she possessed and put the proceeds into his own pocket. In my opinion, there is an end of the case. It was a breach by the Defendant's agent of a contract made by him as Defendant's agent to apply diligence and honesty in carrying through a business within his delegated powers and entrusted to him in that capacity. It was also a tortious act committed by the clerk in conducting business which he had a right to conduct honestly, and was instructed to conduct, on behalf of his principal.

At the hearing the learned Judge, no doubt, with a view to avoiding the risk of a new trial in so small a case, appears to have prevailed upon to put no less than six questions, with subdivisions making in all ten questions, to the jury. Some of them were quite immaterial. Others were framed in order to raise a point of law supposed to be affirmed by Mr. Justice Willes in the case of Barwick v. The Joint Stock Bank, L. R. 2 Ex. 259, and admitted of more than one meaning. The meaning of the answers depends upon how the jury understood the questions, and we were not told how they were explained to the jury. That Sandles committed this fraud in order to steal the money for himself is obvious, and any jury must so find. That he did it in the sense in which Mr. Justice Willes means the word "benefit" is not true upon the admitted facts. Mr. Justice Willes cannot have meant that the principal is absolved whenever his agent intended to appropriate for himself the proceeds of his fraud. Nearly every rogue intends to do that. If the agent commits the fraud purporting to act in the course of business such as he was authorized, or held out as authorised, to transact on account of his principal, then the latter may be held liable for it. And if the whole judgment of Mr. Justice Willes be looked at instead of one sentence alone, he does not say otherwise.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before CARN-DUFF and IMAM, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1071 OF 1912. DEPUTY SUPERINTENDENT AND REMEMBRANCER OF LEGAL AFFAIRS, Petitioner v. KEDAR MIRZA, (Opposite Party. 28th August 1912.

Criminal Procedure Code, secs. 110, 112, 117, 118, 123—Order under sec. 112 describing accused as a thief and murderer by general repute—Final order on the ground of accused being so by habit, if legal.

The Opposite Party was required by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Tamluk, under sec. 110, Cr. P. C., to give security to be of good behaviour for two years for being by habit a thief and murderer. The case was referred to the Sessions Judge under sec. 123, Cr. P. C., who while holding that there was good evidence for binding down the Opposite Party set aside the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on the ground that in the order under sec. 112, Cr. P. C., the Opposite Party was informed that it appeared to the Magistrate that he was by general repute a thief and murderer and he was required as such to show cause why he should not give security. The point taken before the Sessions Judge was that as he was not called upon to show cause as being by habit a thief and murderer he could not be bound down under that description.

The Local Government moved the High Court and obtained a Rule.

Their Lordships observed: "We find that the evidence was directed merely to show that he was a habitual thief and murderer and his cross-examination was directed to refute the evidence to that effect. Moreover we are not prepared to hold that an enquiry under secs. 117, 118, Cr. P. C., is limited strictly to the order passed under sec. 112, Cr. P. C."

The Rule was made absolute and the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was restored.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before D. CHATTERJEE, J. APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES NOS 2259 AND 2552 OF 1910. SARI-PANNESSA KHATUN AND OTHERS, Plaintiffs, Appellants v. SAFERUDDI AND OTHERS, Defendants, Respondents. 16th August 1912.

Tenant executing separate kabuliyats in favour of co-sharer landlords—Joint landlords—Application under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act—Bengal Tenancy Act, sec. 188.

The Defendants owned an occupancy holding. The interest of the landlord passed to two persons in two moiety shares, each of the new owners of the land in suit took separate kabuliyats from the Defendants in respect of his share of the holding. These kabuliyats, however, were not in respect of equal areas but of areas differing slightly in quantity, the reason assigned being that one of the landlords had made a measurement according to which the land was a little more than that for which rent had been originally paid. By these kabuliyats the Defendants agreed to pay separate rent to their new landlords and to allow them to treat them as separate tenants in respect of measurement and other proceedings. During the cadastral survey under Chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, each of these landlords made an application under sec. 105 for the settlement of fair rent in respect of his 8 anna share covered by the kabuliyats of the Defendants. An objection was taken that the applications could not be made separately. Upon that the two landlords applied that if their applications could not be dealt with separately they might be dealt with together and assessment of fair rent might be made. The Settlement Officer, however, treated the two applications as separate applications and made assessment of fair rent separately in respect of the lands covered by the two kabuliyats. There was an appeal to the Special Judge and he reversed the order of the Settlement Officer on the ground that the application could not be entertained under sec. 105 by reason of the provisions of sec. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Held, that when a tenant of a co-sharer landlord executed a kabuliyat in favour of that landlord in respect of his share of the lands in his holding and entered into a separate agreement with him for the purpose of a tenancy such co-sharer landlord was not a joint landlord with his co-sharer in respect of the tenancy under the kabuliyat but a separate landlord.

That sec. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was no bar to the maintenance of the application under sec. 105.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MOOKERJEE and BEAUCROFT, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 3164 OF 1909. NABADWIPENDRA MOOKERJEE, Appellant v. MADHU SUDAN MONDAL, Respondent. 9th May 1912.

Declaratory suit—Pleading and proof, variance between—Dispossession, specific point of time of.

The Appeal was on behalf of the Plaintiff in a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property and for recovery of possession thereof. The Plaintiff alleged title by purchase at a sale in execution of a mortgage decree. He further stated that when he took delivery of possession through Court he was opposed by the Defendant, which led to a proceeding under sec. 335 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882. The Plaintiff interpreted the decision in that proceeding as adverse to him and asserted that he lost possession thereby; he, therefore, claimed to recover possession from the Defendant. The Defendant traversed the claim on the merits, put the Plaintiff to the proof of his title, and alleged that his possession was sustained by virtue of the proceedings under sec. 335 mentioned in the plaint. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit without trial on the merits, because in its opinion the effect of the order under sec. 335, C. P. C., was not to dispossess the Plaintiff. Upon appeal, the District Judge affirmed that order of dismissal.

Held, every variance between pleading and proof is not material and does not justify a dismissal of the claim.

"The rule that the allegations and the proof must correspond is intended to serve a double purpose, namely, first, to apprise the Defendant, distinctly and specifically, of the case he is called upon to answer, so that he may properly make his defence and may not be taken by surprise, and, secondly, to preserve an accurate record of the cause of action as a protection against a second proceeding founded upon the same allegations. The particular mode in which the ouster of the Plaintiff took place, or the specific point of time when it happened, was not material. The Plaintiff had to prove his title first; if he did so, he had further to prove his possession within 12 years prior to the suit.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 59—Mortgage—“Attestation.” meaning of—Attestation upon acknowledgment, if sufficient—Issues, framing of additional, after arguments heard and judgment reserved—Court’s inherent jurisdiction—Court’s duty to raise issues necessary for determining controversy—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 149.

The “attestation” of certain mortgage deeds by two witnesses required by sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act is attestation of the actual fact of the execution.

GANGA DEI v. SHIAM SUNDAR (9) overruled.

Where in a suit to enforce a mortgage, after arguments had been heard and judgment reserved, it appeared from the evidence of the witnesses of the mortgage deed that they were not present at the execution but had put their names on the document at the acknowledgment of the mortgagors, and the Court framed a supplemental issue as to whether the deed had been properly attested:

Held—That the Court was empowered to frame and try the additional issue under sec. 149 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882.

Held, further, that apart from that section, every Court trying civil causes has inherent jurisdiction to take cognisance of questions which cut at the root of the subject-matter of controversy between the parties.

(9) I. L. R. 26 All. 69 (1903).

Whilst the first part of sec. 149 of Act XIV of 1882 leaves it in the discretion of the Court to frame such additional issues as it thinks fit, the latter part makes it imperative on the judge to frame such additional issues as may be necessary to determine the controversy between the parties.

These are consolidated Appeals from two decrees and a judgment [reported, Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kader (10)] of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, dated the 28th January 1908, affirming the decrees of the Subordinate Judge of Palghat. The facts of the case are sufficiently stated in their Lordships’ judgment. The question for decision was whether the mortgage deed sued upon was “attested” as required by sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. There were two witnesses. Both deposed at the trial that the mortgagors did not sign in their presence, but that they affixed their signatures on the subsequent admission of the executants. Both the lower Courts held that the instrument was not properly attested. On the present appeals (which were heard ex parte),

Mr. L. DeGruyther (with him Mr. Kenworthy Brown) for the Appellant submitted.—There were two questions:—

1. Whether the Court was competent to decide upon a point which was not raised by the Defendants, and 2. Whether the decision is right in law. As to the first, only one issue was originally framed by the Subordinate Judge, namely, “was the deed executed for consideration?” The evidence of the attesting witnesses was recorded, and no questions as to attestation were put to them in their cross-examination. The Subordinate Judge framed a new issue after the evidence had been closed. If the point had been put in issue at an earlier stage we might have given other evidence as to proper execution.

(10) I. L. R. 31 Mad. 215 (1908).

SHAMU PATTTER v. ABDUL KADIR RAVUTHEAN.

[LORD SHAW.—Was any request made to the Court that additional evidence might be taken?]

There is no record of that. As to the second point I submit that attestation by witnesses on the acknowledgment of execution by the mortgagor is sufficient "attestation" within sec. 50, Transfer of Property Act.

There is a conflict of authority both here and in India. Under sec. 5 of the Statute of Frauds which required a will to be "attested and subscribed in the presence of the deviser by three or more credible witnesses," it was held that attestation on such acknowledgment was sufficient: Grayson v. Atkinson (1), Ellis v. Smith (2). The interpretation put in these cases was adopted by the Indian Succession Act, 1865. That section requires an attesting witness either to see the testator sign or to receive from him personal acknowledgment of his signature. Two Acts were passed in 1882, viz., Acts IV and VI. Secs. 11 and 39 of the latter Act (VI of 1882) used the words "shall be signed by each subscriber in the presence of, and be attested by, one witness at the least." There could be no doubt that in these sections attestation on acknowledgment was sufficient, otherwise the words "in the presence of" would be superfluous. There was no reason to suppose that the Legislature did not intend to attach the same meaning to the same word "attested" which occurs in the other Act passed in the same year (i.e., Act IV of 1882). The circumstances of India are also similar to those stated in Grayson v.

Atkinson (1). In the case of a parda-nashin lady witnesses can only attest on acknowledgment of the lady. Reliance was also placed on the following authorities: White v. The Trustees of the British Museum (3), Girindra Nath v. Bejoy Gopal (11), Ramji v. Bai Purvati (12), Ganga Dei v. Shiam Sundar (9). Roscoe's Nisi Prius (last edition), pp. 135 and 136. Reference was also made to the following cases and it was submitted that they did not decide that attestation on the executant's acknowledgment was not sufficient. Seal v. Claridge (13), Sharpe v. Birch (14), Ford v. Kettle (15), Roberts v. Phillips (6), Casement v. Fulton (4), Bryan v. White (5), Burdett v. Spilsbury (7).

Mr. Kenworthy Brown followed. He submitted that it was not competent for the Subordinate Judge to raise a new point at such a late stage of the proceedings. Sec. 149 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, applies to a case where issues already framed under sec. 146 require to be amended. The Defendants must raise the point before a Court and frame an issue thereon.

SHAMU PATTAR v. ABDUL KADIR RAVUTHAN.

dated the 28th of January 1908, affirming the decisions of the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar at Palghat; and the sole question for determination in both cases turns upon the meaning to be attached to the word "attested" in sec. 59 of the Indian Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), the first clause of which provides that where the principal money secured is one hundred rupees or upwards, a mortgage can be effected only by a registered instrument signed by the mortgagor and attested by at least two witnesses.

The Appellant, Shamu Patter, as the representative of one Appu, deceased, brought a suit on the 18th of July 1902 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar, to enforce a mortgage alleged to have been executed in favour of Appu by the Ravuthan Defendants. The other Defendants to Patter's action were certain attaching creditors of the Ravuthans, who are Respondents in the present appeals, and who challenged the mortgage on the ground, inter alia, that it was in fraud of creditors and without consideration. Their attachment on the mortgaged properties appears to have been partially removed at the instance of Patter, and they accordingly brought a suit some time in 1903 in the Court of the District Munsif of Palghat for a declaration that the mortgage transaction was fraudulent and without consideration, and ineffective so far as their rights were concerned. This suit was afterwards transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge and was tried with Patter's action, the evidence in one being taken as evidence in the other.

The trial began, as appears from the Order Sheet, on the 7th of September 1903; arguments were heard on the 16th and 17th of November, and judgment was reserved. On the same date, it appearing, from the evidence of the witnesses to the mortgage deed that they were not present at its execution but had put their names on the document on the acknowledgment of the Ravuthans, the Subordinate Judge framed a supplemental issue in these terms: "Is it (meaning the mortgage deed) valid under sec. 59 of Transfer of Property Act?" And on the 19th of November, holding that the document was invalid under that section, he dismissed Patter's suit (save as regards a personal decree against the Ravuthans) and by a separate judgment decreed the action of the creditors.

From these two decrees Patter appealed to the High Court of Madras, which has upheld the Lower Court's decisions.

In the present Appeals the judgments of the Courts in India have been challenged on two grounds, first, that the Subordinate Judge acted irregularly and without jurisdiction in framing an issue after the close of the arguments and deciding the case on it; and, secondly, that the Courts are in error in holding that the word "attested" in sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act implies the witnessing of the actual execution of a document.

With regard to the first point their Lordships are of opinion that sec. 149 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) which is applicable to the proceedings, is conclusive. That section declares that the Court may at any time before passing a decree amend the issues or frame additional issues on such terms as it thinks fit, and all such amendments or additional issues as may be necessary for determining the controversy between the parties shall be so made or framed.

SHAMU PATTER v. ABDUL KADIR RAVUTHAN

The first part of the section leaves it in the discretion of the Court to frame such additional issues as it thinks fit, whilst the latter makes it imperative on the Judge to frame such additional issues as may be necessary to determine the controversy between the parties. The Subordinate Judge was, therefore, fully empowered to frame the issue on which he decided the case.

Even had there been no such express provision in the Code, their Lordships consider every Court trying civil causes has inherent jurisdiction to take cognisance of questions which cut at the root of the subject-matter of controversy between the parties.

The substantial ground, however, on which the decrees of the High Court are impugned, has reference to the interpretation put upon sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is contended on the authority of Grayson v. Atkinson (1) and Ellis v. Smith (2), which was followed in 1829 in White v. The Trustees of the British Museum (3), that the learned Judges of the Madras High Court were in error in holding that the word "attested" in the section under reference means the witnessing of the actual execution of the document by the person purporting to execute it.

The construction put in those cases on the word "attested" occurring in sec. 5, cl. 3, 29 Car. II. (the Statute of Frauds) no doubt supports the contention of the Appellant that attestation upon the acknowledgment of the executant is equivalent to being present at and witnessing the execution. They related, however, to the due execution of wills, and though the language of Lord Hardwicke in Grayson v. Atkinson (1) was sufficiently wide to cover other deeds, his interpretation has not passed without question in later cases. The eminent Judges who decided Grayson v. Atkinson (1) and Ellis v. Smith (2) themselves doubted the correctness as well as the expediency of widening the meaning of the word "attested," but felt overborne by authority. In the latter case the exact question for determination was whether a testator's declaration before three witnesses that it is his will is equivalent to signing it before them. Chief Baron Parker began his judgment with the following important observation:—

"I confess, if this had been res integra, I should doubt whether the testator's declaration is a proper execution within the 5th clause because, I think, an admission that is sufficient tends to weaken the force of the statute, and let in inconveniences and perjuries."

Willes, C. J., observed that he was not satisfied in his own mind that the testator's acknowledgment was sufficient, but he added "authorities bear me down and I must yield." And the Master of the Rolls pronounced the extended construction to be "a dangerous determination and destructive of those barriers the statute erected against perjury and frauds." The learned Judges, however, felt bound by the previous decisions, and proceeding on the principle of stare decisis decided in favour of the view now pressed before their Lordships regarding the construction of a section of the Indian Statute relating to a totally different subject.

As the question involved in these Appeals is of considerable importance and there seems to be some divergence of opinion between the Indian High Courts, their Lordships do not desire to pass altogether unnoticed the other authorities discussed at the Bar as well as in the well-reasoned judgments of the learned Judges in the Madras High Court.

In Casement v. Fulton (4), which was decided in 1845, the question for decision was whether the signatures of two witnesses who had subscribed a will at different times but the first had acknowledged to the second that he had signed the same, amounted to sufficient compliance with the provisions of sec. 7 of the Indian Wills Act of 1838. Lord Brougham, in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee, observed that—

"The Statute of Frauds (29 Car. II., cl. 3, sec. 5) requires the will to be signed by the testator. in the presence of the witnesses, nevertheless, the construction put upon that important provision has been that an acknowledgment is equivalent to a signature. How far this latitude of interpretation was justified in principle we need not now stop to inquire, else it might well be suggested that to do an act in the presence of a witness, and to acknowledge having done it when the witness was not present, are two entirely different things, as different as the witnessing a fact or act, and the witnessing a confession of that fact or act."

And after referring to the hesitation with which the decision had been arrived at in Ellis v. Smith (2), refused "to carry one step further a construction which so great a weight of authority lamented and showed to have been ill-advised in its inception."

The later cases are still more direct in the interpretation of the words "attestation" and "attested." In Bryan v. White (5), Dr. Lushington in 1850 laid down that "attest means the persons shall be present and see what passes, and shall, when required, bear witness to the facts." In 1855 Lord Campbell, Chief Justice, in Robertis v. Phillips (6), enunciated the same rule as regards the word "attested," that the witnesses should be present as witnesses and see it signed by the testator. And the principle was given effect to in the House of Lords in Burdett v. Spilsbury (7). The Lord Chancellor summed up the conclusion in these words:—"The party who sees the will executed is in fact a witness to it; if he subscribes as a witness he is then attesting witness."

The meaning of the words "attest" and "attestation" has also been before the Courts under the Bills of Sale Act of 1878 (41 & 42 Vict., c. 31, ss. 8 & 11) and the interpretation put on them in Roberts v. Phillips (6) and Bryan v. White (5) has invariably been followed.

Sec. 50 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) was referred to in support of the Appellant's contention regarding the meaning of the word "attested" in sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. The phraseology of the two sections is quite different, as different in fact as the objects of the two statutes.

Sec. 2 of Act XXV of 1838 (The Indian Wills Act) declared that after the passing of that Act, 29 Car. II. "shall cease to have effect" except to a limited extent within the territories of the East India Company. In sec. 7 the word "attested" is left out, but it is provided that the testator's signature "shall be made or acknowledged by him in the presence of two or more witnesses present at the same time." The latter words gave rise to the question in Casement v. Fielton (4). Act X of 1865 (The Indian Succession Act) has substantially taken the place of the Indian Wills Act of 1838, and embodies the rules which constitute the law applicable in India to cases of intestate or testamentary succession, excepting as regards Mahomedans, for the major portion of this Act was made applicable to Hindus by the Hindu Wills Act. Sec. 50 provides for the due execution of what are called unprivileged wills, and para. 3 declares—

"The will shall be attested by two or more witnesses, each of whom must have seen the testator sign or affix his mark to the will, or have seen some other person sign the will in the presence and by the direction of the testator, or have received from the testator a personal acknowledgment of his signature or mark, or of the signature of such other person, and each of the witnesses must sign the will in the presence of the testator, but it shall not be necessary that more than one witness be present at the same time, and no particular form of attestation shall be necessary."

It will be noticed that the word "attested," which was omitted in sec. 7 of the Act of 1838, is re-introduced in sec. 50, and it is expressly provided that attestation may be effected on the acknowledgment of the testator. Had the word "attested" by itself conveyed the meaning that attestation upon the acknowledgment of the executant was sufficient, there would have been no reason for making an express provision in the section. The inference to be drawn from it is obvious. The Legislature considered it expedient in the case of wills to permit of witnesses "attesting the document," in other words, of testifying to its due execution, on the acknowledgment of the testator that it was in his hand, and as the word "attest" was not sufficient to validate such attestation, introduced an express provision to that effect. Sec. 68 of the Indian Evidence, Act (I of 1872) which declares that "if a document is required by law to be attested, it shall not be used as evidence until one attesting witness at least has been called for the purpose of proving its execution," appears to their Lordships to indicate that the Indian Legislature used the word "attested" in the sense in which it has been construed through a series of decisions in the English Courts. Sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act in requiring that in a certain class of cases a mortgage "can be effected only by a registered instrument signed by the mortgagor and attested by at least two witnesses," could only mean that the witnesses were to attest the fact of execution. Any other construction in their Lordships' opinion would remove the safeguards which the law clearly intended to impose against the perpetration of frauds.

The Calcutta High Court has in three cases arising under sec. 59, taken the same view as the Madras High Court has expressed in the present case. And although in one instance the Bombay High Court had extended the meaning of the word "attested" to include attestation upon acknowledgment, in Ranu v. Laxmanrao (8), the learned Judges, on the authority of Burdett v. Spilsbury (7), arrived at the same conclusion as the two other Presidency High Courts. The Allahabad High Court, however, in the case of Ganga Dei v. Shiam Sundar (9), has taken a different view. The learned Judges seem to consider the introduction of the words "personal acknowledgment" in sec. 50 of the Indian Succession Act as an interpretation of the word "attest."

They say as follows :—

"It seems to us reasonable to suppose that the interpretation put upon the word 'attest' in that section, in the absence of good technical or substantial reason to the contrary, should be taken to be the meaning in which the word is used in sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act."

With respect, their Lordships are wholly unable to follow the reasoning. As already observed, the provision as to attestation upon the testator's personal "acknowledgment" was quite a separate condition and in no sense an interpretation of the word "attest." In fact, it was provided that the witnesses might attest the document on witnessing the actual execution or on the personal acknowledgment of the testator of the execution. But that, in their Lordships' judgment, affords no warrant for extending the meaning of the word "attest." Nor do their Lordships agree with the view expressed by the learned Judges regarding the policy of placing a larger construction on the word in consequence of the "social institutions of the country." Those very institutions their Lordships consider make it necessary that "the barriers against perjury and fraud," to use the language of the Master of the Rolls in Ellis v. Smith (2), should not be removed upon speculative considerations.

On the whole their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment of the High Court of Madras is right, and that these Appeals ought to be dismissed and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), secs. 115, 104, sub-sec. (2), 154, Or. 21, r. 90, Or. 43, r. 1, cl. (j)—Sale in execution, application to set aside on ground of fraud before new Code came into force—(Order passed since if open to second appeal—General Clauses Act (X of 1897), sec. 6, cl. (c)—Retrospective operation of repealing statute—Revision—Erroneous decision on question of limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), secs. 7, 9.

An application to set aside an execution sale which took place on the 17th September 1900, on the ground of fraud and material irregularity in publishing and conducting it, was made on the 23rd July 1907 and allowed on the 6th July 1908, but the order was set aside on appeal and the case remanded on the 6th November 1908. On the 12th June 1909 the application was again dismissed but on appeal the order was set aside and the case once more remanded on 29th January 1910 :

Held—That a second appeal against the order of remand did not lie under the new Code [Act V of 1908, Or. 21, r. 90 and sec. 104, sub-sec. (2) read with Or. 43, r. 1, cl. (j)] which applied to the case.

The right of second appeal which the judgment-debtor would have (by reason of repealed provisions of the old Code relating to appeals continuing to govern pending cases), had sec. 6, cl. (c) of the General Clauses Act of 1897 alone applied, must be held to have been taken away by the express terms of sec. 154 of the new Code.

The words "present right of appeal" means only a right existing on the 1st of January 1909 to appeal against a particular order passed under the former Code and subsisting on that date.

This was an Appeal from an order of Babu S. K. Nag, Subordinate Judge of Pabna and Bogra, dated the 29th of January 1910, reversing an order of Babu Bejoy Gopal Chatterjee, Munsif of Bogra, dated the 12th of June 1909.

Babu Shama Charan Roy for the Appellant.

Babu Bepin Behari Ghosh for the Respondent.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal against an appellate order, which reversed an order of the Court of first instance setting aside a sale in execution on the ground of fraud and material irregularity in publishing and conducting it, and remanded the case for further consideration.

A preliminary objection is taken that no such appeal lies under the present Code of Civil Procedure. This objection undoubtedly must prevail if the present Code applies : for, under it fraud is put on the same footing as material irregularity by Or. XXI, r. 90, and sec. 104, sub-sec. (2), read with Or. XLIII, r. 1, cl. (j), makes it clear that there is now no second appeal in a case such as this.

Under the Code of 1882, a sale could be impeached for fraud under sec. 244 thereof, and therefore a second appeal lay. The sale with which we are here concerned was held on the 17th September 1900, that is to say, under the old Code. The first application for setting it aside was made on the 23rd July 1907, and allowed by the first Court on the 6th July 1908 ; but the order was set aside on appeal and the case remanded on the 6th November 1908. On remand the application was dismissed by the Court of first instance on the 12th June 1909. There was an appeal, and on the 29th January 1910 the original order was once more set aside and the case again remanded. The present second appeal is against the remand.

The new Code came into force on the 1st January 1909, and, therefore, both the original order and the appellate order with which we are now dealing, were made under it. The question is whether the matter of appeal is governed by it or by the old Code.

The learned V. J. who appears on behalf of the Appellant relies on sec. 6, cl. (c), of the General Clauses Act of 1897, and on the decision of the Judicial BENOD BIHARI BHADRA v. RAM SARUP CHAMAR.

Committee in The Colonial Sugar Refining Company, Limited v. Irving (1).

The case referred to is, no doubt, the highest authority for holding that the disturbance of an existing right of appeal is not a mere alteration of procedure, and that litigants have from the time they come into Court a vested right to any appeal then provided by law. Consequently the general rule against the retrospective operation of a repealing Act applies, and, unless it is otherwise expressly provided, the repealed provisions relating to appeals continue to govern pending cases. Now, the law in India against the retrospective construction of a repealing enactment is to be found in sec. 6 of the General Clauses Act above referred to and, that section (we quote only so much as is necessary) provides that where an Act repeals any enactment, then, "unless a different intention appears, the repeal shall not affect any right, privilege, obligation or liability acquired, accrued or incurred under any enactment so repealed, or affect any investigation, legal proceeding or remedy in respect of any such right, privilege, obligation or liability as aforesaid; and any such investigation, legal proceeding or remedy may be instituted, continued or enforced as if the repealing Act had not been passed." If the matter stood there, we are inclined to think that we should be constrained by the decision of the Privy Council to overrule the preliminary objection. But we must not overlook the words "unless a different intention appears," which control sec. 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, and the provisions of sec. 154 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, which provides that nothing in the new Code "shall affect any present right of appeal which shall have accrued to any party at its commencement." It seems to us that a "present right of appeal," can mean only a right existing on the 1st January 1909, to appeal against a particular order passed under the former Code and subsisting on that date. The words "present right" are well understood. The meaning to be placed upon them is clear, and in this connection we need only refer to the remarks of Lord Esher, M. R., in Hornsey Local Board v. Monarch Investment Building Society (2). Having regard, then, to the express term of sec. 154 of the new Code, we are of opinion that there is here evidenced a distinct intention to limit the operation of the provisions of sec. 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, quoted above.

The preliminary objection, therefore, prevails, and this Appeal must be dismissed with costs, as being incompetent. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

Rule No. 3036 of 1910.

There remains an application that we should move in revision under sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code or sec. 15 of the Charter Act.

The first Court took all the applicant's evidence and dismissed the application on the ground of limitation, and also on the merits. The lower Appellate Court pointed out, however, that the applicant was a minor, and that, therefore, he was entitled to the benefit of sec. 7 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1877, which corresponds with sec. 6 of the present Indian Limitation Act of 1908. The order was consequently set aside, and, as we have said in dealing with the appeal, the case was remanded for fresh consideration. The contention on behalf of the Petitioner before us is that the learned Subordinate Judge was clearly wrong in his decision on the point of limitation, the error being caused by his having obviously overlooked the provisions of sec. 9 of the Limitation Act, under which when once limitation has begun to run, no subsequent disability can stop it.

It appears that the original judgment-debtor, the father of the Opposite Party, died some time after the sale, and, therefore, time began to run. That being so, the learned Subordinate Judge does seem to have made a mistake; but the question is whether the mistake is one which can be put right by us in revision. The learned Vakill's argument is this that, if a suit or an application is really barred by limitation, then sec. 4 of the Limitation Act lays it down that the Court is bound to dismiss it. If, then, the Court makes a mistake and fails to dismiss a suit which is in fact out of time, then it may be said to have acted without jurisdiction. This, no doubt, was the view expressed by O'dfield and Mahmood, JJ., in Har Prosad v. Jafar Ali (3): but precisely the contrary view was taken by Edge, C. J., and Banerjee, J., in Sundar Singh v. Doru Shankar (4). We find it exceedingly difficult to hold that a Court which has jurisdiction to decide a case, can be said to have acted without jurisdiction, or illegally or with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction, where it makes a mistake in law through failure to appreciate the whole of the law on the subject, and we are inclined to follow the opinion recently expressed on the Original Side of this Court in Ramgopal Jhoonjhoonwalla v. Joharmal Khemka (5), to the effect that an error in applying the law of limitation is not an error which can be corrected on revision.

We have been pressed with a number of other decisions of this Court, and particularly with that of Mohunt Bhagawan Ramanuj Das v. Khetter Moni Dassi (6), where the learned Judges expressed the opinion that sec. 622 of the Code of 1882, with which sec. 115 of the present Code corresponds, is evidently intended to authorise the High Court to interfere with, and correct gross and palpable errors on the part of the subordinate Courts so as to prevent injustice in non-appealable cases. We have no desire to say anything which might tend to limit by defining our powers under the section; but we hesitate to accept this ruling in so far as it draws a distinction between gross and palpable errors and other errors. All that we need say is that the fact that the lower Court seems to have overlooked sec. 9 of the Limitation Act is not, in our opinion, sufficient to justify us in exercising our revisional powers.

We have assumed so far that sec. 9 of the Limitation Act does apply; but that section has been the subject of not a few decisions, and its applicability is not always obvious, so that, for ought we know, the learned Subordinate Judge may have noticed it, but come to the conclusion that it was not applicable, and he may possibly be right, although on facts, so far as they appear now, he would seem to have been wrong.

The result is that the Rule also must be discharged. We make no separate order as to costs.

The Plaintiffs' father amongst other co-parceners of a joint Mitakshara Hindu family executed a mortgage by conditional sale the term of which expired in 1888, whereupon the mortgagee instituted a suit for foreclosure against the mortgagors and obtained delivery of possession in 1889, in execution of the decree in that suit. The Plaintiffs were not made parties in that suit, the mortgagee not having had notice of their interest at the time and they brought the present suit in 1907 for redemption:

Held—That in the absence of allegation by the Plaintiffs that the debt was an immoral debt, the father of the Plaintiff sufficiently represented the Plaintiffs in the previous suit, and with the extinction of the father's right to redeem, the son's right of redemption was also extinguished.

On the 22nd October 1880, Plaintiffs' grandfather, father and certain other persons who were co-parceners in a joint Mitakshara Hindu family executed a mortgage by conditional sale in favour of Kapileshwar who on the expiry of the term of the mortgage in April 1888, brought on the following month a suit for foreclosure without making the Plaintiffs parties Defendants, obtained a decree on 20th June 1888, which was subsequently made absolute and possession of the property delivered to Kapileshwar on 4th February 1889. Plaintiffs brought the present suit for redemption of the mortgage on 25th November 1907, on the allegation that Kapileshwar was aware of the interest owned by the Plaintiffs in the mortgaged property and having failed to make the Plaintiffs parties to his suit for foreclosure, the Plaintiffs' right to redeem was not affected by the decree. The Defendants who were successors and representatives of Kapileshwar denied that Kapileshwar had any knowledge of Plaintiffs' interest in the mortgage during the pendency of the foreclosure suit, and pleaded that the decree in that suit was a bar to the present and they further pleaded limitation.

The Court of first instance found on the evidence that Kapileshwar had no knowledge of the Plaintiffs' interest in the mortgaged properties when he instituted his foreclosure suit, and held on the authority of Ram Taran Goswami v. Rameswar Malia (9), that the Plaintiffs were not entitled to institute a suit for redemption without first setting aside the foreclosure decree and the proceedings subsequent thereto; that the Plaintiffs' suit was further barred by limitation. In the result he dismissed the suit.

The Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Babus Ssrat Chandra Roy Chowdhuri and Charu Chandra Bhattacharjee for the Appellants.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghosh and Babu Atulya Charan Bose for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption. The ancestor of the Plaintiff was one Ghotoo, and the family is shown in the following genealogical tree.

The mortgage sought to be redeemed was executed by Siddheswar, Mukteswar, Jamalswar, Brindaban, and Kunjaban. It was a mortgage by conditional sale, and the term expired in April 1888. The next month the mortgagee instituted a suit for foreclosure, and in February 1889 he obtained delivery of possession. The present suit was instituted at the end of 1907.

The learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit, holding that the Plaintiffs have no right to redeem, unless and until the foreclosure decree is set aside and, secondly, that the suit is barred by limitation. The Plaintiffs appeal.

The Plaintiffs were not parties to the former suit, and it appears to us that the first question to be decided is whether the mortgagee had notice of their interests within the meaning of sec. 85, of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. This is a question of fact alone and after reading the evidence we think that, although the point is not free from doubt, we should not be justified in overruling the finding of the learned Subordinate

Judge, before whom the witnesses deposed. The burden of proof is, of course, entirely on the Plaintiffs. The facts of the case that are not disputed are against the supposition that the mortgagee had notice, as has been pointed out by the learned Subordinate Judge. The mortgagee lived about 17 miles distant from the Plaintiffs' family, and the only connection between them was that mortgagee's mother and the Plaintiffs' aunt had some kind of semi religious friendship. The mortgagee was energetic in enforcing his rights and the learned Subordinate Judge considers that he would have made the Plaintiffs parties, to secure his own interests, if he had known of them, an inference that does not seem unreasonable. The evidence which the Plaintiffs have adduced to prove that the mortgagee knew about their existence is to the effect that he attended a family ceremony shortly after the first Plaintiff's birth. Now apart from the improbability of the witnesses remembering who were the guests on a not very important occasion thirty years ago, almost all this evidence is open to the criticism that the witnesses have their own reasons for deposing adversely to the Defendant, and are probably animated by ill-will towards him. The only two witnesses, of whom perhaps this should not be said, are Dasserath Ganda and Sapna Ganda and Sapna Gountia. The former is the local chowkidar and seems so unintelligent that his recollection of this particular incident is somewhat surprising. His answers to questions put to him in cross-examination to test the quality of his memory are not satisfactory. Sapna lives 14 miles away and this was the only ceremony he ever attended in the Plaintiffs' village. He cannot recollect any of the other guests. This evidence cannot, but be regarded as very weak. That for the defence perhaps is not much stronger, though it may be said that the witnesses Parikhrit Barik, Kuber Prodhan, Samo Gauntia, Gadadhar Misser and Bhogirathi Bohidar have not been cross-examined with the view of showing that they are biassed or partisan witnesses. On the whole therefore we agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the Plaintiffs have failed to discharge the burden of proving that the mortgagee had notice of their interests or existence, when he sued for foreclosure.

The question then remains whether, when a mortgagee has obtained a foreclosure decree on a mortgage by conditional sale against the head of a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara, a son who was not a party to the foreclosure decree can afterwards redeem, if he is unable to show that the mortgagee had notice of his interest at the time of the foreclosure suit. The point seems to be well settled in Allahabad. The case of Ram Prasad v. Man Mohan (1) is perhaps somewhat in the Plaintiffs' favour, though in that case the mortgagee had notice of the son's interest, but that case was dissented from in Sheodial v. Jagat Nath (2) and held not to be in accordance with the principles underlying the leading Full Bench case in Allahabad, Debi Singh v. Jia Ram (3).

We may refer also to Lal Singh v. Pulandar Singh (4) in which indeed the mortgagee had notice of the son's interest, and to Jadu Kuar v. Seosankar Ram (5), (5) 7 A. L. J. 245 (1909).

Bulwant Singh v. Aman Singh (6) and Kehri Singh v. Chunni Lal (7). These cases show that in Allahabad the point is now well settled.

The precise point does not seem to have arisen in any case in this Province. The case of Bunsee Das v. Gena Lal Jha (8) was a suit in which redemption was sought, among other reliefs, by a puisne mortgagee, whose position of course would be wholly different from that of a Hindu son. The learned Judges distinguished the case of Ram Taran Goswami v. Rameswar Malia (9), which is wholly against the present Plaintiffs, by observing that in that case the person not made a party to the former suit might be deemed to be sufficiently represented by the actual parties. It is evident that this observation would apply with still greater force to the present suit.

On general principles it would seem that, if the father of a Hindu family can sell ancestral property to pay off debts and the sale cannot be questioned by the son if the debts are not immoral, the same result would naturally follow if the father mortgaged the property by conditional sale and then suffered the mortgage to be foreclosed. The father could not afterwards redeem, and if the son could not impugn the debt as immoral and was therefore bound by it, it would seem that he would be fully represented by his father in the foreclosure proceedings, and would have no more right than his father to redeem subsequently. If the right to repudiate immoral debts is the sole distinction between a father's position and that of a son in attacking an alienation by the father, it would seem that where this right is not in question the extinction of the father's right to redeem must carry with it the extinction of the son's right also.

We think therefore that the Plaintiffs have no right to redeem in the present case and that the suit must fail. We need not therefore discuss the other questions that have been argued in the appeal.

The Appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, r. 90—Sale, application to set aside—Irregularity and consequent inadequacy of price established—Real value of the property found not to exceed decree which could not be further executed owing to limitation—Substantial injury whether made out—Debtor's right.

Where it was found that there had been irregularities in conducting and publishing a sale of immoveable property in execution of a decree and that the property was sold at an inadequate price in consequence, the mere fact that the real value of the property sold did not exceed the amount of the decree, and that the unsatisfied balance of the decree could not be realised from the judgment-debtors by reason of limitation, would not bring the case within the proviso to Or. 21, r. 90.

A debtor is entitled to have those steps taken for which provision is made by the Code for the purpose of ensuring that his property will realise an adequate price and so enable him to pay off his debt in money or money's worth.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 31st of January 1911 against an order of Babu Tarak Nath Dutt, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Patna, dated the 21st of December 1910.

The Appellant was a judgment-debtor whose immoveable property had been sold in execution. He applied for setting aside the sale under Or. 21, r. 90. The Subordinate Judge found that there were irregularities in conducting and publishing the sale, that no notice had been served as required by Or. 21, r. 66; that there was no publication of sale-proclamation; that the price stated in the proclamation was inadequate and the price actually realised at the sale was in fact inadequate. He found, however, that the real value of the property would in no case exceed the amount of the decree; that the unsatisfied balance of the decree could no longer be realised as any application for execution which the decree-holder might prefer was barred by limitation. Under the circumstances he held that the judgment-debtor had suffered no substantial injury and that in consequence the application must fail. He accordingly dismissed the application. The judgment-debtor preferred this appeal.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

JENKINS, C. J.—This Appeal from Order

SANTO PROSAD SINGH v. SUREW NARAIN SINGH.

arises out of proceedings in execution. The application which initiated the present proceedings was one under Or. XXI, r. 90 to set aside a sale on the ground of irregularity. The case has been argued before us on the basis of the judgment of the Subordinate Judge which has been taken by both sides as a correct presentation of the facts, but it is maintained that the conclusion of law at which he arrived on those facts is erroneous. The facts found by the Subordinate Judge were succinctly and at the same time clearly placed before us by Mr. Mohendra Nath Roy in the course of his argument. His submission was that six separate facts were found (1) that the notice required by r. 66 had not been served; (2) that the proclamation had not been published; (3) that an inadequate price was stated in the proclamation; (4) that an inadequate price was in fact realised; (5) that the value of the properties would not exceed the amount under the decree; and (6) that the Defendant's liability under the decree had ceased. The position constituted by the first four of these facts then is this; that there was a group of irregularities; that there was an inadequacy of price, and, according to the concession made before us, that this inadequacy was to be attributed to irregularities. But it was argued, and argued with very considerable ingenuity that the fifth and sixth findings of fact saved the position, because they brought into play the saving operation of the proviso to r. 90. That proviso is in these terms: "Provided that no sale shall be set aside on the ground of irregularity or fraud unless upon the facts proved the Court is satisfied that the applicant has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity or fraud." It is said that there was no substantial injury, because in the first place the value of the property would not exceed the amount due under the decree, and secondly because the Defendant's liability had ceased. The conjoint operation of this, it is said, is such that it would be impossible to affirm that the applicant had sustained substantial injury. Ingenious as the argument is, I think it cannot be supported. A debtor is entitled to have those steps taken for which provision is made by the Code for the purpose of ensuring that his property will realize an adequate price and so enable him to pay off his debt in money or money's worth. It is no answer to him to say, it is quite true there have been irregularities and a consequent inadequacy of price which has prevented you from paying off your debt in full, but you have the satisfaction of a shelter behind the statute of limitation. That is not all the satisfaction an honest debtor desires and I do not think that the argument and the considerations involved in it are sufficient to enable a decree-holder and purchaser in a case like the present, to say that substantial injury has not been suffered simply because further remedies may be barred by some technical rule of law.

I, therefore, feel bound to come to the conclusion on the first four findings of fact, that there has been,—as indeed it is conceded, for the purposes of the argument before us—an inadequacy of price resulting from irregularities in the conduct of the sale and that this has occasioned a substantial injury to the applicant which has not been removed. I come to this conclusion not without some regret because the decree-holder purchaser was perfectly willing to allow the sale to be treated as one for a value that would enable the judgment-debtors, to say that in fact the debt had been paid off in full. But the judgment-debtor did not see his way to accepting this offer made by the decree-holder, and the result is that we must set aside the sale and the case must go back to the lower Court where the proceedings in execution must be renewed.

The Opposite Party, Respondents, must pay the costs in the Court below and in this appeal. We assess the hearing-fee in this appeal at two gold mohurs.

MOOKERJEE, J. BEACHCROFT, J. 1912, 21, June.	}	MADAN MOHAN NATH SAHI, Judgment-debtor, Appellant, v. PROTAP UDAI NATH SAHI, Decree-holder, Res- pondent.
-------------------------------------------------------	---	-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

Chota Nagpur Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act (I, B C of 1879), sec. 123—Rent decree, execution—Exemption of portion of tenure from sale by Commissioner—Remainder portion if may be sold as in execution of rent-decree—Rent Recovery Act (VIII of 1865), sec. 16.

Where the Commissioner exempted certain portions of a tenure from sale in execution of the landlords' decree for rent, under sec. 123 of the Chota Nagpur Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act (I, B. C. of 1879), the decree-holder would be entitled to execute his entire decree as a decree for rent against the unexempted portion of the tenure and the auction-purchaser would acquire the status of a purchaser under sec. 16 of the Bengal Rent Recovery Act of 1865.

Quære—Whether there would be an apportionment of the tenure and of the rent, in consequence of such a sale, between the holders of the exempted portion and the purchaser of the unexempted portion.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 10th of May 1912, against the order of Babu Charu Chandra Mukerjee, Deputy Collector of Zillah Ranchi, dated the 8th of May 1912.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Babu Bepin Chunder Mullick for the Appellant.

Babu Jogesh Chunder Dey for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This appeal raises a question of first impression as to the construction of sec. 123 of the Chota Nagpur Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act, 1879. It appears that the Respondent obtained a decree for rent against the Appellant in respect of a tenure on the 19th April 1905. On the 28th November 1910, the application for execution, now under consideration, was presented. The judgment debtor, tenureholder, had created, on a part of his tenure, encumbrances by way of maintenance grants in favour of his dependants. The properties of these maintenance holders were at the time under the charge of the Encumbered Estates Act authorities. They applied for exemption of the villages comprised in the maintenance grants under sec. 123 of the Chota Nagpur Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act, 1879. Upon the recommendation of the Deputy Commissioner, the order of exemption was made by the Commissioner on the 30th March 1911. The question in controversy now is, what is the precise effect of this order of exemption.

Before we determine this question, it is necessary to consider in the first instance by what statutory provisions the matter before us is governed. The Commissioner made his order for exemption ostensibly under sec. 208 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908. In our opinion, the order in question could not have been made under that section; but this does not affect the validity of the order inasmuch as it could have been made under sec. 123 of the Chota Nagpur Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act, 1879. Sub-sec. (1) of sec. 208 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908, shows that the provisions contained therein apply to cases of execution of decrees passed by the Deputy Commissioner under that Act. The decree now under execution was passed prior to the commencement of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908. Consequently, under sec. 8, cl. (e) of the Bengal General Clauses Act, 1849, the provision applicable is that contained in sec. 123 of the Chota Nagpur Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act, 1879, and the effect of that section we now proceed to consider.

Sec. 123 provides that if the decree of which execution is sought is for arrears of rent in respect of a tenure, the decree-holder may make application for the sale of such tenure, and the tenure may thereupon be brought to sale in execution of the decree, according to the provisions for the sale of under-tenures contained in the Bengal Rent Recovery Act, 1865; and all the provisions of that Act shall, as far as may be, apply. This is followed by a proviso to the effect that the Commissioner may by order, in any case in which he may consider it desirable so to do, prohibit the sale of any tenure or portion thereof.

On behalf of the judgment-debtor, it has been contended that the effect of an order of exemption of a portion of a tenure by the Commissioner is to make it impossible for the decree-holder to execute the decree as a decree for rent under the Bengal Rent Recovery Act, 1865. It is plain that the effect of an order of exemption of a part of the tenure is not to deprive the decree-holder entirely of his right to execute the decree; for if that had been the consequence, the effect would have been the same as if the entire tenure had been exempted from sale. We take it, therefore, that, notwithstanding the order for partial exemption, it is open to the decree-holder to execute his decree. The real question in controversy is, whether, on an order for partial exemption, the decree is to be executed as a decree for money or as a decree for rent. On behalf of the Appellant it has been argued that the order for exemption can be made in respect of a part of the tenure only where the decree-holder seeks to execute a decree for rent of a fraction of a tenure, and in support of this view, reference has been made to the case of Dwarkanath v. Dhun Monee (1). That case, in our opinion, has no application, it merely shows that where a share of a tenure has been treated as an independent and self-contained tenancy, in an execution of a decree for rent due in respect thereof, the property may be sold as if it were an entire tenure. But it is plain that the provisions of sec. 123 cannot be restricted in the manner suggested, because if that was the only case where an order for partial exemption could be made, that would really be a case for application for sale of what constituted an entire tenure; and the prohibition would in substance be of the sale of such a tenure.

Sec. 123 plainly covers a case of the description now before us, when an application is made for the sale of all the villages comprised in a tenure, but the Commissioner, for reasons sufficient in his opinion, directs the exemption of some of the villages from the sale. In such a case, it is plain that the sale of the unexempted portion is still to take place under the Bengal Rent Recovery Act of 1865; in other words, the restrictions in the proviso do not affect the provisions in the substantive part of the section for the sale of the property. Reliance, however, has been placed upon secs. 4 and 16 of the Bengal Rent Recovery Act, 1865, to show that the Legislature contemplated that sales under that Act should be sales of entire tenures. It may also be conceded as laid down by the Full Bench in Sham Chand Mitter v. Juggut Chunder Sarcar (2), that ordinarily when a sale takes place of an entire tenure under the Bengal Rent Recovery Act, 1865, the purchaser acquires the property free of all encumbrances. But there is, in our opinion, no inconsistency between the proviso to sec. 123 of the Chota Nagpur Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act, 1879, and the provisions of the Bengal Rent Recovery Act, 1865. It was competent to the Legislature to lay down that a sale under sec. 123 would be a sale under the Bengal Rent Recovery Act of 1865, notwithstanding the fact that what was sold was not the entire tenure but only the unexempted portion thereof. This, we think, is the result of the legislative provisions on the subject. If the contrary view were maintained, the result would be that by an order of exemption the landlord decree-holder would be practically deprived of his security for the rent. If the sale of the unexempted portion was merely the sale of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, the property might not be saleable at all, and a purchaser might not be found willing to bid a sufficient sum for the satisfaction of the judgment-debt. The Legislature could not have intended that because, as in the case before us, an order of exemption is made for the benefit of persons whose title has been created by the Defendant under circumstances which could not be controlled by the landlord, the landlord practically loses his security for the arrears of rent due to him. We hold, accordingly that the effect of a sale of the unexempted portion is to pass the property to the purchaser free of all encumbrances. When the purchaser has obtained the property, what his precise position will be, that is, whether he will be, jointly with the holder of the exempted portion of the property, liable for the whole rent is a matter which does not require considerations at this stage. It is conceivable that the purchaser may, with good reason, contend that as the landlord, though under compulsion, has brought to sale some only of the villages, included in the tenure, he is bound to apportion the rent: the consequence of such a sale, if the view suggested is well-founded, may be that the tenure is ultimately split up into two distinct tenures. These, however, are matters which must be left open for consideration, if and when the contingency arises. It is sufficient for us to hold now that the entire decree may be executed as a decree for rent against the unexempted portion of the tenure, and that the auction-purchaser will acquire the status of a purchaser under sec. 16 of the Bengal Rent Recovery Act, 1865. The view put forward by the judgment-debtor Appellant, therefore, cannot be accepted.

MADAN MOHAN NATH SAHI v. PROTAP UDAI NATH SAHI.

the appeal and requires only a brief consideration. It has been suggested that the sale proclamation was not properly drawn up and that it was not competent to the decree-holder to set out in the sale proclamation the amount of rent that might be legitimately levied from the villages sought to be sold, and the villages exempted, respectively. Reference has been made in this connection to sec. 5 of the Bengal Rent Recovery Act, 1865. That section provides that "the notice of sale shall specify, in the words used in the plaint in the suit in which the decree was made, the name of the village, estate and purganah or other local division, in which the land comprised in the said under-tenure is situated, the yearly rent payable under the said under-tenure and the gross amount recoverable under the said decree." It is clear that in the case before us the decree-holder was not bound to apportion the rent that might be leviable from the exempted and unexempted villages respectively. He would have strictly complied with the provisions of sec. 5 if, in the words of the section, he had stated the yearly rent payable in respect of the entire tenure together with a note that the villages named were exempted from sale under the order of the Commissioner. The judgment-debtor therefore cannot reasonably complain of what has been done by the decree-holder. At any rate, as a new sale proclamation is to be issued, we direct that it be drawn up in strict conformity with sec. 5 of the Bengal Rent Recovery Act, 1865. The rent will not be apportioned; the rent payable annually in respect of the whole tenure will be stated together with a note that certain specified villages were exempted for sale.

The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing-fee at ten gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

RULE No. 5862 OF 1911.

BRETT, J.	}	HIRA LAL MITRA, De-
CARNDUFF, J.		fendant No. 1, Petitioner,
1912,		v.

Judgment,
14, February.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. XXIII, r. 1, sub-r. (2)—Withdrawal of suit when to be allowed.

Courts in India have no general power of dismissing a suit with liberty to the Plaintiff to bring a fresh suit on the same matter. The only power they have in this respect is that given by Or. XXIII, r. 1, sub r. (2), C. P. C.

It is not the object of that Rule to enable the Plaintiff, after he has failed to conduct his suit with proper care and diligence and after his witnesses have failed to support his case, to obtain the opportunity of commencing the trial afresh in order to avoid the result of his previous misconduct of the case and so to prejudice the Opposite Party.

This was a Rule granted on the 27th of November 1911 against an order of Babu P. N. Bhattacharjee, Munsif of Howrah, dated the 29th of August 1911.

The facts of the case material to this report will appear from the judgment.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy, Krishna Prashad Sarbadhikary and Monmotha Nath Roy for the Petitioner.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty and Hari Bhusan Mukherjee for the Plaintiff.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The facts of the case in respect of which

this Rule has been issued are as follows :— Shaikh Porabaddi, the owner of certain property, sold it on the 9th March 1893 to the Defendant No. 2 who again sold it to the Defendant No. 1 on the 10th November 1909. Defendant No. 3, the son of Shaikh Porabaddi, after Porabaddi's death, sold the same property to the Plaintiff on the 9th November 1909. The Plaintiff sued to recover the property from the Defendant No. 1 on the ground that the sale to the Defendant No. 2 by Shaikh Porabaddi was a benami transaction. The suit was instituted on the 1st October 1910 and, on the 9th December 1910, the plaint was amended on the prayer of the Plaintiff. The issues were settled on the 20th January 1911 and adjournments were taken for various reasons by the Plaintiff up to the 31st May 1911. There were adjournments after that date, and on the 14th August 1911 the Plaintiff applied for the examination of his principal witness, Chaddar Shaikh, on commission. The application was granted and, after that witness had been examined on the 19th August, the case came on before the Court for final disposal on the 29th August 1911. On that date, the Plaintiff put in an application before the Court praying for the withdrawal of the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. The application purported to have been made under Rule 1, sub-rule (2) of Order XXIII of the Code of Civil Procedure. On that application, the Munsif passed the following order :—"The Plaintiff has prayed for withdrawal of the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit but the Defendant has objected to the withdrawal. The ground on which the Plaintiff prays for withdrawal is, I think, an adequate one and hence the Defendant's objection cannot be allowed to prevail. Ordered :—The Plaintiff is permitted to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit, if not time-barred. The Defendant will, however, get the costs of the suit."

On the 27th November 1911, the Defendant No. 1, the present Petitioner, applied to this Court and obtained this Rule on the Opposite Party, the Plaintiff in the suit, to show cause why the order of the Court below purporting to have been made under Order XXIII, Rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, should not be set aside on the ground that there was no formal defect or other sufficient ground justifying the same. In the case of Watson v. The Collector of Rajshahye (1), the Privy Council pointed out that there is no general power in the Country Courts in India similar to that which the Courts of Equity in England occasionally exercise of dismissing a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit for the same matter. It is clear therefore that the only power under which the Munsif could pass the order complained against was that given by Order XXIII, Rule 1, sub-rule (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In support of the Rule, reliance is placed on the decisions of this Court in the cases of Kharda Co. v. Durga Charan (2) and Ramdeo v. Gonesh (3). We are of opinion, however, that, in the present case, it is not necessary to rely on these rulings and that the Rule must be made absolute on the simple ground that the application on which the order of the Munsif was passed fails to disclose any formal defect in the suit or other sufficient grounds by reason of which it should be granted. In the applications of the Plaintiff for withdrawal there were various reasons given, namely, that owing to a mistake several important matters were not mentioned in the plaint, that some important documents were not filed on behalf of the Plaintiff, that witnesses to the principal document were not called to prove its benami character and that important witnesses were not summoned. But the application does not state what the important matters were or how their omission would affect the result of the case. Moreover it appears that, after the plaint was filed, it was amended on the prayer of the Plaintiff and no reason is given in the application why then the important matters, if any, referred to in the application were not included in the plaint. Documents appear to have been filed to the number of 55 by the Plaintiff on three different occasions on which adjournments were taken and it is not stated what important documents were omitted and for what reason they were not filed. There were eight adjournments at the Plaintiff's instance for the production of witnesses and it is not stated in the application why the Plaintiff failed to take out processes to secure the attendance of the important witnesses. On the contrary, it appears that the principal witness on whom the Plaintiff relied in support of his case that the sale by Shaikh Porabaddi to the Defendant No. 2 was a benami transaction was examined on commission and that he gave evidence in favour of the Defendant. The object of Rule 1 of Order XXIII is not, in our opinion, to enable a Plaintiff, after he has failed to conduct his suit with proper care and diligence and after his witnesses have failed to support his case, to obtain an opportunity of commencing the trial afresh in order to avoid the result of his previous misconduct of the case and so to prejudice the Opposite Party. We think the Rule must be made absolute on the ground on which it has been granted. We accordingly make the Rule absolute, set aside the order of the Munsif and direct that he do proceed to deal with the case from the stage at which it had reached when the order was made. The Petitioner is entitled to his costs which we assess at five gold mohurs.

Rule made absolute.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. XXI, rr. 58, 59, 60, sec. 115—Claim petition if may be determined after property attached is sold—Revision.

The Court acted in excess of its authority and in violation of the express provisions of the Statute in allowing a claim petition preferred under Or. 21, r. 58, after the property attached was sold, and the order allowing the claim was liable to be set aside on revision.

This was a Rule granted on the 20th of November 1911 against an order of S. N. Ghose, Esq., Munsif of Kotalpur, dated the 21st of August 1911, allowing with costs the claim of the Opposite Party.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

GOPAL CHANDRA MUKERJEE v. NOTOBAR KUNDU.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The question of law raised in this Rule is whether it is competent to an execution Court to proceed with a claim application under r. 58 of Or. 21 of the Code of 1908 after the execution sale has actually taken place.

The Petitioner in execution of a decree, dated the 4th April 1910, against one Kali Dasi Debi attached certain properties. On the 23rd February 1911, the present Opposite Party preferred a claim but the claim was not adjudicated upon till the 21st August 1911. Meanwhile, the property had been sold on the 25th April 1911 and purchased by the decree-holder. On behalf of the decree-holder auction-purchaser it has been contended that after the sale had taken place the Court was no longer competent to proceed with the application under r. 58 and to make on the basis thereof an order under r. 60. In our opinion this contention is manifestly well-founded and must prevail.

R. 60 of Or. 21 provides that where upon the investigation contemplated in rr. 58 and 59 the Court is satisfied that the claim ought to be allowed, it shall make an order releasing the property wholly or to such an extent as it thinks fit from attachment. It is thus plain that an order under r. 60 must be made before the sale has taken place. This is also made clear by sub-r. (2) of r. 58 which provides for the adjournment of a sale pending the investigation of the claim preferred under sub-r. (1). But it has been argued by the learned Vakil for the Opposite Party that the Court below had, under sec. 155 of the Code, inherent power to allow the claim after the sale and to set aside the sale which had already taken place and had been confirmed. In support of this view, reference has also been made to the cases of Tufuzool Husain v. Rughoo Nath Frosad (1), Hiralal Mukerjee v. Premmoyee Debi (2) and Gurdeo Singh v. Chandikah Singh (3). It is clear, however, that the doctrine of inherent power has no application to a case of this description. That doctrine is applied when the Court finds it necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent an abuse of its process to make an order for which no express provision has been made by the Legislature. Panchanan v. Dwarka Nath (4), Hukum Chand v. Kamalanand (5). In the case before us, r. 60 plainly indicates that an order upon an application under r. 58 must be made before the sale has taken place; upon the sale the application by which the claim has been preferred ipso facto terminates. The effect of these statutory provisions cannot be frittered away by an earnest appeal to the doctrine of inherent powers, specially as the objector is not without a remedy. It is open to him to proceed under r. 99 and r. 100 after the property has been sold and an attempt is made by the purchaser to obtain delivery of possession thereof. It is also open to him to institute a regular suit for the declaration of his right which, if his allegations be true in fact, has not been affected by the execution sale. This therefore is a case where the Court would not exercise its inherent power in contravention of the express provisions of rr. 58, 59 and 60 of Or. 21 of the Code of 1908.

It has finally been contended on the strength of certain observations in the case of G. Cooke v The Equitable Coal Co. (6), that this Court ought not to interfere in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction in a case of this description. But the case of Brajabala Debi v. Gurudas Mundul (7) shows that where a subordinate Court has acted clearly in excess of jurisdiction and in violation of an express provision of the Code, this Court will not hesitate to interfere.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute and the order of the Court below discharged on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to make it after the property had been sold. The Petitioner is entitled to his costs of this Rule. We assess the hearing-fee at one gold mohur.

CASPERSZ, J.	and others,	HEM CHANDRA KAR,

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 526—Stay of proceedings pending Rule issued by the High Court—Refusal of Magistrate to act on reliable information thereof—Bias.

Where after a Rule was issued by the High Court and further proceedings were stayed, a telegram from the Petitioners' Vakil in the High Court intimating the orders of the High Court was filed before the trying Magistrate who refused to stay proceedings:

Held—That the Magistrate acted injudiciously, and this would justify the Court in transferring the case.

Held further—That if the Magistrate had really any suspicion or doubt in the matter he might have asked the muktear who made the application to verify the telegram and to satisfy him as to whether the Vakil in the High Court was acting under instructions in the case.

The facts of the case material to the report are these. The Opposite Party brought two criminal cases, one against the Petitioners under sec. 143, I. P. C., for having formed an alleged unlawful assembly with the common object of taking away the paddy crop from a plot of land which the Opposite Party claimed to be in possession of, and another against some men of the Petitioners under sec. 379, I. P. C., for having removed the paddy crop from the said plot of land. Both cases were on the file of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate at Bishnupur.

The Petitioners moved the High Court for transfer of the case under sec. 143, I. P. C., against them and obtained a Rule which was ultimately discharged. After the Rule was issued by the High Court the Sub-Deputy Magistrate disposed of the case under sec. 379, I. P. C., against the tenants by convicting them. The Petitioners again moved the High Court for transfer of the case under sec. 143, I. P. C., against them and a Rule was issued calling upon the District Magistrate to show cause why the case should not be transferred from the file of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate on the ground that he had arrived at findings adverse to the Petitioners in the case against the men of the Petitioners, already disposed of by him. All further proceedings in the case were also stayed pending the hearing of the Rule. The Vakil for the Petitioners sent a telegram to the address of the Petitioners intimating the orders of the High Court issuing the Rule and staying further proceedings. This telegram was filed before the Sub-Deputy Magistrate and an application was made for stay of proceedings but the Magistrate refused to act on the telegram which he returned to the Petitioners and went on with the examination of the witnesses.

On the Rule coming on for hearing a supplementary affidavit was filed by the Petitioners in the High Court stating what had taken place in the lower Court after the issue of the Rule and it was contended on the authority of Ratnessari Pershad v. Empress (1), In the matter of Suriya Narayan Singh (2), that apart from anything else the case should be transferred having regard to the fact that the action of the Magistrate in not staying further proceedings when the telegram from the Petitioners' Vakil was filed before him, showed bias.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal and Suresh Chanara Mukherji for the Petitioners.

Babus Srish Chandra Chowdhury and Jnanendra Nath Sircar for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

A criminal case against the Petitioners is pending on the file of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Bishnupur (Babu K. C. Halder), who disposed of another case, apparently relating to the same dispute between the parties on the 21st December 1908. This Rule is for transfer of the said case. Cause is shown by Babu Srish Chandra Chowdhury, junior Government Pleader, and by Babu Jnanendra Nath Sircar, Vakil.

The Rule was issued for the transfer of the pending case, on the ground that the Sub-Deputy Magistrate had arrived at findings adverse to the Petitioners in the case disposed of by him on the 21st December 1908.

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal, who appears in support of this Rule, has informed us that the Sub-Deputy Magistrate did not pay any heed to the telegram which was sent by him intimating the direction given by this Court to stay further proceedings. A supplementary affidavit, with the original telegram, has been put in, and the learned Vakil has called our attention to two cases in the Law Reports in which the learned Judges commented somewhat severely on the action of the Magistrate in disregarding a similar intimation, and, in both these cases, this Court held that the conduct of the Magistrate indicated clearly the bent of his mind and his bias against the accused.

If the Sub-Deputy Magistrate had really any suspicion or doubt in the matter, he might have asked the Muktear who made the application to verify the telegram and to satisfy him as to whether the learned Vakil in this Court was acting under instructions in the case. We think that the Sub-Deputy Magistrate acted injudiciously in going on with the case on his file without paying any attention to the direction of his Court to stay proceedings.

The facts of the case are somewhat complicated, but we do not think it necessary to go into details. We have already expressed our opinion in regard to the action of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, and that would certainly justify us in directing the transfer prayed for, but no one appears to us on the papers that the cases are somehow or other not in fact, probably in fact,

Cause Counts Again

CAUSE COURTS AMEND

lished we expressed the opinion that the position created by it was far from satisfactory. Although extradition proceedings are on a different footing from ordinary criminal trials by reason of questions of international policy involved in them, yet it is now a-days well recognised by all Powers that extradition can only take place by complete enquiry according to the law of the land. So that no exaggerated apprehensions on the score of international considerations need stand in the way of allowing a prisoner to have a fair chance and of insisting on a clear prima facie case being established before extradition is granted. If that be so there is no reason why the judicial enquiry before the Magistrate should not be subject to revision by the High Court. We think that the present opportunity should be availed of to clearly state the law on the subject.

NUNCUPATIVE WILLS IN INDIA.

From the solemn will and testament, oppressively formal and fastidiously artistic, to the most elusive will of hardly palpable existence a will by a gesture of almost passive response to an interrogation—Courts of Law have to deal with and give effect to wills of all conceivable shades of formality. The greater its compliance with the somewhat exacting formalities of the law the less of scrutiny is a will subjected to. Barring this difference in the character and quantum of evidence required a noncupative will, where the testator possesses the necessary capacity, is quite as good a testament as the most formal will ever engrossed on parchment.

In England, the Wills Act, 1 Vict., chap. 26, while enacting (sec. 9) that no will would be valid unless it is made in conformity with the rules therein laid down, provides (sec. 11) that a soldier in actual military service or a mariner being at sea may dispose of his personality by an informal will. The statute law of England, while recognising the common law privilege of soldiers and seamen, makes no inconsiderable inroad into the domain of privileged wills. Notable mention may be made of the Statute of Fraud and of the Navy and Marines (Wills) Act. It would appear, however, that a soldier on an expedition and a seaman on maritime service are the only persons entitled under the English law to make nuncupative wills.

Similar provisions have been incorporated in the Indian Statute book. The Indian Succession Act, Act X of 1865, divides wills into privileged and unprivileged wills. Every testator, not being a soldier employed in an expedition or engaged in actual warfare, or a mariner at sea, must execute his will according to the provisions of sec. 50 of the Act, these provisions being much the same as those of sec. 9 of the English Wills Act. Sec. 52 of the Succession Act lays down that an adult soldier or seaman may make a disposition of his property by what is called a privileged will.

In matters of testamentary succession, the Succession Act governs, (1) Europeans by birth or descent domiciled in British India; (2) Europeans not having an Indian domicile except as to moveables which go by the domicile; (3) Parsees, Armenians and Jews; (4) Native Christians; (5) Indians other than Hindus, Mahomedans and Buddhists and not exempted under sec. 332 of the Act. The Succession Act primarily does not apply to Hindus, Mahomedans and Buddhists. The Hindu Wills Act, Act XXI of 1870, extended the operation of sec. 50 of the Succession Act to all wills and codicils made by any Hindu, Jaina, Sikh, or Buddhist residing in the Presidency of Bengal or in the Presidency towns of Madras and Bombay. Secs. 52 and 53 which recognise the privileged wills of soldiers and seamen have however not been extended to these persons.

Under sec. 331 of the Succession Act, Hindus, Mahomedans, &c., are not touched by the provisions of the Act. Except in the cases to which the operation of sec. 50 of the Succession Act has been extended, a Hindu or a Mahomedan testator is left to make his will under any provisions of his own personal law. The ancient Hindu Law did not contemplate wills, and consequently there are no directions in that law as to the formalities necessary to execution, attestation or revocation of wills. No particular formalities being necessary, a Hindu, not governed by the Hindu Wills Act, can make a nuncupative will in respect of either moveable or immoveable property. Again a will so made may be revoked by parol, and such revocation would be sufficient although the instrument was not in fact destroyed. We thus see that no formalities are required for the execution of Hindu Wills which are not governed by the Hindu Wills Act. A Benares Hindu for instance can make his will by word of mouth. It would also appear that statute law has not yet made any inroads upon the testamentary law of a Mahomedan. It would seem that oral wills are the only kind directly sanctioned by the Koran. A Mahomedan Will may be either oral or written. If oral it would probably require the presence of two witnesses. If written its genuineness may be proved in any of the ways sanctioned by the Evidence Act for the proof of facts in general, and it need not be written in any particular form or attested in any particular manner.

The question that the commentators of the Hindu Wills Act raise in this connexion, vis., whether a Hindu or a Mahomedan soldier can execute a privileged will, is more or less of academic interest. For it would seem that he can make a nuncupative will unless in the case of the Hindu soldier, he is further an inhabitant of the Presidency of Bengal or of the towns of Madras and Bombay. On a construction of the statute, however, it would seem that the privilege of making a soldier's or a seaman's will has not been extended to Hindus and Mahomedans; sec. 52 of the Succession Act has not been incorporated in the Hindu Wills Act. Therefore a Hindu or a Mahomedan soldier cannot make a privileged will. Messrs. Phillips and Trevelyan put the query here, whether this valued right can be lost. But that would raise a question of wider and more general importance—whether he can claim the privilege under the Common Law,—in other words whether the Common Law of England applies to a Hindu or Mahomedan soldier in the King's Army in India. It would seem as indicated above, that the privilege has not been extended to these cases and it cannot be availed of even by a Hindu soldier governed by the Hindu Wills Act who is thereby incapacitated from making a nuncupative will under his own personal law as it stood before the Hindu Wills Act. Reliance has sometimes been placed on the doctrine that the general principles of testamentary law would always apply though particular provisions of the Succession Act have not been extended to any particular class of cases. This argument would hardly further the contention as it is an accepted canon of construction that a statute is to be taken as exhaustive in matters in respect of which it declares the law and, secondly, that a privilege which has advisedly been withheld cannot be invoked under the general principles.

CURRENT CRIMINAL CASES.

Sec. 379—Theft of water of a canal.

Where the accused by raising the door of a sluice on a canal without the permission of the officers of the Government diverted more water to their fields than they would otherwise receive and were convicted of theft:

Held—It should be regarded in this country that water in rivers, channels, etc., can be the subject of property of the Government and thus the subject of theft.

CHOCRAINGAM PILLAI, 1 Mad. W. N. 1912, p. 119.

Elements necessary to constitute larceny.

In order to constitute larceny there must be an intention to take entire dominion over the property, i.e., the taker must intend to appropriate the property to his own use, but there may be theft without an intention to deprive the owner of the property permanently.

Where a person snatched away some books from a boy as he came out of school and told him that they would be returned when he came to his house it was held that the offence of theft had been committed.

EMPEROR v. NANSHU ALI KHAN, 1 L. R. 34 All. 89.

Sec. 397—Lathi if a deadly weapon.

(Held by the Punjab Chief Court)

It is doubtful if a lathi can be rightly described as a deadly weapon within the meaning and for the purpose of sec. 397.

LAD KHAN, 13 Ind. Cas. 998.

Sec. 400—Gist of the offence.

The offence contemplated in the section is one of a very special character and entirely the creature of statute and should therefore be strictly construed.

Association for the habitual pursuit of dacoity is the gist of the offence punishable under the section.

KADER SUNDER, 16 C. W. N. 69.

Sec. 411—Retaining stolen property.

Where the accused produced the stolen property from a nullah in a jungle which was neither in his possession nor under his control, it was held, that such production was insufficient to establish his guilt under sec. 411.

PIR BAKSH, 13 Punj. L. R. 140.

Sec. 427—Act intentionally done, with innocent motive.

Where tenants finding their fields flooded cut a channel through a railway in order to let the water run off their fields it was held that the act having been intentionally done amounted to mischief and it was no defence to say that their motive in doing it, namely, to free their fields from water, was an innocent one.

DEPUTY LEGAL REMEMBRANCE v. CHULAN AHIR 16 C. W. N. 263.

Sec. 457—Intent to annoy.

An intent to annoy under sec. 457 is established if annoyance in the ordinary course of events is known by the person committing the act to be the natural consequence of such act.

(Per Benson, J.) SELLA MUTHU SERVAIGARAN, 1 L. R. 35 Mad. 186.

Although the act complained of necessarily involves annoyance yet unless the intention of the accused was to annoy the act cannot be said to have been committed with intent to annoy.

(Per Sankaran Nair, J.) SELLA MUTHU SERVAIGARAN, 1 L. R. 35 Mad. 186.

Sec. 471—User within the meaning of the section.

Where the accused during the course of a criminal trial against him of rioting and theft of crops handed over to his master a forged rent receipt bearing a counterfeit seal of the landlord to prove his possession and the latter put the same to a witness and questioned him as to its genuineness but as the witness alleged that it was a forgery the trying Magistrate took it, initialled it and placed it on the record, it was held, that there was a user of the document within the meaning of the section.

RAFI JHA, 1 L. R. 39 Cal. 463.

No user.

The mere production of a forged document by a witness in Court in obedience to a summons and the giving of false evidence with respect to it do not constitute user of the document within the meaning of the section.

MUTHA CHETTY, 1 Mad. W. N. 1912, p. 455.

Sec. 494—Marriage during iddat.

Under the Mahomedan law the marriage of a man who subsequently embraces Christianity becomes ipso facto void notwithstanding his reconversion to Islam during the period of iddat and the wife in contracting a second marriage during such period does not commit bigamy.

ABDUL GHANI, 1 L. R. 39 Cal. 409 : S. C. 16 C. W. N. 451 : S. C. 15 C. L. J. 263.

Sec. 499—Prosecution to prove publication.

In a prosecution for defamation it is incumbent on the prosecution affirmatively to prove that the accused published the libel complained of.

JERIMIAH v. VAS, 22 Mad. L. J. 73.

Statement not privileged.

A defamatory statement made by a person opposing the registration of a will in his petition to the Registrar objecting to the registration is not absolutely privileged so as to exempt the party making it from liability to be punished for an offence under sec. 499, I. P. C.

KRISHNAMAI, 1 Mad. W. N. 1912, p. 473 (E. B.).

IV. OTHER ACTS.

Bengal Excise Act (V (B. C.) of 1909), sec. 2 (14)—Meaning of "Liquor."

Liquor as defined in the section must be intoxicating liquor and the enumeration of all the liquors that follow does not make them liquor unless they are intoxicating.

EMPEROR v. MOTI LAL CHUNDER, 16 C. W. N. 785.

Sec. 2 (20)—Cocoanut juice.

The expression "juice drawn from any cocoanut" does not mean the milk of the cocoanut but the juice of the tree.

EMPEROR v. MOTI LAL CHUNDER (ante).

Sec. 36—Liability of master.

To support a conviction of the master under sec. 36 it is necessary to show not only that a servant was in the employ of the master but also that he was acting within the scope of his employment and for the benefit of the latter.

UTTAM CHAND, 1 L. R. 39 Cal. 344 : S. C. 16 C. W. N. 551.

Calcutta Municipal Act (III (B. C.) of 1899), sec. 3 (39a)—Re-erection.

The repairing or renewing of the roof of a shed consisting of four posts and a tin roof is not re-erection within the meaning of the section.

Sec 495—Sale of adulterated article

This section like the corresponding section of the English statute is positive in its prohibition of the sale of adulterated articles and when a servant sells such articles it is the master firm or beneficial owner who is liable to punishment and this would be so even when the servant adulterates the articles himself and sells without the knowledge or connivance of the master firm or owner.

SEW KAKAN, 16 C W N 435

Calcutta Police Act [IV (b) C] of 1906, as amended by Act III of 1897 (B C)]—Cotton gambling

No form of betting or wagering without instruments other than coin gambling is in offence created by the Act. Cotton gambling is betting pure and simple. Books, papers, notice boards and lists of prices furnish evidence of gambling but are not instruments of gambling.

RAMKOLAI NIMANI, 10 C W N 535

The Indian Railways Act (IX of 1890), sec 125—Liability of owner of cattle

The owner of cattle which have been allowed to stray upon a railway in consequence of the negligence of the person actually in charge of them on the owner's behalf is not liable to punishment under the section.

Reviews.

COMPANY LAW AND PRECEDENTS By Arthur Stribel, Esq, M.A., Barrister at Law. Publishers Messrs Butterworth & Co, London and 8½, Hastings Street, Calcutta.

Now that the Company Law is being amended in India on the lines of the English Company Consolidation Act of 1908, we welcome this exhaustive treatise of more than 1500 pages on the English Company Law. We find in this work decisions given so late as the 1st of April 1912 incorporated. The case-law on the subject is exhaustively dealt with in this treatise, the list of cases alone coming up to nearly 184 pages. Reference is given also to every Statute having a bearing on the Company Law, the list of Statutes referred to coming up to nearly 28 pages. One speciality of the work is that the precedent and forms are given immediately after the law on any particular question is dealt with. For instance after dealing with the requisites of a prospectus not only are approved forms of prospectus, and other forms relating to the formation and constitution of the companies given but forms of statements that have to be submitted by banking and other Companies as also statutory statements in lieu of prospectus and other similar forms are all given in their appropriate places. An exhaustive treatise of this kind will not only be found very helpful to those who are intimately connected with Company management but it would be found invaluable by legal practitioners, the Government Departments and officers of Court, as the forms of orders, notices, &c, have been collected from the most approved sources and have been set out in extenso. We have no hesitation in recommending this work as a very thorough and up-to-date treatise on the subject which would be found to answer the requirements of all who are concerned in any way with the Company Law.

THE GUARDIAN AND WARDS ACT (VIII of 1890). By S. Srinivasa Iyengar, B. A., B. L. Law Printing House, Madras.

This work is already known to the profession as one of the series of works styled Lawyer's Companion. The present is a revised edition and we note that case-law on the subject up to the end of 1911 has been incorporated in this edition. The annotations and case-law under each section are well-classified. For instance under sec. 24 dealing with the duties of the guardian of the person, under the head of "other matters" those relating to the question of marriage of a minor are separately dealt with by reference to the minor's personal law and the cases in this connection have been classified under the law applicable to Hindus, Mahomedans, Christians and Parsees. The Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875), with annotations forms an appropriate supplement to the work. It will be found a very useful work on the subject.

* CRIMINAL EVIDENCE IN BRITISH INDIA AND ITS APPLICATION. By Dr. J. V. Ryan, L. L., Bar-at-Law. Published by R. Cambray & Co., 9, Hastings Street, Calcutta.

The idea of this work is to expound the theory of the Law of Criminal Evidence as administered in India and its application to cases cognisable by the Police. The author speaks with authority on the subject, helped by experience of Police work in India, as he is now a member of the Police service at present stationed at Hazaribagh. The Book is divided into four parts. Part I deals with relevancy, in which the arrangement of the Evidence Act has in the main been followed, but in some cases, for the sake of uniformity, sections dealing with similar matters have been grouped together. The author has clearly pointed out the difference between the English and Indian law and the historical development of the existing rules of evidence has been lucidly illustrated. Part II deals with the offences cognisable by the Police and the subject is dealt with under the heads, venue, procedure, commentary and proof. The system of cross-references adopted is sure to prove useful. Part III deals with the powers of the Police outside the Presidency Towns under other Statutes than the Indian Penal Code. The author says that his primary object was to provide a police vade mecum but in its present form the profession will find it in many respects a very valuable work and we commend it to the notice of practitioners in the criminal Courts.

THE LAW OF REVENUE SALES, Part I, the Patni Sale Law. By J. N. Roy, Bar-at-Law, Additional

District Magistrate, Comilla. Published by Thacker, Spink & Co. 1912. Price Rs. 5-8.

We welcome Mr. Roy as a commentator of law and congratulate him on the selection of his subject and the execution of his plan. The book before us is a very neatly got-up one of some 250 pages embodying the text of Regulations VIII of 1819 and I of 1820 and the Forfeited Deposits Act, 1850. The Rent Recovery Act, 1853, and the Bengal Rent Recovery Act, 1863, with full commentaries thereon. The carefully edited commentaries have been arranged under proper headings so as to save the time of the busy practitioner, who will find the marginal notes on each page equally serviceable. Mr. Roy has drawn not only upon the reported decisions of the Privy Council and the High Court but also upon the recommendations and the decisions of the Board of Revenue which although not binding upon the Civil Courts yet would serve to throw light on the subject. We feel sure, that this last-mentioned feature will make the commentaries more attractive to the legal profession who will thus be able to ascertain the recorded opinions of the highest administrative revenue authority in the province. The detailed subject index at the beginning of the book showing at a glance the commentator's plan of work and the very full general index at the end will be appreciated. We recommend with confidence this nicely got up and useful volume which is practically without a competitor in the field that the learned commentator has chosen.

CASTE IN COURTS. By L. T. Kikani, Pleader. 1912. Printed at the Ganutra Printing Works, Rajkot. Price Rs. 5.

This small book deals with a highly important subject which, so far as we are aware, has not received the special treatment it deserves and which has been accorded to it in this book. Not only does the author deal with the subject exhaustively so far as the case-law is concerned, he does so with remarkable insight. Legal practitioners will surely find more light from this book than from the notes to sec. 9 of the Civil Procedure Code in the many commentaries to that Code. Not the least valuable portion of the book is the Introduction in which the principles of the law are admirably summarised. The details of the law are dealt with under different heads in the body of the work with reference to the decided cases on each head. It is altogether an excellent little handbook.

A TREATISE ON PRIVATE INTERNATIONAL LAW. Fifth edition. By John Westlake, K. C., L. L. D. Assisted by Alfred Frank Topham, L. L. M. London: Sweet and Maxwell, Ltd., 3, Chancery Lane. 1912.

This work, practically the first systematic treatise on a highly complicated and yet interesting branch of the municipal law of England, saw light in 1858, and the course of development of this branch of the law since has in no small measure been influenced by successive editions of this work. The work has also had the rare good fortune during nearly half a century of its existence to have grown up under the care of the author himself, admittedly the greatest living English authority on this branch of the law. The position which the author occupies enables him to pass judgment upon the pronouncements of Judges and writers of text books with an authority which very few English writers can command. Consistently with this position, the author does not content himself with merely codifying the rules of law deducible from decided cases—were even such a result attainable with any degree of success in view of the conflicting nature of the pronouncements of English Judges on many questions. The arrangement of a codifying body of rules is, however, adopted wherever the nature of the decisions admits of it. But, besides, propositions of a doubtful character, which the author himself considers to be right in principle are formulated in the same manner, though the true bearing of the authorities on the point is also set forth and the authorities themselves examined in a most judicial spirit. The recent decisions of Ogden v. Ogden, [1908] p. 46, and Chetti v. Chetti, [1909] p. 67, come in for their due share of criticism, being undoubtedly in conflict with Mette v. Mette, (1859) 1 S. and T. 416. With reference to the case of Chetti v. Chetti the learned author puts forward a point of view which certainly was missed by the Judge who decided the case. It is pointed out that Chetti was not even in India under any legal incapacity to contract a monogamous marriage with a Christian, only by doing so he would have lost caste among his co-religionists and in order to do so he might perhaps have had to renounce his religion, and that an obstacle to the performance of any act which the agent is free to get rid of is no personal incapacity. This was exactly the view which we advanced in these columns in commenting on the decision. See 9 C. W. N. xxxviii (38).

We note the author's continued advocacy of the settlement of disputed points of private international law by international conventions, since doctrinal writing alone shows little indication of ever reaching entirely satisfactory results. For our part, we doubt whether the time has really arrived favouring the conclusion of such agreements on an extensive scale, since the various sovereign States themselves are hopelessly at variance as to the principles which should govern matters of private international law. The preliminary doctrinal discussion has not proceeded far enough to admit even of learned men and savants of various nationalities passing impartial judgments on the relative merits, to take one instance, of the rival doctrines of nationality and domicile. We hope that the venerable author of this treatise will be spared to carry on this discussion for many years to come as only a scholar of his attainments and authority can by his continued efforts bring nearer the accomplishment of the end for which he has consistently pressed during nearly half a century.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL—Rex v. Mitchell. Before THE LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND AND JUSTICES RIDLEY AND AVORY. 17th June 1912.

Evidence necessary to prove that the prisoner is an habitual criminal.

This was an appeal from a conviction for an offence and for additional sentence by way of prevention. The prisoner pleaded guilty to the offence and the question the Court had to decide was—Whether there was any proper evidence to be left to the jury to bring him within the words of sec. 10 (2) (a) of the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1908, namely, evidence to show that previously to the commission of the crime to which he had pleaded guilty he was leading persistently a dishonest or criminal life.

The Court held there was not and quashed the conviction. In the course of his judgment Mr. AVORY said—

The statute contained two elements necessary to be established to constitute a man an habitual criminal. First, proof of three convictions, and, secondly, proof that the prisoner was, as above stated, leading a dishonest or criminal life. This second element could not be established by proving that there had been other convictions in addition to the three statutory convictions. That must be proved by evidence, and the attention of the jury must be directed to the period between the commission of the crime with which he stood charged and the last conviction previous to that. He was last released from prison on August 30, 1911, and the offence to which he pleaded guilty was committed on February 10, 1912, the intervening period being 5½ months. If he had been defended at the trial, no doubt it would have been submitted that there was no evidence that during that period he had been leading a criminal life. The learned Judge had informed them in his report that he had grave doubt whether there was any evidence, and that he had left the case to the jury in order that the point might be tested. He said he was satisfied that the Appellant had been doing honest work in that period, but thought that the fact of his not reporting himself was some evidence of his leading a criminal life.

They were of opinion that there was no proper evidence to be left to the jury. The mere fact, standing alone, that a conviction licence had not reported himself to the police was not sufficient to establish that he was persistently leading a dishonest or criminal life. The record of the Appellant was as bad as it could be, and if the number of previous convictions was sufficient proof, there was no doubt he would come within the subsection. But it was not, and therefore the conviction as an habitual criminal must be quashed.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Padbury v. Holliday and Greenwood, Ltd. and anr. Before LORDS JUSTICES FLETCHER, MOULTON and BUCKLEY AND MR. JUSTICE PARKER. 21st June 1912.

Liability of a superior employer for tort committed by sub-contractor.

This was an application by way of appeal in an action tried before COLERIDGE, J., and a Jury. It appeared that the Plaintiff, Padbury, was a traveller. On January 4, 1911, while he was passing down Fenchurch-street a piece of iron fell from the third floor of a building then being erected by the Defendants, Holliday and Greenwood (Limited), for the building owners, the City of London Real Property Company, (Limited), on the Plaintiff's head and injured him. The Plaintiff sued.

The learned Judge left certain questions to the jury, and those questions together with the answers of the jury were as follows:—(1) Was the falling of tools something which might reasonably have been foreseen by the Defendants having regard to the character of the work being executed by the sub-contractor?—Yes. (2) Ought the Defendants reasonably to have foreseen such a possibility?—Yes. (3) Did the Defendants take precautions to avoid such a possibility?—No. (4) Damages—£500. On these findings the learned Judge gave judgment for the Plaintiff for £500.

Hence this appeal which was allowed. In the course of his judgment Lord Justice FLETCHER MOULTON said—

The case thus raised the question of the responsibility of a contractor who employed a sub-contractor for injury done to a stranger through the negligence of a servant of the sub-contractor. Although the view which the law of England took of this question had undergone some transformation, he did not think there was any doubt as to the general principle which now prevailed.

In Dalton v. Angus (6 App. Cas. 740 at p. 829), Lord Blackburn said:—"Ever since Quarman v. Burnett (6 M. and W., 499) it has been considered settled law that one employing another is not liable for his collateral negligence unless the relation of master and servant existed between them. So that a person employing a contractor to do work is not liable for the negligence of that contractor or his servants. On the other hand, a person causing something to be done, the doing of which casts on him a duty, cannot escape from the responsibility attaching on him of seeing that duty performed by delegating it to a contractor."

On that authority he was of opinion that before a superior employer could be held liable for the negligent act of a servant of a sub contractor it must be shown that the work which the sub contractor was employed to do was work the nature of which, and not merely the performance of which, cast on the superior employer the duty of taking precautions. Penny v. Wimbledon Urban Council [(1899) 2 Q. B., 72], Rapson v. Cubitt (9 M. and W., 710), and Holliday v. National Telephone Company [(1199) 2 Q. B., 392].

In this case the tool was not placed on the window-sill in the normal course of doing the work which the sub-contractors were employed to do. The fact that the work which was being done was work to the window seemed to him to be immaterial. He thought that the case would have been the same if the work had been purely internal work. He could see no reason for saying that the operation of putting the casement into the window caused the tool to be placed on the window-sill or to fall off.

The injury here was caused by an act of collateral negligence on the part of a workman who was a servant of Wainwright and Waring and not a servant of Holliday and Greenwood, and Holliday and Greenwood were not liable for the consequences of that negligence.

Messrs. Bower, K. C., and Bevan for the Appellant.

Messrs. Hopler, K. C., and Shakespeare for the Respondents.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before CARN-DUFF and IMAM, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 92 OF 1912. MOHUNT SUKDEO DASS, Petitioner v. THE DISTRICT BOARD OF MUZAFFERPUR. 27th August 1912.

Criminal Procedure Code, secs. 526, 556—Local Self Government Act (1885, B. C.), sec. 141—Bye-laws of the District Board of Muzafferpur, sec. 6 (1)—Prosecution directed by District Magistrate as Chairman of the District Board—Conviction by Sub-Deputy Magistrate—District Magistrate if competent to hear appeal.

The point for determination in this case was whether a District Magistrate who as Chairman of the District Board sanctioned a prosecution for a breach of one of the Bye-laws framed by the District Board is not disqualified under sec. 556, to hear an appeal against a conviction in the same matter.

The facts are these :—On the report of the District Engineer the District Magistrate of Muzafferpur as Chairman of the District Board sanctioned the prosecution of the Petitioner for a breach of sec. 6 (1) of the Bye law of the District Board of Muzafferpur, for having damaged the District Board road by making a watercourse on it. The Petitioner was tried by a Sub Deputy Magistrate and convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 20. Against this conviction and sentence the Petitioner preferred an appeal to the District Magistrate of Muzafferpur.

The Petitioner moved the High Court and obtained a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate to show cause why the appeal should not be transferred to the Court of Sessions.

Their Lordships after hearing both sides observed that having regard to sec. 556, Cr. P. C., and the fact that no prosecution on behalf of the District Board can be instituted without the sanction of the Chairman the appeal should be transferred.

CRIMINAL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before CARN-DUFF and IMAM, JJ. APPEAL No. 689 OF 1912. SUKNANDAN SING, Petitioner v. THE EMPEROR. 28th August 1912.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 35, 411—Indian Penal Code, sec. 408—Conviction by Presidency Magistrate—Charge with two counts—Concurrent sentence of 6 months on each count—Appeal to the High Court, if lies.

The Petitioner was convicted by the Fifth Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta on a charge under sec. 408, I. P. C., with two counts and sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment on each count, the sentences running concurrently. Against the said conviction and sentence the Petitioner filed an appeal in the High Court.

On the application for the admission of the appeal coming on for hearing it was contended on behalf of the Petitioner on the authority of Bepin Behary Dey, 15 C. L. J. 82, that in a case like this an appeal lay to the High Court.

Their Lordships rejected the application for the admission of the appeal on the ground that no appeal lay.

(TO THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES")

SIR,—I beg leave to bring to your notice the case of Police Prosecutor, 24-Pergunnahs v. Sheikh Idoo, 16 C. W. N. 983. This case needs commenting upon.

Sheikh Idoo had been committed to the High Court Sessions on charges under secs. 363, 366 and 376, I. P. C. The last charge was struck out in the High Court, but the accused was put upon his trial upon the charges under the two other sections. During the course of the trial the Advocate-General entered a nolle prosequi and the result of this withdrawal was the acquittal of the accused. Sec. 494, cl. (b), Cr. P. C. The effect was not simply as the learned Judges say "an order of discharge." The effect of the nolle prosequi being the acquittal of the accused on those charges, sec. 403, Cr. P. C, prevented a second trial on the same charges and the order of the Deputy Magistrate was quite right, and the High Court wrong in saying that he had declined jurisdiction which he undoubtedly had.

Yours truly, being so, we think that the Rule should be made absolute in the following manner:—That the case be transferred for disposal by any competent Magistrate, other than the present Sub-Divisional Magistrate, to be nominated by the District Magistrate of Bankura, or, in the alternative that the District Magistrate do arrange to send some Stipendiary Magistrate (from head-quarters to Bishnupur) who will dispose of the case according to law.

We make the Rule absolute and direct the records to be sent down at once.

[APPEAL FROM ALLAHABAD.]

LORD SHAW.	• LALA FATEH CHAND,
SIR JOHN EDGE.	since deceased (now re-
MR. AMER ALI.	presented by LALA
1912,	JUGAL KISHORE and
Heard, 18 and	• another) and others,
19, June.	Plaintiffs, Appellants,
Judgment,	v.
12, July.	RANI KISHEN KUNWAR,
	Defendant, Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 584, 585—Second appeal—Finding of fact based upon misconstruction of documentary evidence, if conclusive—Construction of document, question of law—Wajib-ul-arz, as evidence of proprietary rights—Extension of Chaukidari Act (XX of 1858), to mouzah, if alters proprietary rights.

The right construction of documents is a question of law which Judges in second appeal are not, by secs. 584 and 585 of the Civil Procedure Code, precluded from considering by any finding of a lower Appellate Court based upon such documents.

Where the Court of first appeal found on its construction of the wajib-ul-arz and other documentary evidence that the Plaintiffs were the owners of the lands in suit, and the High Court on second appeal, on their construction of the wajib-ul-arz and other documents in the suit, held that the Plaintiffs were not the owners:

Held—That the Court of first appeal having misconstrued the wajib-ul-arz the High Court in second appeal was not bound to accept as correct its finding based upon such misconstruction.

The wajib-ul-arz is cogent evidence of the rights as they existed when it was made of those holding proprietary or other rights of property within the mouzah.

The Government by applying the Chaukidari Act to the mouzah did not alter and could not have altered proprietary rights in the mouzah or any part thereof.

This was an Appeal by special leave, from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces at Allahabad, dated the 7th of November 1906, which reversed a judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh, dated the 25th of July 1904, which set aside a judgment and decree of the Munsif of Etah, dated the 22nd of September 1903.

The litigation related to certain lands situate in the town of Rampur, which for convenience may be divided into three groups. • Groups No. 1 and 2 were originally the sites of houses in the abadi which had since been pulled down or had fallen down, and the lands brought under cultivation. They were sold from time to time till at last the Plaintiffs purchased them by two private sales. The lands of the third group were groves to which also the Plaintiffs derived title by the said sales.

The Plaintiffs' case was that their vendors were the owners of the said lands which had always been freely transferred without any opposition on the part of the Respondent and her predecessor in title who was the zemindar. The Respondent on the other hand contended that the vendors were merely tenants.

After their purchase the Plaintiffs had applied for mutation of names, and the Kanoongo of the circle duly submitted a report, dated the 11th June 1902, in favour of the Plaintiffs' claim. But the Respondent zemindar objected to the mutation of names on the grounds indicated above, and the Assistant Collector, by an order, dated the 4th January 1902, refused the Plaintiffs' claim.

The Plaintiffs thereupon instituted the present suit in the Court of the Munsif of Etah on the 9th January 1903. Rani Kishen Kunwar was the principal Defendant. The other Defendants were the vendors to the Plaintiffs and co-sharers in some of the lands in dispute. These Defendants did not appear. In their plaint the Plaintiffs after stating the facts mentioned above prayed for the following reliefs:—(1) for cancellation of the order, dated the 4th January 1902, passed by the Assistant Collector; (2) for a declaration that they were absolute owners of the lands in question and that they were entitled to mutation of names in the revenue papers; (3) for possession of the said lands with damages and costs of the suit.

Rani Kishen Kunwar alone defended the suit and filed a written statement. Her main plea was that the vendors to the Plaintiffs had no right of ownership in the said lands.

The Munsif framed the necessary issues, and after recording and examining evidence, both oral and documentary, delivered his judgment on the 22nd September 1903. He found that Rampur was not an agricultural village but a town. He was of opinion that the Settlement Officer having assessed rent on plots Nos. 142 and 788, the holders of these and other plots must be taken to be tenants, at best occupancy tenants, without power of sale. In the result the Munsif held that the suit was not cognizable by the Civil Court, and made a decree dismissing the suit with costs.

The Plaintiffs then appealed against the decree to the District Judge of Aligarh, and the said appeal was heard by the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh, who delivered his judgment on the 25th July 1904. The learned Subordinate Judge agreed with the Munsif in finding that Rampur was not an agricultural village, but on the remaining questions he came to contrary conclusions. He held that the Plaintiffs or their predecessors in title had never been tenants of the zemindar; that they were the owners of the sites of the houses; that what was sometimes called "rent" in the assessment of 1875 was really revenue, and that this was borne out by the assessment of the damri cess and by the entry of the Plaintiffs' names in the revenue papers as seer holders and not as tenants. He accordingly allowed the appeal, reversed the judgment and decree of the said Munsif, and passed a decree granting the Plaintiffs ownership and possession of the said plots.

The Defendant, Rani Kishen Kunwar, preferred a Second Appeal against the said decree to the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces at Allahabad, which Court delivered its judgment on the 7th November 1906. The learned Judges (Sir George Knox and Richards, JJ) of the High Court rested their decision on the provisions of a wajib-ul-ars of Mouzah Rampur, which in their opinion were inconsistent with the Plaintiffs' claim. They accordingly reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and restored the decree of the Munsif.

Hence this appeal.

Mr. Bhugwandin Dubé for the Appellants.—The High Court was in error in going behind the findings of fact of the Subordinate Judge in a Second Appeal. The findings were based on oral as well as documentary evidence.

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—Is not the wajib-ul-ars conclusive against you ?]

Mr. Dubé.—I submit, not. A wajib-ul-ars is only one of the pieces of evidence to be taken into consideration with the other evidence. It is always relevant, but its weight depends upon the circumstances of each case. He cited Rani Lekhraj Kuar v. Baboo Mahopal Singh (1), Anant Singh v. Durga Singh (2). The High Court had no jurisdiction to enter into the merits in a Second Appeal. Under sec. 584 of the Code of Civil Procedure a finding of fact, however erroneous, is binding upon the Appellate Court. He relied upon Durga Choudhrani v. Jawahir Singh (3), Anangamanjari v. Tripura Soondari (4). It was not a case of no evidence.

[Their Lordships stopped Counsel for the Appellants, and called upon the Respondent's Counsel.]

Sir Erle Richards, K. C. (with him Mr. Raikes).—The whole question turns upon the construction to be put on the wajib-ul-ars. The Appellant has always been paying rent to us, i.e., the zemindar. The land is admittedly zemindari land of the village. None of the Appellant's predecessors in title has ever been recorded as a proprietor in the khewat. It is not a pure question of fact. It is a mixed question which involves the construction of documents and inferences to be drawn from them. It is also a question of usage having the force of law. He cited Ameer Ali and Woodroffe's Code of Civil Procedure, page 391, Kakarla Abbayya v. Venkata Papayya (5).

[Their Lordships called upon Mr. Dubé to deal with the merits.]

Mr. Dubé.—The lands in dispute are situate in a qasba, and not in an agricultural village. Both the Munsif and the Subordinate Judge have found that Mouzah Rampur is a town and not an agricultural village. The ratio decidendi of Sri Giridharji Maharaj v. Chote Lal (6) does not apply to this case. The Appellants have shown a whole series of conveyances extending over a period of over 65 years to which no objection was ever raised by the zemindar. The names of the Appellants and their predecessors in title are not entered in the jamabandi along with the tenants properly so-called. They are entered next to the zemindar and the entry shows they had proprietary interests. Further they paid the damicess which is paid by an owner and is never paid by tenants. The settlement proceedings also show that they were described as "muafidars" and although a sum of money was assessed on some of the lands it was "revenue" not "rent." There was also oral evidence to prove that the Appellants were owners and not tenants. The point that the High Court had no jurisdiction to go behind the findings was taken throughout the proceedings. The Respondents did not specify the question of law or usage in their memorandum of appeal which they ought to have done in order to be able to enter into the merits. He relied on Ram Gopal v. Shamskhaton (7), Nilmoni v. Kirti Chunder (8), Lukhi Narain v. Jodu Nath (9). A question of the existence or non-existence of a custom is one of fact. Joy Kishen v. Doorga Narain (10), Parbati Kunwar v. Chandrapal Kunwar (11). In any case the Appellants have heritable and transferable rights of ownership in the lands in dispute. Whether they are called 'owners' or 'tenants' and whether what the Appellants pay to the zemindar is termed "rent" or "revenue" their rights are not the ordinary rights laid down by the Tenancy Act (II of 1901, Local).

[LORD SHAW.—That was not your suit. In your plaint you claim a declaration that you are owners and as such entitled to be entered in the khewat.]

Mr. Dube.—That is true, but the real question of substance is what are the rights of the Appellants on the assumption that they were not absolute owners. There could be no question that the Appellants possessed heritable and transferable rights in the lands, and their rights were clearly recognized during the settlement proceedings.

Sir E. Richards, K. C., for the Respondent.—The lands belonged to the zemindar unless the contrary was proved. Whatever rights the Appellants might possess neither they nor their predecessors in title ever set up a claim to ownership. They have always paid rent. Throughout the wajib-ul-ars the right of ownership as existing in the zemindar is recognized—neither oral nor documentary evidence support the conclusion that the Appellants are owners. The construction of a document is always treated as a question of law.

Mr. Dube replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR JOHN EDGE.—This is an Appeal by special leave from a decree of the High Court of Judicature for the North Western Provinces of India, dated the 7th November 1906, which reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh, dated the 25th July 1904, which had set aside the decree of the Munsif of Etah, dated the 22nd September 1903, dismissing the suit with costs.

The suit which related to the proprietary title to lands in Rampur was brought in the Court of the Munsif of Etah by Lala Fateh Chand, since deceased, and others against Rani Kishen Kunwar and others to obtain the cancellation of an order of the 4th January 1902 of a Court of Revenue; for a declaration that the Plaintiffs were the proprietors in possession of the lands in the plaint mentioned and as such were entitled to have their names entered in the revenue papers as proprietors; and for consequential reliefs. Some of the lands in question consisted of lands in the abadi of Mauza Rampur. Upon those lands in the abadi houses had formerly stood. It is not clear from the record whether or not all of those lands in the abadi had been cleared of houses and had been brought into cultivation, but apparently they had been brought into cultivation before suit. It is, however, not necessary to ascertain whether or not all of those lands in the abadi had been brought into cultivation as it is the proprietary title to the land, whether covered with houses or not, and not the title to the houses, if any, standing upon those lands which is in question in this suit. The remainder of the lands to which the suit relates were lands under groves. Rani Kishen Kunwar was the zamindar of the whole Mauza Rampur, and she alone defended the suit. By her written statement Rani Kishen Kunwar put in issue the alleged title of the Plaintiffs as proprietors.

Fateh Chand, the deceased Plaintiff, had applied to the Revenue Court to have his name entered as that of the proprietor of the lands in question in the revenue papers relating to Mauza Rampur. On the 4th January, 1902, the Assistant Collector rejected that application with costs, and on the 9th January 1903 the Plaintiffs brought this suit in the Civil Court. The Munsif of Etah having found as a fact that the Defendant, Rani Kishen Kunwar, was the zamindar of Mauza Rampur, and that the Plaintiffs were tenants and were not proprietors of the lands in the plaint mentioned by his decree of the 22nd September 1903, dismissed the suit.

From that decree of the Munsif the Plaintiffs appealed, and in their grounds of appeal alleged that they were the owners in possession of the plots in suit, and that in Khasra Rampur the zamindar is not the owner of the abadi, but the lower class of people, who are her ryots, are the owners. The plaint and the grounds of appeal to which their Lordships have referred put it beyond doubt that the title which the Plaintiffs claimed in the Munsif's Court and on appeal from the Munsif's decree was the proprietary title to all the lands mentioned in the plaint, and was not any inferior title. The Subordinate Judge of Aligarh in the appeal found on his construction of the wajib-ul-ars and other documentary evidence that the Plaintiffs were the owners of the lands in respect of which the suit was brought, and by his decree declared that the Plaintiffs were the owners in possession of the property, and decreed the Plaintiffs' claim. From that decree of the Subordinate Judge the Defendant, Rani Kishen Kunwar, appealed to the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces of India at Allahabad.

At the hearing of the Appeal in the High Court it was urged in argument on behalf of the Plaintiffs that the Appeal being a Second Appeal to which secs. 584 and 585 of the Code of Civil Procedure applied, the High Court was bound to accept as conclusive, and was precluded from questioning, the correctness of the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the Plaintiffs were the proprietors of the lands in respect of which the suit was brought. Sir George Knox and Richards, JJ., who heard the Appeal, overruled the objection, and on their construction of the wajib-ul-ars and other documents in the suit in their judgment stated and found:—

"From the judgment of the lower Appellate Court it appears that it is founded on inferences of law drawn by the learned Subordinate Judge from certain documents and the wajib-ul-ars which were given in evidence. The documents show that the owners of houses in Rampur had been in the habit of selling and transferring their houses. The wajib-ul-ars sets forth that the occupiers of houses had this power, but all through the entries the zamindar is recognised, and it is stated that if a new house is to be built the permission of the zamindar must be obtained. The entry in the wajib-ul-ars as to groves is to the effect that isolated trees and clumps of bamboos planted by the tenant can be cut by him, and as to rent-free groves, if the trees should die out and the land be brought into cultivation, rent must be paid, and that if a new grove was to be planted the leave of the zamindar must be obtained. The inference of law that the Subordinate Judge has drawn from this evidence (about which there is no dispute) is that the occupiers of the groves and of the land which had been the sites of the houses were the absolute property of the persons who occupied and used them. In our judgment this inference is a wrong and impossible inference and the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge based thereon is clearly wrong."

The High Court by its decree allowed the Appeal and restored the decree of the Court of the Munsif. From that decree of the High Court this Appeal to His Majesty has been brought. The principal ground of this Appeal is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is right and that the Plaintiffs are the owners of the lands in dispute.

On the hearing of this Appeal the learned Counsel on behalf of the Appellants contended that the Judges of the High Court should have accepted the findings of the Subordinate Judge on the question of title as correct and as binding on them in Second Appeal and were not at liberty to find that the Plaintiffs were not the proprietors of the lands in question. He also contended that the Judges of the High Court had misconstrued the wajib-ul-ars and the other documentary evidence and had come to a wrong conclusion. He further contended that the wajib-ul-ars of Mauza Rampur, which was made in the settlement which commenced in 1872 and extracts from which are on the record of this suit, cannot be treated as applying to the abadi of Mauza Rampur, the contention being that Rampur, owing to the number of its inhabitants, many of whom are not agriculturists, and owing to the fact that the Government has applied the Chaukidari Act (Act No. 20 of 1858) to Rampur, must be regarded as a town and not as a purely agricultural village, to which, according to the learned counsel's contention, a wajib-ul-ars is alone applicable. The answer to that contention that the wajib-ul-ars does not apply 'to the abadi' of Mauza Rampur appears to their Lordships to be that the wajib-ul-ars to which reference has been made was prepared by the Settlement Officer for the whole Mauza Rampur including the abadi, and that all those who were interested were 'at the time given the opportunity of objecting to the statements contained in it, and further that the Government by applying the Chaukidari Act to Rampur did not alter and could not have altered proprietary rights in Mauza Rampur or in any part of the Mauza. The wajib ul-ars is in their Lordships' opinion cogent evidence of the rights as they existed when it was made of those holding proprietary or other rights of property within the Mauza, and it has not been shown that the wajib-ul-ars to which reference has been made in this suit differs in any material respect from the wajib-ul-ars which their Lordships have been informed by counsel was made in the more recent settlement.

The Judges of the High Court rightly overruled the objection that they were bound to accept as correct the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the Plaintiffs were the proprietors of the lands to which this suit referred. That finding of the Subordinate Judge was the result of his having misconstrued the wajib-ul-ars. The right construction of documents is a question of law which Judges in Second Appeals are not, by secs. 584 and 585 of the Code of Civil Procedure, precluded from considering by any finding of a lower Appellate Court, based upon such documents. The Subordinate Judge arrived at his finding by inferences drawn upon an incorrect construction of the wajib-ul-arz, and the Judges in Second Appeal consequently were not bound by his finding that the Plaintiffs were the proprietors of the lands.

In the wajib-ul-arz it is stated that Mauza Rampur "is a mahal of Zamindari Khalis (held by a single person), and Raja Ram Chandar Singh is the only proprietor without any co-sharer." Raja Ram Chandar Singh was the husband of the Defendant, Rani Kishen Kunwar, the present zamindar. There is no documentary evidence to show that the Plaintiffs or their predecessors in title ever were proprietors of any of the lands to which this suit relates; on the other hand, the jama bandi shows that predecessors in title of the Plaintiffs paid rent as tenants for some of those lands, and in the khasra for 1297 Fasli the Defendant, Rani Kishen Kunwar, is entered as the proprietor of some of these lands, and predecessors in title of the Plaintiffs are entered as the tenants. The zamindar was not affected by any transfer of lands to which he was not a party, and in the wajib-ul-arz neither the Plaintiffs nor any predecessors of theirs are shown as tenants who had special rights which were heritable and transferable.

The following paragraphs of Chap. IV of the wajib-ul-arz relate to groves and houses, and are important:—

"Paragraph 3.—Relating to the rights of tenants in respect of groves and scattered trees.

"A tenant has power to cut down the grove or the scattered trees planted by him in his neighbourhood.

"If the land is rent-free and the trees have been removed therefrom and the land is brought under cultivation, the tenant shall have to pay the rent. If in future a grove is planted, it can be planted with the permission of the zamindar.

"Paragraph 4.—Relating to the rights of the tenants in respect of the houses in the village and of those which are built.

"A person residing in a house is owner thereof and he has power to transfer it; but in future a new house shall be built with the consent of the zamindar.

"The tenants of the lower class have no power to transfer their houses."

There is evidence on the record that when land in the abadi is brought under cultivation the tenant has to pay rent for it. In their Lordships' opinion the Judges of the High Court rightly construed the wajib-ul-arz and drew the legitimate inference from it, and the other documentary evidence in the suit.

On behalf of the Plaintiffs-Appellants in their Appeal the learned counsel who appeared for them pressed their Lordships to advise that the Plaintiffs-Appellants should be declared to have heritable and transferable rights in the lands in suit and for that purpose admitted that the Plaintiffs-Appellants were tenants of those lands. Apart from other considerations it is sufficient for their Lordships to say that that is not the claim in respect of which this suit was brought.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this Appeal should be dismissed and the decree of the High Court be affirmed. The Appellants must pay the costs of the Appeal.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 1009 OF 1909.

JENKINS, C. J. N. R. CHATTERJEA, J. 1912, 22, July.	}	RAM BARAI SINGH and ors, Plaintiffs, Appellants, v. SHEODENI SINGH and ors., Defendants, Respondents.
--------------------------------------------------------------	---	-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 55, sub-sec. (5), cl. (b)—Vendor and purchaser—Mortgaged property sold subject to mortgage—Implied contract of indemnity—Seller damnified by reason of buyer not discharging mortgage debt—Suit for damages, if lies—Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 83—Measure of damages.

Where one buys from another an equity of redemption subject to a mortgage and merely pays for the value of that equity of redemption, he contracts to protect his vendor from the obligation of the mortgage, the buyer's contract with the mortgagor being that the debt should not fall upon the latter.

It is a contract of indemnity and the buyer would be bound without any specific contract to indemnify the seller.

TWEEDALE v. TWEEDALE (1) relied on.

Where a portion of the mortgaged property was sold subject to the mortgage, but the buyer having failed to pay off the mortgagee, the latter sued on his mortgage and the whole of the mortgaged property was sold and the seller was dispossessed of the lands which had been retained by him :

Held—That a suit by the seller for damages against the buyer was governed by Art. 83 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act, time running from the date when the seller was actually damnified, viz, the date of dispossession.

The word "contract" in Art. 83 does not mean an express contract.

(1) 2 Brown's Rep. of Ch. Cas. 153 ; 23 Beav. 341 (1867).

Quære—Whether, the deed of sale being registered, the period of limitation was that provided by Art. 116.

Quære—What under the circumstances would be the proper measure of damages.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 20th of May 1909 against the decree of Mr. H. Foster, District Judge of Zillah Saran, dated the 16th of February 1909, reversing the decree of Babu Harihar Charan, Munsif at Chapra, dated the 30th of June 1908.

The facts of the case were as follows :—

Plaintiffs' father executed a zuripeshgi deed, dated the 21st May 1857, for Rs. 449 14 in favour of Mussamat Subhago Koer respecting 11 bighas, 4 cottahs of kasht land. Subsequently on the 29th January 1891, he executed a second zuripeshgi deed for Rs. 576-15 in favour of Ram Raj Singh respecting 5 bighas 14 cottahs out of the aforesaid 11 bighas 4 cottahs kasht as well as some other lands. Rs. 449 14 as. was left with Ram Raj Singh for payment of the prior mortgage of Subhago Koer.

Plaintiffs' father thereafter on 25th May 1895 executed a sale deed in respect of the 5 bighas 14 cottahs kasht and other lands mortgaged to Ram Raj Singh, for Rs. 861 in favour of Defendants Nos. 1 to 7. Out of this consideration money Rs. 576-16 as. was left with the Defendants Nos. 1 to 7 for payment of Ram Raj Singh's mortgage.

After this sale, Subhago Koer alleging dispossession instituted a suit to recover the amount of her mortgage, Rs. 449-15, with mesne profits and interest against the Plaintiff and the Defendants Nos. 1 to 7. It was established in that suit that Ram Raj Singh had never paid off Subhago Koer's mortgage and that Defendants Nos. 1 to 7 in their turn had not paid off Ram Raj Singh. In the result a decree was passed in Subhago Koer's favour and, in execution thereof, the entire 11 bighas 4 cottahs kasht was sold and purchased by the predecessor-in-title of Defendants Nos. 8 to 10, who on the 29th December 1905 took delivery of possession through Court. Plaintiffs alleged that in consequence of this, they were dispossessed of 5 bighas 10 cottahs kasht land which they had retained when the remaining 5 bighas 14 cottahs were sold to Defendants Nos. 1 to 7.

Plaintiffs instituted the present suit on the 17th December 1907 for (amongst other reliefs) the recovery of a sum of Rs. 600 as damages from the Defendants on account of the loss of the said 4 bighas 5 cottahs of kasht land.

The Munsif decreed the suit to the extent of Rs. 425 only as he held on the evidence that that was the value of the lands of which the Plaintiffs had been dispossessed.

On appeal by the Defendants Nos. 1 to 7, the District Judge dismissed the suit holding inter alia that the suit was barred by limitation, the Plaintiffs having come to know of the breach of contract by the Defendants Nos. 1 to 7 in 1895 in the course of Subhago Koer's suit.

The Plaintiffs preferred this Second Appeal.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

JENKINS, C. J.—The facts of this case appear to me to point so clearly to the result that should follow on the Plaintiff's claim that I think it is convenient to commence with a brief narrative of those facts. On the 21st May 1887, the Plaintiffs' father executed in favour of Mufstt. Subhago Koer a zuripeshgi mortgage for Rs. 449-14 as. The mortgaged property was 11 bighas 4 cottahs kasht land. On the 29th of January 1897, a second mortgage was executed of 5 bighas 14 cottahs, part of the same piece of land—this time in favour of one Ramraj Singh by way of zuripeshgi, and the mortgage amount was Rs. 576 15 as. Of this sum Rs. 449-14 as. was left with Ramraj Singh for payment on the mortgagor's behalf to the prior mortgagee. In fact this payment never was made. What was done with the sum representing the difference between Rs. 449 14 as. and Rs. 576-15 as. does not appear. On the 25th of May 1895, the Plaintiff executed an instrument of sale for Rs. 891 in favour of Defendants Nos. 1 to 7. The property was 5 bighas 14 cottahs, part of the property mortgaged. Of this amount, Rs. 576-15 as. was left with Defendants Nos. 1 to 7 for payment to Ramraj Singh on account of the zuripeshgi executed in his favour. This Rs. 576 15 as. was not paid. The result has been a suit by the first mortgagee against the Plaintiff resulting in an adverse decree and sale of the Plaintiff's property. The purchasers have thus paid Rs. 576-15 as. less than the full amount of the purchase price, and the protection which the Plaintiff expected to acquire by allowing them to retain that amount has not been afforded him. I am doubtful whether the position of the parties was correctly placed before the lower Courts. Where one buys from another an equity of redemption subject to a mortgage and merely pays for the value of that equity of redemption he contracts to protect his vendor from the obligation of the mortgage. The buyer's contract with the mortgagor is that the debt shall not fall upon him. It is a contract of indemnity and the buyer would be bound without any specific contract to indemnify the seller [Tweedale v. Tweedale (1)]. This principle is founded on good sense and finds expression in sec. 55, sub-sec. (5), cl. (b) of the Transfer of Property Act. It is I think by these circumstances that we should be guided in this case. "There may be some difficulty in determining the precise extent of the indemnity to which the vendor was entitled from the purchaser of the equity of redemption, having regard to the fact that only a part was purchased. But we have in the express agreement of the parties themselves a fair measure of the extent of this indemnity for which they contracted. That amount is manifestly in excess of the damages awarded to the Plaintiff by the Court of first instance where a decree for Rs. 425 was given as against Defendants Nos. 1 to 7. From that decree the Plaintiff did not prefer an appeal. Therefore, that amount cannot now be increased by us, and it is only for us in these circumstances to hold, as we do, that the indemnity extended at least to the amount of Rs. 425 and we must accordingly reverse the decree of the District Judge and restore that of the Munsif.

In coming to this conclusion I do not overlook the contention that the Statute of Limitation constitutes a bar to this suit. But as the contract is one of indemnity the article that applies is Art. 83, possibly extended by Art. 116. But even if it be taken that Art. 83 alone is the governing article and the benefit of the extension provided by Art. 116 cannot be claimed, still the suit is within time, as it is within three years of the time when the Plaintiff was actually damnified. All that was urged against this view is that a contract in Art. 83 means an express contract. I can see no warrant for placing that restricted meaning on the words of Art. 83. It is a meaning which the word do not themselves require, nor would it be in accordance with the view of contract expressed in the Indian Contract Act; and, so there is no obstacle on the score of limitation to the decree I have indicated.

Having regard to the mode in which the case has been conducted in the lower Appellate Court, I think each party should bear their costs of the lower Appellate Court or of this Court.

Appeal allowed.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Arts. 80, 115, 116—Accounts, suit for, against sors of gomastha—Covenant to furnish annual accounts—Neglect to do so, if refusal—Suit by co-sharer for accounts of his share, if lies.

LAWLESS v. THE CALCUTTA LANDING AND SHIPPING CO., LD. (9), JOGESH CHANDRA v. BENODE LAL RAY (10) followed.

Held (COXE, J., dubitante) that a suit for accounts not against the agent personally but against his legal representatives is governed by Art. 115 or Art. 116 of the Limitation Act and not by Art. 89.

The objection that a co-sharer cannot sue the gomastha of all the co-sharers for the accounts of his share only does not apply where the remaining co-sharers have been made parties Defendants and a decree passed for an account of the whole agency.

Quere—Whether when there is a covenant by the agent to furnish accounts year by year, the neglect on the part of the agent to furnish the accounts in respect of any particular year amounts to "refusal to render accounts" within the meaning of Art. 89.

Quere—Whether, where there is such a covenant, a suit against an agent for accounts of particular years when the agent has neglected to furnish accounts, or for the sum found due thereon, can be regarded as a suit for compensation for the breach of a contract as contemplated by Arts. 115 and 116 of the Limitation Act.

This was an Appeal against the decree of Mr. S. N. Huda, District Judge of Zillah Pabna and Bogra, dated the 21st of August 1909, confirming the decree of Babu Durga Kant Ray, Munsif of Pabna, dated the 21st of December 1908.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently from the judgment.

Babus Brojo Lal Chuckerbutty and Biraj Mohan Mojumdar for Deputy Registrar for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SHARFUDDIN, J.—This is a suit by the Plaintiffs against the Defendants, the heirs of one Laban Sarkar, who is alleged to have been an agent of the Plaintiffs and their co-sharers from 1287 or 1288 and to have continued as such up to his death which took place in Pous 1311 (January 1905.) In this suit the Plaintiffs have made their co-sharers pro forma Defendants. Their allegation is that there was a contract between them and their co-sharers on the one side and Laban Sarkar, the agent, on the other that the latter should render accounts annually to each of his employers including the present Plaintiffs. It is further alleged by the Plaintiffs that the agent, although repeatedly asked, never rendered accounts for the period 1293 to Pous 1311, and that after his death his heirs also, although repeatedly asked, never did so. The present suit therefore is to obtain a decree against the heirs of Laban Sarkar for rendition of accounts for the above period, for the return of certain documents belonging to the Plaintiffs and their co-sharers, and for payment of the cash balance that may be found, on an adjustment, to have been in the hands of Laban Sarkar before his death in 1311.

The first Court passed a preliminary decree against the Defendants and on an appeal to the District Judge by the Defendants the judgment and the decree were confirmed and the appeal was dismissed. The Defendants have now appealed to this Court and the principal question to be decided in this appeal is as to whether the present suit is governed by Art. 89 or 115 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act (No. XV of 1877).

Art. 89 of the Limitation Act governs a suit by a principal against his agent for moveable properties received by the latter and not accounted for. The period of limitation for a suit of the above description is 3 years and the limitation begins to run when the account is, during the continuance of the agency, demanded and refused, or, where no such demand is made, when the agency terminates.

Art. 115 of the same Act is a provision for a suit for compensation for the breach of any contract, expressed or implied, not in writing registered, and not specially provided for in the Schedule. In this also the period of limitation is 3 years: and that period is to commence when the contract is broken, or (where there are successive breaches) when the breach in respect of which the suit is instituted occurs, or, (where the breach is continuing) when it ceases.

The Defendants' allegations are that Laban Sarkar had rendered accounts to the Plaintiffs and their co-sharers in 1305, and that after his death the Defendants again rendered accounts in 1312.

The finding of the lower Appellate Court is this:—"In short taking into my consideration the oral and the documentary evidence adduced by the Defendants, I am strongly of opinion, that the Defendants have failed to prove that Laban Sarkar rendered accounts in 1305, and that they (Defendants) again rendered account to the Plaintiff in Assarh 1312." This is a finding of fact and is therefore conclusive.

There can be no doubt that the present suit is not against the agent himself but against his heirs, and it is admitted by the Defendants that Laban Sarkar had to render accounts in the manner described in the plaint, that is, 'yearly. (Vide para. 7 of the written statements).

The question of limitation, it is alleged, was raised in the grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court, but that Court had not dealt with that question in its judgment. Under sec. 3 of the Limitation Act, if a suit is barred by limitation it shall be dismissed although limitation may not have been set up as a defence. We have therefore to determine as to whether this suit is governed by Art. 89 or by Art. 115.

The first point urged on behalf of the Appellants is that the agency having terminated on the death of Laban Sarkar the Plaintiffs have no cause of action against the heirs of Laban Sarkar. In this present suit the Plaintiffs not only sue for accounts but also for account papers and the cash balance that may be found, on adjustment, to have been in the hands of the deceased agent. In the case of Shib Chandra v. Chandra Narain (1), it was held that a suit for money found due from an agent on an account being taken, and a suit for rendering an account cannot be distinguished.

Other questions raised by the parties have been fully dealt with by my learned brother in his separate judgment. There is, however, the question of limitation and the application of the articles of the Act, which is of some difficulty owing to some conflicting rulings of this Court.

In the case of Muti Lal Bose v. Amin Chand Chattopadhyaya (2), it was held that a suit for accounts by a principal against his agent on the basis of a registered agreement is governed not by the 3 years' rule laid down in Art. 89 but by the six years' rule laid down in Art. 116 of the Limitation Act, and the time begins to run from the date when the contract to render accounts is broken and if under the contract, the account has to be rendered at the end of every year, the Plaintiff is not entitled to account for more than six years' preceding the suit. The article applicable, if the contract had not been registered, would appear to be Art. 115. It appears that the judgment in Mati Lal Bose v. Amin Chand Chattopadhyaya (2), was questioned in the case of Shib Chandra v. Chandra Narain (1), because in the latter case it was held that in an action by a principal against his agent claiming an account and the money found due on such account, the period of limitation is 3 years as prescribed in Art. 89.

The difference between Arts. 89 and 115 is that a suit by a principal against his agent falls within the particular class provided for by Art. 89. If after the termination of agency by the death of the agent, an action for accounts is brought against the heirs of the deceased agent it cannot be treated as a suit against the agent for which there is a special provision in Art. 89. A suit for accounts against the heirs of the deceased agent would therefore be governed by Art. 115, if the contract is not in writing registered, and if there is a contract in writing registered the article applicable would be Art. 116.

It seems that the correctness of the finding in the case of Mati Lal Bose v. Amin Chand Chattopadhyaya (2) was also doubted in the case of Hafizuddin Mondol

v. Jadu Nath Saha (3), where it was held that a suit by a principal against his agent for account is not "a suit for compensation for breach of a contract in writing registered" when the contract between the parties is embodied in a registered document, and Art. 89 and not Art. 116 should govern such a suit. In this reported case, Maclean, C. J., observed (and my learned brother agreed):—"There seems to be some difference of judicial opinion upon the question as to which article does apply. In the Privy Council case of Ashgar Ali Khan v. Khursed Ali Khan (4), the Judicial Committee held that in a case of this nature Art. 89 applied and that the expression 'moveable property' in that article included money. The same view was followed by this Court in the cases of Shib Chandra v. Chandra Narain (1) and Debendra Nath Ghosh v. Sheikh Isha Huq Mistri (5). In this case, however, it appears that the contract under which the gomastha was appointed is a registered document. The argument is that as it is a registered document the case falls within Art. 116 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act; and the Respondent relied upon a decision of a Division Bench of this Court also, Mati Lal Bose v. Amin Chand Chattopadhyaya (2), which laid down that where the contract between the parties is under a registered document, the case is governed by Art. 116 and not by Art. 89. Had the matter rested there, my own view would have been that Art. 89 applied and not Art. 116. Art. 89 applies to the case of a principal suing his agent for an account whilst Art. 116 applies to a suit 'for compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered.'"

I have no doubt as to the correctness of the view taken in the above case. That was a suit between the principal and an agent and it was immaterial whether the contract between the parties was in a writing registered or not as there is a special provision for suit by a principal against an agent for accounts. But the present suit as already observed is not between the principal and the agent. It is a suit by the Plaintiffs against the heirs of the deceased agent. We have therefore to see when the contract was broken or if there have been successive breaches, when the breach in respect of which the present suit was instituted occurred or if the breach was continuing when it ceased. There can be no doubt that there was a contract between the principal and the agent that the latter should render his accounts every year to the Plaintiffs and their co-sharers. After the agent's death the law presumes that there is always an implied contract by which the heirs of the deceased agent are bound to give an account of whatever they may have received from the agent at the time of his death. That being so and also because the contract was not in writing registered Art. 115 of the Limitation Act applies to such a case.

Another case referred to during the course of argument is the case of Jogendra Nath Roy v. Deb Nath Chatterji (6). This was a suit by a principal against his agent for an account and for money that might be found due upon such account being taken and it was held that Art. 115 was applicable. As already observed the Division Bench in W. N. 113 (1903).

before, when there is special provision under Art. 89 for limitation for a suit by a principal against his agent; this and no other article is applicable.

The case of Easin Sarkar v. Barada Kishore Acharya Chowdhry (7) was referred to. In this reported case the question that arose was what should be the period of limitation in a suit for accounts when there had been an agreement to furnish accounts year by year, which had been neglected year by year: and the contention of the Appellant in that suit was that it was immaterial whether Art. 89 or Art. 115 applied inasmuch as there was a successive breach of agreement. This case was decided not exactly on the application of the Art. 115 to the facts of the case but on quite a different ground. I find in the judgment of this reported case the following passage:—"That being so, we are of opinion that the Munsif is perfectly right in saying that it does not matter which article applies, whether Art. 89 applies or Art. 115 applies, there having been successive breaches year by year, the limitation dates from each breach. The Plaintiff brought the suit within 3 years of the last breach and he is therefore entitled to accounts for one year." There is no doubt that in the judgment of this reported case, cases of Mati Lal Bose v. Amin Chand Chattopadhyaya (2) and Hori Narain Ghosh v. The Administrator-General, Bengal (8) were followed. But a discussion as to which of the two articles applied was not necessary for the disposal of that appeal as is clear from what the Munsif said which was accepted by the Division Bench that decided that appeal.

JHAPAJHANNESSA BIBI v. BAMA SUNDARI CHOUDHURANI.

In that above circumstances I am also of opinion that the limitation against the present suit should be governed by Art. 115 and that the Plaintiffs can only obtain accounts for so much of the period in suit as falls within 3 years of the institution of this suit. This appeal will therefore be allowed in part and the Plaintiffs will get a preliminary decree for the accounts of the year 1311 only. The Appellant would be entitled to their costs.

COXE, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for an account and for other reliefs against the legal representatives of one Laban Sakar. Laban Sarkar was the agent of the Plaintiffs and their co-sharers and died in 1311. The Plaintiffs seek accounts for the period 1293—1311. The suit has been decreed and the Defendants appeal.

The first point taken is that, as the agency terminated on the death of Laban, the Defendants are not liable to account at all. But clearly the Plaintiffs are entitled to some relief against them. To hold that when a gomastha dies, all his accounts and the money which he may have collected can be kept by his legal representatives is impossible. It is argued that the Plaintiffs ought to ascertain themselves what is due to them and sue for that amount. But that amount can only be ascertained with accuracy by an examination of the accounts kept by the deceased gomastha, and there is no reason why the legal representatives should be entitled to withhold those accounts. A suit for money, found due on an account and a suit for an account are really the same [Shib Chandra v. Chandra Narain (1)]. And in the present case the Plaintiffs do sue not only for an account, but also for the account papers, for the money found due on the account, and finally in the event of accounts not being furnished for a lump sum of Rs. 905. It was held in Lawless v. The Calcutta Landing and Shipping Co., Ltd. (9) and in Jogesh Chandra v. Benode Lal Roy (10) that the legal representative of a deceased agent is bound to furnish accounts and this view seems to us correct. The first objection taken on behalf of the Appellants therefore fails.

Another point is that the Plaintiffs cannot sue for the accounts of their share. The co-sharers, however, have been made parties and a decree has been given for an account of the whole agency from which the Plaintiff's share can be ascertained. The Defendants are therefore relieved from any further liability to the co-sharers. In these circumstances I think that this objection also fails.

The only other point taken is that of limitation. * This is one of some difficulty. It was held in Mati Lal Bose v. Amin Chand Chattopadhyaya (2), that a suit for accounts against an agent is not governed by Art. 89 at all. This decision was questioned in Shib Chandra v. Chandra Narain (1), and also in Hafizuddin Mondol v. Jadu Nath Saha (3), and perhaps must be regarded as to some extent overruled by the Privy Council decision in Ashgar Ali Khan v. Khursed Ali Khan (11). I may refer also to Jogendra Nath Roy v. Deb Nath Chatterji (6).

JHAPAJHANNESSA BIBI v. BAMA SUNDARI CHOUDHURANI.

But it has been held in Jogesh Chandra v. Benode Lal Roy (10) and in Easin Sarkar v. Barada Kishore Acharya Chowdhry (7), following Mati Lal Bose v. Amin Chand Chattopadhyaya (2) quoted above that such a suit is taken out of the operation of Art. 89 and comes within Art. 115 or Art. 116, if there is a covenant to render accounts at the end of every year. The learned Judges who decided the case of Easin Sarkar v. Barada Kishore Acharya Chowdhry (7), one of whom was my learned brother, also held, following Hori Narain v. The Administrator-General, Bengal (8), that in the case of a covenant to deliver accounts annually the omission to render such accounts must be regarded as a refusal within the meaning of Art. 89, and that, therefore, even if Art. 89 applied, the period of limitation would not be extended. I must confess, speaking with the greatest respect, that I feel some difficulty in holding that mere neglect to render accounts, which the Defendant has agreed to render, can be deemed to be a refusal within the meaning of Art. 89: and also, as pointed out in Hafizuddin Mondol v. Jadu Nath Saha (3), in regarding a suit for accounts or for the sum found due thereon as a suit for compensation for the breach of a contract. It seems to me that the Plaintiff sues for the money, because it is due, and not because it represents the loss caused him by the Defendant's neglect to render accounts. I am not prepared, however, to press my doubts on this subject to the point of differing from the decisions that I have quoted, and it must be held that that Art. 115 applies.

(8) 3 C. L. R. 446 (1878).

(10) 14 C. W. N. 123 (1909).

Furthermore, the balance of authority is to the effect that a suit is taken out of the operation of Art. 89, if it is a suit against the legal representatives, though here, too, there is a conflict of judicial opinion. It was held in Harendra Kishore Singh v. The Administrator-General of Bengal (11), that a suit against the representative of a deceased agent for specific sums misappropriated did not come under Art. 89, but under Art. 116. It was pointed out that such a suit could not be regarded as a suit for an account at all. But clearly a suit for the recovery of specific sums misappropriated would be in closer accordance with the wording of Art. 89, than a suit for an account, so that if Art. 89 does not apply to a suit against the representatives of an agent for the recovery of specific sums misappropriated, a fortiori it would not apply to a suit against them for an account. Again in Omriti Nath Mitter v. Administrator-General of Bengal (12), it was held that Art. 89 would not apply to a suit against the representatives of a deceased agent for recovery of a specific sum "because the suit was not against the agent, but against the legal representatives of the agent." On the other hand, it was held in Lawless v. The Calcutta Landing and Shipping Co., Ltd. (9), that a suit for an account against a representative was governed by Art. 89. That, however, was the decision of a single Judge and cannot outweigh the two other decisions.

It would seem therefore that this case is governed by Art. 115 and that the Plaintiff can only obtain accounts for so much of the period in suit as falls within three years of the institution of the suit.

I agree therefore that the appeal be allowed in part and the Plaintiff be given a preliminary decree for the accounts of 1311 only.

Appeal allowed in part.

Act II of 1907 (E. B. & Assam), secs. 2, cl. (b), 7—House, use of, as brothel or for habitual prostitution—Sec. 7, object of—Order under cl. (b) of sec. 2, effect of—Proceedings under, how instituted—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 190.

Sec. 7 of Act II of 1907 (E. B. & Assam) is an enabling section and is not a necessary part of the procedure of the Act prior to the prosecution being instituted. It is not necessary to have recourse to that section if the Magistrate can be satisfied in other ways that the nuisance complained of is continuing.

Sec. 6 of the Act creates an offence under a local law and proceedings relating to such offence should be taken under sec. 190 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Where a Magistrate authorised an Inspector of Police to enter and inspect the houses and the Inspector asked the Sub-Inspector to make the enquiry:

Held—That the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take cognisance of the case on the Sub-Inspector's report.

The Magistrate could either treat the Sub-Inspector's report as a complaint under sec. 190 (a), in which case he would have to call upon the Sub-Inspector to appear and substantiate the report on oath: or under sec. 155 direct the Police to investigate the case and submit a charge-sheet if they thought proper.

Where the Sub-Inspector stated in his report that he was satisfied that a woman "was going on with her profession of prostitution" but did not say that she was using her house to the annoyance of the inhabitants of the vicinity:

Held—That although the report might furnish a basis to the Magistrate to call upon the Sub-Inspector to depose on oath as complainant the report itself did not disclose a complete case under sec. 2 of the Act.

This was a Rule granted on the 29th of April 1912 against an order of Moulvi Muhammad Chainuddin, Deputy Magistrate of Rungpur, passed on the 29th of November 1911, directing the Petitioner under sec. 3 of the E. B. & Assam Act II of 1907 to discontinue the use of her house as a brothel or for habitual prostitution within one month from the date of the order, as also against an order, dated the 19th of March 1912, summoning her under sec. 6 of the Act for not carrying out the above order.

The material facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. C. R. Das and Babu Probodh Chandra Mukerjee for the Petitioner.

Mr. Orr and Babu Brojendra Nath Chatterjee for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This Rule was issued on the District Magistrate of Rungpur to show cause why these proceedings should not be stayed until proper procedure is taken, on the ground that the Magistrate has no jurisdiction either under secs. 190 (a), 190 (b) or 190 (c) to take cognizance of the offence alleged to have been committed on the report of a Town Sub-Inspector of Police.

It appears that certain inhabitants of Rungpur complained that the houses of certain prostitutes, twenty of whose cases are before us in connection with these analogous Rules, were used as brothels or for the purpose of prostitution or as disorderly houses to the annoyance of the inhabitants of the vicinity and the Magistrate expressly states that he issued an order summoning the tenants to appear and show cause why the use of those houses should not be discontinued for any of those purposes under cl. (b) of sec. 2 of the Act. The order was to take effect within one month. But the Magistrate appears to have lost sight of the matter and the proceedings were very much delayed. We may mention that the neighbours originally complained on the 18th August 1911, and then a very long and in our opinion unnecessary investigation was gone into by the Magistrate and an immense amount of evidence was taken and the prohibitory order was not issued till the 29th November 1911. There is quite a volume of evidence and a very lengthy order on the subject. Nearly three months after, on the 24th February 1912, the District Magistrate made an order to an Inspector whom he named authorizing him to make enquiry under sec. 7. It is said that this delay was due to the fact that there had been an appeal against the interlocutory order which was dismissed as incompetent on the 18th February 1912.

Now the first argument that was addressed to us appeared to contend that sec. 7 was a necessary part of the procedure of the Act prior to a prosecution being instituted. But this we think clearly is not the case, and it is now practically conceded that this is so. Sec. 7 is an enabling section. It provides that it shall be lawful for the District Magistrate by an order in writing to authorize any officer not below the rank of a Sub-Inspector of Police to enter and inspect the said house at any time after the expiration of the period specified in the order under sec. 3 for the purpose of satisfying himself that the order is being complied with. This does not seem to us to lay down that it is in any way necessary for anybody to enter the house if the Magistrate can be satisfied in other ways that the nuisance is still continuing. It is only a protection to the public authorities from a charge of trespass, for it is not lawful to enter a private house without the sanction of the owner, unless the Statute expressly gives such authority and the authority which is given by this section clearly cannot be delegated to any other person. If the District Magistrate thinks it necessary for any one to enter and inspect the house he must authorise some special person or persons not below the rank of a Sub-Inspector of Police to do so, and no other persons can be held absolved from trespass who purport to act upon that order. But in this case the Inspector asked the Sub-Inspector to make the necessary enquiry, and it does not appear that the Sub-Inspector entered the house, but he made a report which is on the face of it slightly ambiguous and this report fortifies us in our opinion that criminal proceedings should only be instituted in the way laid down by sec. 190, Criminal Procedure Code.

The real basis of the contention in this case is that sec. 6 of the Act creates an offence under a local law, and proceedings can only therefore be instituted under the Code of Criminal Procedure. Without desiring to lay down that sec. 190, Criminal Procedure Code, is mandatory or exhaustive and that there are no other ways in heaven or earth to institute criminal proceedings, it appears to us clear that the only way to avoid the difficulties of jurisdiction in working an act of this description, which does not appear to be self-contained as far as the procedure is concerned, is to make use of that very useful section of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Now comes the question how that section should be made use of. It is open to the District Magistrate to treat the report of the Sub-Inspector as a complaint of facts which constitute such offence. But in that case it is obviously necessary for the Magistrate to call upon him to appear, if he so desires, and substantiate that complaint upon oath; and this brings us back to what we have just glanced at that as a matter of fact the present report of the Sub-Inspector does not disclose a complete case under the section; and although it might furnish basis to the Magistrate for directing the Sub-Inspector to come and depose on oath as complainant, it would not in itself fulfil the requirements of the section. For he says that he has personally enquired into the matter at various times during day and night and saw many persons frequent the woman's house and thus he is fully satisfied that she is going on with her profession of prostitution. Now this is not exactly what the woman was ordered not to do. She was ordered not to use her house to the annoyance of the inhabitants of the vicinity, and it will be necessary for the complainant to show that she was still using her house to the annoyance of the inhabitants in the vicinity.

Then there is another way in which the Magistrate could have taken cognizance, a way which we do not in any way recommend, that is, under sec. 155, Criminal Procedure Code, he could have directed the Police to investigate this non-cognizable offence. It would then have been open to the Police to make enquiry and send up a charge-sheet if the charge was established, or to report that the case could not go on if they thought the evidence to be insufficient. But this would be giving an amount of discretion to the Police which we think in a case of this nature would be extremely undesirable. It would be far better if the Magistrate is satisfied after examining the Sub-Inspector on oath that the annoyance still continues that he should take cognizance upon that complaint. He cannot act under sec. 190 (c) because the information which he received was received from a Police-officer.

We therefore think that it is not necessary to stay these proceedings, but the Magistrate should be directed if he thinks fit to continue this enquiry by calling before him the Sub-Inspector who made the report and examining him on oath to satisfy himself that there is sufficient ground for taking proceedings under sec. 6 of the Act. If he is so satisfied he can continue those proceedings; if he is not so satisfied he can dismiss the complaint under sec. 203, Criminal Procedure Code.

This judgment will govern the other 19 Rules Nos. 569 to 587 of 1912.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), secs. 145 and 146—Attachment order under sec. 146, without jurisdiction—Evidence, omission to take, when amounts to want of jurisdiction—Jurisdiction.

Where in a proceeding under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., the Magistrate without taking any evidence or making any local enquiry, made an order attaching the land in dispute under sec. 146, Cr. P. C.

Held—That the order of the Magistrate was incompetent and without jurisdiction, as the Magistrate did not make the slightest effort to satisfy himself as to the factum of possession.

SHEIKH MANSAR ALI v. MATIULLAH (1) relied upon.

BEJOY MADHAB CHOWDHURY v. CHANDRA NATH CHUCKERBORTY (2) referred to.

This was a Rule granted on the 29th of April 1912 against the order of Mr. U. Sen Gupta, Deputy Magistrate of Arrah, dated the 6th of March 1912, attaching the land in dispute and directing the Police to gather the crops standing thereon under sec. 146, Criminal Procedure Code.

The material facts of the case were briefly as follows :—

On the 4th January 1912, proceedings were drawn up by Mr. U. Sen Gupta, described in the proceedings as "in charge Magistrate," District Arrah, against the Petitioners and 2nd party in respect of land situate in District Ballia under sec. 145, Criminal Procedure Code.

(1) 12 C. W. N. 896 (1908).

(2) 14 C. W. N. 80 (1909)

16th January was fixed for hearing and pending final decision the land was attached under cl. (a), sec. 145, Criminal Procedure Code.

On that date neither the 2nd party nor the Petitioners filed written statements and the case was adjourned to 30th January when the 2nd Party filed written statement and on the objection of the 2nd party that the land did not lie within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, the Magistrate directed the Police to hold an investigation and report.

On the 21st February 1912, the case was adjourned till 6th March 1912, as both parties applied for time to produce documents.

On the 6th March, the 2nd party prayed for time but the Magistrate did not accede to it and without taking any evidence attached the land under sec. 146 and directed Police to gather the crops standing on it.

Against this order the Petitioners moved this Court and obtained the present Rule.

Babu Chandra Sekhar Prosad Singh and Babu Jyotish Chandra Bose for the Petitioners.

Mr. Orr for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This was a Rule calling on the District Magistrate of Shahabad to show cause why the order under sec. 146 should not be set aside as wholly without jurisdiction, inasmuch as the Magistrate had not taken any evidence as was necessary in order to enable him to determine if possible who was in possession.

Now as regards the duties of the Magistrate under sec. 146 it was laid down in the case of Sheikh Mansar Ali v. Matiullah (1), that the Magistrate in the absence of information might have himself held a local enquiry under sec. 148 or in various ways might have informed himself as to the facts of the case; as he had not done so it was held that he declined jurisdiction and the order complained of was set aside. This ruling has been followed by this Court, in the experience of one of us who has been sitting upon this Bench for the greater part of two years, and has never as far as we know been differed from. There is a ruling in the case of Bejoy Madhab Chowdhury v. Chandra Nath Chuckerburty (2), in which the learned Judges profess to distinguish the ruling in Sheikh Munsar Ali v. Matiullah (1) on the ground that the Judges set aside the order in that case because the Magistrate did not give sufficient time for regular proceedings to be followed. But as we have just pointed out, that was only one ground and a minor ground for setting aside the order. The main ground was the ground we have just now cited and that ground appears to us to be an obviously good ground, for the law says that it is only if the Magistrate decides that none of the parties was then in such possession, or is unable to satisfy himself as to which of them was in such possession, he can attach the property, and it is perfectly clear that he cannot say he is unable to satisfy himself if he has never made the slightest effort to do so. He had only to send a kanango out to the spot and take his report, or send for the headman of the village and ask him what the facts were; he would have then fully armed himself with jurisdiction; but he did nothing of the kind, and it can be clearly distinguished from Bejoy Madhab Chowdhury v. Chandra Nath Chucker- burty (2), where the Magistrate said he was unable to satisfy himself. He does not even say that he has had the slightest difficulty. His order is as follows,—“No evidence produced by either side, lands attached under sec. 146.” Whatever view therefore be taken of the rulings that order is clearly incompetent and without jurisdiction.

(1) 12 C. W. N. 896 (1908).

SHEO BALAK RAI v. BHAGWAT PANDAY.

The order must be set aside and the lands released from attachment.

Once an attack is made on persons in the lawful exercise of their rights over a property, they are entitled to the right of private defence; and the only question which can arise after that is whether any member of the party individually exceeded that right.

People who were in the exercise of lawful rights cannot be held to have been members of an unlawful assembly, nor can that assembly become unlawful by reason of their repelling the attack made upon them by persons who had no right to obstruct them, or by reason of their exceeding the lawful use of the right they had.

The fact of exceeding the right of private defence which a man has, cannot make him a member of an unlawful assembly and he can only be convicted and punished for the individual act which he himself has done in excess of the right of private defence.

This is an Appeal filed on the 22nd of January 1912 from an order, dated the 18th of December 1911, of Mr. J. Cornes, Sessions Judge of Midnapore, who sentenced the Appellants each to two years' rigorous imprisonment under sec. 147, I. P. C.

The facts material to the report will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Monnier and Babu Hirendra Nath Ganguly for the Appellants.

Mr. Orr for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal from the judgment and sentence of the learned Sessions Judge of Midnapore who agreeing with both the assessors found the Appellants, Kunja Bhuniya and Panchu Bhuniya, guilty of the offence of rioting under sec. 147 and sentenced them to two years' rigorous imprisonment each. There were charges under sec. 304 read with secs. 149 and 325, I. P. C., read with sec. 34 in respect of the injuries caused to one Bariar who met his death in consequence of the assault. The learned Judge finding that the fracture of the skull which caused the death was an isolated act committed by one Srinibash and finding also that the charge under sec. 304 read with sec. 149 was withdrawn, did not take the assessors' opinion on it, but he says in his judgment, and we think erroneously, considering the findings which we shall surely have to come to, that the same remarks really apply to the charge under sec. 325 read with sec. 34 as none of the contusions found on Bariar were severe.

Now what is really found in this case is that the accused party were justified in going to the land with the peon who had a warrant in execution of a Civil Court decree, and that they were interfered with and one of their member the drummer was pushed or struck with a lathi by the deceased Bariar who had come out from his house with a party of his adherents and opposed the lawful delivery of possession. This is what gave the Appellants' party the right of private defence, and the Judge seems to change his mind more than once as to whether they had this right of private defence or not, and he finally seems to come to the conclusion that the assembly became unlawful by reason of the accused retaliating when they were obstructed in the lawful exercise of their rights, and he then seems to think that they made an independent attack upon the deceased party and that the deceased's party then also had a right of private defence. We confess we are unable to follow the reasoning of the learned Judge. Once an attack was made on persons in the lawful exercise of their right over the property in question they were undoubtedly entitled to the right of private defence; and the only question which can arise after that is whether any members of the party individually exceeded that right. People who were in the exercise of lawful rights cannot be held to have been members of an unlawful assembly, nor can that assembly become unlawful by reason of their repelling the attack made upon them by persons who had no right to obstruct them, nor by reason of their exceeding the lawful use of the right they had. We have laid down before and we desire to lay down again that the fact of exceeding the right of private defence which a man has cannot make him a member of an unlawful assembly and he can only be convicted and punished for the individual act which he himself has done in excess of the right of private defence ; and it is because we think that these two Appellants, Kunja and Panchu, did exceed that right in that they continued to beat Bariar with lathis after he had been struck down with a fractured skull and was lying in the water in a practically moribund condition, that we have to consider the question of law which we just now pointed out had been wrongly decided by the learned Judge with reference to the charge under sec. 325 read with sec. 34. That charge includes the charge under sec. 323, and notwithstanding the finding of acquittal under sec. 325, we can, on the whole case being open to us on the charges originally framed, convict and punish any of these Appellants on any fact which may be found against him under sec. 323. What they have been acquitted of is causing fracture to the skull of Bariar, but they have not been acquitted of causing simple hurt in a cruel and unnecessary manner after the deceased had fallen and was incapable of rising. For this we think they deserve a severe punishment; and while we are obliged to set aside the conviction and sentence under sec. 147 as being illegal, we think that it is within our power and also distinctly our duty to convict the Appellants under sec. 323.

We accordingly direct that the Appellants, Kunja Bhuniya and Panchu Bhuniya, be rigorously imprisoned for one year under sec. 323, I. P. C.

With this modification the appeals are dismissed.

When the accused's own statement is to be relied upon, it must be taken as a whole ; and nothing can be read into it which is not found within the four walls of the statement.

When a person commits an offence intentionally, but consequences beyond his immediate purposes result, the result is not to be attributed to mere rashness ; if knowledge could not be imputed still the wilful offence does not take the character of rashness because its consequences have been unfortunate, but acts probably or possibly involving danger to others which in themselves are not offences may be offences within the meaning of sec. 304A, I. The facts material to the report appear from the judgment.

Babus Jyotish Chandra Hazra and Debendra Nath Kumar for the Accused.

Mr. Orr for the Crown.

The JUEGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal and Reference from the judgment and sentence of the learned Sessions Judge of Cuttack who agreeing with one assessor and differing from the other has found the accused Pika Bewa guilty of murdering her husband and mother-in-law by aconite poisoning and sentenced her to be hanged by the neck till she is dead.

In the first place with regard to the Reference on the capital sentence it is clear that such sentence cannot be carried out inasmuch as there is doubt whether the accused person is or is not pregnant. But in the view which we take of the case this will become immaterial. It is proved to our satisfaction that these two persons died of aconite poisoning and that another man Dasu the younger brother of the accused's husband very nearly met his death but was apparently saved by the decoction of various local simples which was given to him first of all by a beggar and subsequently by a sorcerer or charmer. We would observe that it would have been most important to examine these persons more carefully as to their knowledge of simple poisons like aconite and opium and the drugs that they are in the habit of using as antidotes to those poisons, when the antidote of irritant poisons would necessarily be something of a very opposite character to the antidote in the case of narcotic poisoning; and it does not appear that when these persons were summoned they knew anything more than that the deceased was suffering from symptoms of poisoning, and they say they took the drugs with them. While we are on the subject of defective investigation in this case we may mention that Bhai Behari's wife was a most important witness who certainly ought to have been examined. There are many other points which ought to have been cleared up so as to leave it without doubt that this woman had knowledge that what the Sonthal and Maguni are alleged to have given her was an irritant poison. Now the only evidence as to this is Pika's own statement to two villagers whom the Judge and one of the assessors appears to us to have rightly believed, the witness Amroo, P. W. 9 and witness Hari Saha, P. W. 10; they are also corroborated by witness No. 11, Udoy Narain Singh, who says that the accused identified one Kuanaria Manjhi as the person who had given her medicine; Kuanaria at first denied giving the accused anything, but afterwards admitted it.

Now it is in evidence that the accused returned to her home on the night of the 15th November and the murder took place in the evening of the 16th. On the morning of the 16th there is evidence

HIGH COURT, O S.; } J. C. HECHLE,
The 6th September 1912. } Registrar.

ON THURSDAY LAST MR. JUSTICE MOOKERJEE delivered judgment in the case of Rajendra Narain Singh which was referred to him owing to a difference of opinion between Mr. Justice Carnduff and Mr. Justice Imam. Mr. Justice Mookerjee has agreed with the latter in quashing the proceedings under sec. 110 Cr. P. Code instituted against the Petitioner. The judgment raises some very important issues which we shall discuss hereafter.

WE ARE GLAD THAT THE GOVERNMENT HAS AT last withdrawn the Delegation Bill. As we stated at the time when the Bill was introduced, it was unsound in principle and impossible in practice. That is exactly what the Hon'ble the Home Member said they have now found out at the discussion in the committee. We are glad that Sir Reginald Craddock has promised to bring in a complete bill with full schedules for carrying into effect the principle of decentralisation. The work will necessarily involve serious labour and strain on the Secretariat but the Hon'ble the Home Member thinks, quite rightly, that that trouble has to be taken if the thing is to be properly done. We also expressed the same view when the Bill was first introduced.

WE ENTIRELY ENDORSE THE VIEW EXPRESSED IN the public press that the Despatch of the Government of India on the Hoti Mardan Khan's case goes considerably beyond its legitimate sphere of defending the Chief Commissioner of the N. W. Frontier Province against some suggestions made by some members of Parliament regarding him in connection with the case. If the explanation offered by the Government of India on behalf of Sir George Roos-Keppel had been confined to the refutation of the charge that the refusal of the Khan to subscribe to the Islamia College had anything to do with his arrest and the criminal proceedings instituted against him and to showing that the uncomplimentary and defamatory illustrations concerning the Khan in the gallant officer's Pushtu grammar were after all mere accidents, we would not have taken any exception to the Despatch. But we are entirely at one with our non-legal contemporaries that the Despatch of the Government of India in so far as it revises the judgment and findings of Mr. Justice Davar in the Khan's case, marks a most dangerous departure from the constitutional and wholesome practice followed by all responsible governments of accepting the judicial findings of the highest Court in the country as final.

WE ARE SINCERELY SORRY THAT THE GOVERNMENT of Lord Hardinge should have committed such an obvious and serious blunder. The demand for a more thorough separation of executive and judicial functions in the Indian administration has been for at least the last quarter of a century in the forefront of public questions in India. So far as we can judge from the trend of public opinion in India, this administrative reform would in the near future be pressed on the Government of India by the whole of the educated community in India as of the very first and most paramount importance. We are all the more sorry, therefore, that His Excellency the Governor-General in Council should have taken this occasion of sitting in judgment over the findings of a High Court Judge in respect of a case judicially determined before him.

THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA HAS NO DOUBT done its duty in placing facts before the public which thoroughly discredit the suggestion that an officer of the position and responsibility of Sir George Roos-Keppel was at the root of the arrest and the criminal proceedings against the Khan because the Khan had refused to pay any subscription to the Islamia College. But we think the Government of India has been very ill-advised in entering upon a defence of the Punjab Police or the Punjab subordinate executive in connection with the Khan's case. When their acts and conduct were called into question before the Bombay High Court, it was for them to place before the Court every fact to establish the legality or regularity of their acts which had been called into question. The Court was thoroughly justified in drawing its own conclusions in these respects from the materials before it. After that it is neither decorous nor proper for the Government of India to step forward and enter upon a defence of the acts and conduct of the officers concerned which had been considered and adjudicated upon at a judicial trial. The Government of India have not only departed from its duty in not accepting such findings as final, but gone out of their way in reviewing the evidence and even interpreting the sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the Penal Code which they are not authorised to do.

THEY HAVE IN DOING ALL THIS ARROGATED TO themselves the functions of the Executive, the Legislator, the Judge, the Jury and the Appellate and Revisional Court all rolled into one. It is no wonder that this unprecedented attempt on their part to transgress the limits of their constitutional powers and to encroach upon judicial functions has met with almost universal public condemnation. The wonder is that it did not strike any member of the Government of India that it could not be otherwise. We only express public opinion when we say that quite apart from the impropriety of the course adopted by the Government of India, the case sought to be made out by them against the Khan, or in defence of his arrest, refusal of bail and his detention in prison, has not carried conviction with anybody and has singularly failed in its object. The Khan may or may not be a man of estimable character, but the question is whether without any substantial criminal charge against him, which even the Despatch with all its fantastic interpretation of the law fails to make out, he should have been treated by the executive and the police in the manner he was. The public would in this matter adhere to the opinion expressed by the judge in preference to that put forward by the Government of India.

WE ALSO REGRET TO NOTICE THAT THE GOVERNMENT of India is no more happy in their interpretation of the law than in their review of facts. We are greatly surprised to read the grounds advanced by the Governor-General in Council in justification of the refusal of bail to the Khan. It is solemnly maintained in the Despatch that the refusal was justified inasmuch as "it is a common Indian experience that enlargement on bail is used by wealthy and powerful persons to bribe and intimidate witnesses." We have heard of grounds like this being urged by Sub-Inspectors of Police before Mofussil Magistrates, but no lawyer or Judge of any position would urge or regard this as a valid ground for refusal of bail. If this were a sound principle, it would follow that whenever a criminal charge is brought against a person of position he ought to be forthwith shut up in prison and that every opportunity should be given to the prosecution to collect evidence and none to the accused to make his defence. If a charge happens to be spurious, no better means can be devised for securing the conviction of an accused person of evidence which the accused would, under the circumstances, have little opportunity of meeting.

BUT HAPPILY THIS INDIAN POLICE-MAN'S VIEW of bail, although it has been availed of by the Government of India as a prop to an untenable position, has seldom found favour with our judges. It has been recognised in our law Courts that the purposes of bail are the same under the Indian statutes as they are in the English law

Lord Chief Justice Russel said in Reg v. Rose that "the object of bail was never punitive." This was the view of the Court of Crown Cases Reserved (Russel, L. C. J., Hawkins, Mathew, Lawrence and Wright, JJ., see 2 C. W. N. cxxxii). Their Lordships observed that "it could not be too strongly represented to Magistrates that bail was meant simply for securing the attendance of the accused." The rich and the poor are equally entitled to its benefit. The Government of India is not at all justified in supposing that if the Khan had been a man in a humbler position in life the hardships of his case would not have attracted any public attention. A perusal of our pages would show that we have always fought for the more approved principle of bail being upheld in our Courts in the interest of the common people. It is that every accused person who has a home and a habitation should be ordinarily entitled to bail.

THAT THIS SINGULAR EXCUSE FOR REFUSING BAIL to under-trial prisoners should find place in the Government of India Despatch seems all the more extraordinary when it is remembered that the approved judicial view of bail has been repeatedly embodied in the circulars of successive Home Secretaries in England (see. 2 C. W. N. cxxx) and has also sometimes been emphasised in the Administration Reports of the Local Governments in this country. For instance, it is only recently that the Madras Government in its Resolution on the Administration of Jails has, in view of the detention in custody of under-trial prisoners and the large number of acquittals, directed that "a person under trial should never be detained in custody unless it is absolutely necessary, and then the period of detention should be as short as possible." It is regrettable therefore that the Government of India should promulgate a view which is in direct contravention of principles approved by the best opinions, both judicial and executive, in England as well as in this country. The Government of India no doubt also urge in justification of the refusal of bail that the Khan might have fled across the frontier. But it is hardly reasonable to suppose that the Khan would have left his estate, property, relations and friends all behind and for good without making any attempt to defend himself against a charge of which he was honourably acquitted by a Judge of the Bombay High Court. Naturally the inference is that bail had been refused to the Khan on the other plea we have already noticed which is surely more punitive in its object than otherwise.

THE VIEW OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA WITH regard to sec. 81 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which provides that persons arrested should be produced before a Court without delay is no less extraordinary. The Despatch says that the fact that the Khan was not so produced was a mere technical irregularity. But it has long since been held in our Courts that the section is imperative. It has further been held that if a police-officer does not produce an arrested person before a Court within 24 hours he is punishable under sec. 25 of the Police Act (V of 1861), see 1 W. R. Cr. 5 and 19 W. R. Cr. 36. The Governor-General and his executive colleagues may, no doubt, make laws with the aid of the Legislative Council, but the Governor-General in Council has no authority to interpret such laws. Our law Courts have always censured any attempt on the part of any local executive to interpret the law in its executive capacity by circular or otherwise as it is calculated to mislead the subordinate judiciary. Surely what is reprehensible in the local or the subordinate executive officers cannot be commendable in the highest executive in the land. It is also no less objectionable for the Government of India to assume in this Despatch the functions of a Judge, Jury and an Appellate Court, and observe with regard to the findings of fact that "the Governor-General in Council could not but consider that the Hon'ble Judge had seriously misapprehended the significance of the act alleged" and then proceed to interpret the Indian Penal Code in their own way. They do not even hesitate to accuse the Khan of a criminal offence even after he has been honourably acquitted by a High Court Judge.

PROSPECTS OF MEMBERS OF EXECUTIVE AND JUDICIAL BRANCHES OF THE PROVINCIAL CIVIL SERVICE.

A member of the Provincial Judicial Service has submitted to us a table showing the comparative pay and prospects of the two branches of the Provincial Civil Service. From this table our correspondent draws certain conclusions which as also the table we publish below in extenso. We do not in any way commit ourselves to his conclusions but set out both his premises and conclusions as they are. The writer submits at the outset some explanatory notes to his tables and conclusions.

(a) It should be borne in mind that the Munsifs have had to officiate for 2 to 3 years before the date of confirmation from which the computation is made.

(b) In computing the age and period of service only the years have been taken into consideration and not months and dates.

(c) Only the cases of those who were appointed Deputy Magistrates at once have been taken up for comparison.

(d) The tables have been compiled from the Civil List corrected up to 1st April 1912, and the history of services of the Gazetted Officers.

The following conclusions are apparent from the annexed tables:—

Review.

THE LAW OF EVIDENCE, as administered in British India. By Mahim Chand-a Sarkar, Rai Bahadur, assisted by Subodh Chandra Sarkar, B. L., Pleader. M. C. Sarkar & Sons, Law Publishers and Book-sellers, 75, Harrison Road, Calcutta. 1912. Price Rs. 9.

This book bears ample testimony to the fact that the commentator of the Civil Procedure Code has been turning the leisure afforded by retirement from judicial service into very good account. The book is not a mere collection of case-notes. The author has studied the cases as also the standard text-books of which mention need only be made of Taylor, Markby, Woodroffe, Norton, Cunningham and Best, and every sentence in his notes seems to have been duly weighed before being put into its present shape. The result is a well-ordered commentary on every point that may possibly arise upon the interpretation and application of each section of the Act. English cases are freely cited when they are calculated to elucidate the text of the Act. It need hardly be added that the book is thoroughly up-to-date. It does in the truest sense of the term furnish a vade mecum of the law of evidence to practitioners in this country, for not only does it put within easy reach the cases bearing on any point, and the observations of text-book writers of repute, but it gives, besides, in a series of appendices, valuable hints culled from standard writers, relating to the examination and cross-examination of witnesses and the appreciation of evidence, the speeches and reports of Sir James Stephen in connection with the passing of the Act and other miscellaneous informations to which detailed reference seems unnecessary. Considering the amount of labour spent on the work and the variety and quality of the matter presented, the price of the work seems quite moderate. Its printing, binding and the general get up also deserve praise.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL. In re Hart—Green v. Hart and Lomas. Before THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS AND LORDS JUSTICES BUCKLEY AND KENNEDY. 18th June 1912.

Voluntary gift of shares—Donor's subsequent bankruptcy—Shares sold by donee for value without knowledge—Is the trustee in bankruptcy entitled to the shares?

This was an Appeal from a decision of PHILLIMORE, J.

On October 14, 1909, Hart, the bankrupt, executed a voluntary transfer of certain shares to his daughter, who on April 13, 1910, sold the same for value to Miss Lomas. On March 31, 1910, Hart had committed an act of bankruptcy by non-compliance with a bankruptcy notice. On April 14 a petition was presented against him, on April 22 a receiving order was made, and on May 13 he was adjudicated bankrupt. It was admitted that at the date of the purchase Miss Lomas had no knowledge of any act of bankruptcy by Hart, but the trustee in bankruptcy claimed under sec. 47 (1) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, to have the transfer to her set aside.

The Court below held in favour of the trustee. Hence this Appeal which was allowed. The Master of the Rolls in the course of his judgment said:—It was held by Mr. Justice Vaughan Williams in the case of Re Brall 1893, 2 K. B., 381, that when the statute says that a voluntary settlement is "void against the trustee in bankruptcy" the word "void" must be construed as meaning "voidable" and not absolutely void. He points out that in all earlier bankruptcy statutes dealing with this subject-matter the settlement was made voidable by the Court though neither the word "void" nor "voidable" was used, and he concludes that the object of the Legislature had remained unchanged and that the purpose of the alteration was merely convenience of drafting. He added that the moment it is assumed that a settlement is not void ab initio those authorities apply which decide under 27 Elizabeth, c. 4, that a purchase for valuable consideration from a person making a title under a voluntary conveyance relates back so as to prevent the original conveyance being a voluntary conveyance within the meaning of the Act. So far as I am aware Re Brall has never been questioned, and it was expressly approved by the Court of Appeal in Re Carter and Kenderdine's Contract, 1897, 1 Ch., 776. It has also been held that sec. 47 does not vest the property comprised in the voluntary settlement in the trustee—Sanginetti v. Stuckey's Banking Company (1895, 1 Ch., 176).

In the present case the shares are vested in Flora Lomas, and Mr. Justice Phillimore has ordered her to transfer them to the trustee. In my opinion the true view is that a voluntary settlement is not void, but is only voidable by the trustee, who must apply to the Court for a declaration to that effect and for consequential relief. It seems to me to follow that the trustee is in the same position as any other litigant who seeks a declaration that a deed is voidable whether on the ground of fraud or undue influence or otherwise. It is settled law that, however good a claim might be as against the grantee, the Plaintiff cannot succeed if there has been any subsequent transaction for value and without notice. On April 13 who was the owner of the shares? Only one answer is possible. Flora Lomas, who acquired them from the registered owner. The property was of such a nature that no investigation of the title of the transferor was possible, and it would be almost shocking to deprive her of the property she acquired in good faith.

I think I am entitled to do what Lord Justice Lindley did in Re Carter, viz., "to consider what the consequences would be if the other conclusion were arrived at." No purchaser of shares on the Stock Exchange would be safe if Flora Lomas is to be deprived of her shares. If I may adopt the words of Lord Justice Lindley, "to my mind good sense is shocked by such a startling conclusion as that." The Court of Bankruptcy has always been regarded as a Court of Equity. The Courts of Equity have for centuries refused to grant relief against a purchaser for value without notice in whom, or in a trustee for whom a legal title is vested. A good illustration of this is found in Wilkes v. Bodington (2 Vern., 599). In my opinion it is strictly in accordance with established principles to hold that the shares cannot be claimed by the trustee against Flora Lomas.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Irwin v. Waterloo Taxi-cab Coy., Ltd. Before LORDS JUSTICES VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, MOULTON AND BUCKLEY. 25th JULY 1912.

Master's liability for a servant's tort—The doctrine of holding out considered—Servant driving under manager's direction on manager's business—Master if liable.

This was an application by way of appeal in an action tried before PICKFORD, J. Black, the manager of a yard in which taxi-cabs were let out on hire, acting not in the interest or for the benefit of his masters, the proprietors of the yard who were the Defendants in the action, ordered one Bird, a driver whose duty it was to obey Black's orders in respect of driving the taxi-cabs, to drive him to some destination for his (Black's) personal pleasure or convenience, to effect some purpose of his own. Bird carried out this order and drove Black in a taxi-cab to the named destination. In the course of that drive the accident in respect of which the action was brought occurred.

Bird had no knowledge that the order which Black gave him was an order which Black had no right to give.

The Defendants pleaded that the driver was at the time not acting within the scope of his employment. The Court below passed judgment in favour of the Plaintiff for £350. Hence this appeal which was dismissed. In the course of his judgment LORD JUSTICE VAUGHAN WILLIAMS said:

There could be no doubt that Black was not in this transaction acting as his masters' servant. Prima facie, therefore, apart from any duty of the driver to his masters to obey Black's orders, the Defendant company would not be liable to the Plaintiff for the accident occurring to the Plaintiff during the drive through the carelessness of the driver acting under the orders of Black. Did it make any difference that Bird as the servant of the company was bound to obey the orders of Black? Could the Plaintiff, a stranger, say "Bird obeyed Black's orders because it was as their, the company's, servant that he came under the obligation to obey Black?"

This was not a case in which the Plaintiff could say—You, the Defendants, had by previous practice held out Bird as your servant. It was not like the case of a master who had held out Bird as acting for him. Bird was never held out to the Plaintiff in any capacity. The case of the Plaintiff must be—Bird in driving was in fact acting as your, the Defendants', servant; you told him in respect of his duties as your servant in the taxi-yard to obey as his orders all the directions of Black.

His Lordship thought that any defence which was founded on Bird not being a servant of the Defendant company failed. As to the defence founded upon the car not being at the disposal of the Defendant company because it was at the time of the accident by agreement appropriated exclusively to the use of one Graham Harding, and specially fitted for him, his Lordship did not think this afforded a defence. The servant of the Defendant company by a direction conveyed to him by the manager whose directions it was his, Bird's, duty to the Defendants to carry out, did drive this car on the day the accident occurred. His Lordship did not think that prevented Bird, in driving, being a servant of the Defendant company, since Bird drove in pursuance of the direction of Black, whose direction he, Bird, was by his duty to the Defendants bound to carry out, unless there was something about the direction of Black which would make a reasonable man doubt the authority which was not the case here.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION. Ex parte Stallmann. Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND AND JUSTICES DARLING AND PHILLIMORE. 25th JULY 1912.

Habeas Corpus Act, 1697, sec. 5—Extradition proceedings—Effect of decision of the Calcutta High Court—Release in previous habeas corpus proceeding for an error of procedure, if bars fresh proceeding on same charge.

This was a rule nisi for a writ of habeas corpus to obtain the release of Rudolph Stallmann who had been committed to prison for the purpose of being extradited to Germany. Similar proceedings were taken in India and the judgment of the Calcutta High Court is reported in 15 C. W. N. 1053.

The rule was obtained on five grounds:—

(1) on the ground that Stallmann was arrested on the same charge as that for which he had been discharged at Calcutta; (2) autrefois acquit; (3) Articles IV and XV of the Extradition Treaty with Germany of 1872; (4) no prima facie case; (5) evidence had been admitted which was inadmissible.

The plea of autrefois acquit was not pressed. On the evidence the Court found that a prima facie case had been established. On the remaining points the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE in the course of his judgment observed—

On October 25th, 1910, a request was made by the German Government in this country for the extradition of Stallmann. Between October 25th, 1910, and March, 1912, Stallmann was in India. An application was made for his extradition from India to Germany. His Lordship said he did not draw any distinction between proceedings for habeas corpus and the proceedings which actually took place in India. Under the Indian law the prisoner was entitled to call evidence on his behalf. The Magistrate, however, did not give him that opportunity. When the case was taken before the High Court at Calcutta the Court held that though in the charge against him with reference to Von Dippe a prima facie case had been made out, yet the accused was entitled to be discharged, as he had not had the opportunity of calling evidence. When proceedings were taken against Stallmann in England it was suggested that as he had been discharged in India he could not be recommitted in England on the same charge. That argument was based upon sec. 5 of the Habeas Corpus Act, 1697, which provided:—"And for the prevention of unjust vexation by reiterated commitments for the same offence, be it enacted by the authority aforesaid or set at large that no person or persons which shall be delivered upon any habeas corpus shall at any time hereafter be again imprisoned or committed for the same offence by any person or persons whatsoever other than by the legal order and process of such Court wherein he or they shall be bound by recognizance to appear or other Court having jurisdiction of the cause."

It was quite impossible, as well as unnecessary, for him to deal with all the questions which might arise under that section. That section was intended to meet the case when a person had been released on bail and to prevent him from being re-arrested while on bail on the same charge. But it was impossible to suggest that where a person had been released owing to an error in the proceedings that that section prevented a competent Court from ordering that he should be again committed on the same charge. It was said that the contrary was laid down in the case of Attorney-General of Hongkong v. Kwok-a-Sing (L. R., 5 P. C., 179), but the judgment in that case showed that the Court was referring to a case where there had been a trial on the merits on the first occasion. Therefore, the fact that Stallmann had been released in India owing to an error in the proceedings was no answer to other proceedings in this country upon the same charge.

The Attorney-General (Sir Rufus Isaacs, K. C.), The Solicitor-General (Sir John Simon, K. C.), Mr. Rowlatt and Mr. Bodkin showed cause.

Messrs. Danckwerts, K. C., Elliot, K. C., Bennet and Hutchinson in support of the Rule.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[ON APPEAL FROM ONTARIO.]

THE LORD CHANCELLOR
LORD MACNAGHTEN.
LORD ATKINSON.
SIR CHARLES FITZPATRICK.
1912,
30th July.

THE BARNARD ARGUE
ROTH STEARNS OIL & GAS COY., LD., and others,
v.
FARQUHARSON.

Meaning of "minerals"—Is natural gas a mineral?

This was an Appeal from a judgment of the Court of Appeal for Ontario. The Canada Company in 1867 granted to Mr. Farquharson the fee-simple of 100 acres at Tilbury, in the Province of Ontario. The deed contained an excepting clause in the following terms:—"Excepting and reserving to the company, their successors and assigns, all mines and quarries of metals and minerals, and all springs of oil in or under the said land, whether already discovered or not, with liberty of ingress, egress, and regress to and for the said company, their successors, lessees, licensees, and assigns, in order to search for, work, win, and carry away the same, and for those purposes to make and use all needful roads and other works, doing no other unnecessary damage, and making reasonable compensation for all damage actually occasioned."

The sole question for decision was what was the true construction of this clause? Did it or did it not except from the grant the natural gas which impregnated certain underlying strata of these lands?

In the course of their Lordships' judgment which was delivered by Lord ATKINSON they said:

The case did not require that their Lordships should lay down a definition of minerals, nor even draw the line between what were and what were not minerals; the only question for decision was what, having regard to the time at which that instrument was executed, and the circumstances then existing, the parties intended to express by the language they had used, or, in other words, what was their intention touching the substances to be excepted as revealed by that language.

In one sense natural gas is, as rock oil also is, a mineral, in that it is neither an animal nor a vegetable product, and all substances to be found on, in, or under the earth must be included in one or other of the three categories of animal, vegetable, or mineral substance. It is obvious, however, for several reasons, that in this clause of the grant the word "minerals" is not used in this wide and general sense. First, because two substances are expressly mentioned in the clause which would be certainly covered by the word "minerals" used in its widest sense—namely, "metals," and "springs of oil in or under the lands;" secondly, because the words "all mines and quarries of metals and minerals," coupled with the words "search for, work, win, and carry away the same," do not seem to be applicable to a thing of the nature of this gas, obtainable in the way it is obtained; thirdly, because of the nature of the relation which exists between this gas and "rock oil, or the springs of oil in or under the ground," excepted in the grant of the function which the gas performs in winning, working, or obtaining the oil from these springs; and, fourthly, because of the state of knowledge at the date of this deed and the way in which gas of this kind was then regarded and treated.

As Lord Watson said in The Lord Provost and Magistrates of Glasgow v. Farnie (13 A.C., 657, 675), "the words 'mines' and 'minerals' are not definite terms, they are susceptible of limitation or expansion according to the intention with which they are used." It is clearly established by the evidence that this gas is not volatilized rock oil, nor rock oil condensed natural gas. The gas is not an exhalation of the oil, nor is it held in solution by the oil to any considerable extent. The gas and the oil are in their chemical composition no doubt both hydro-carbons, but they are distinct and different products, and it therefore could not be contended successfully, their Lordships think, that the words "springs of oil" cover this natural gas, simply because both are found in some cases to impregnate the same subterranean porous stratum, and that when this stratum is tapped by a pipe or boring leading to the surface the gas in its escape to the upper air helps to bring up to the surface with it some of the oil. In some instances a stratum almost entirely impregnated with gas is found separated by a stratum impervious to both gas and oil from a stratum almost entirely impregnated with oil. Both the impregnated strata are then tapped by separate pipes so arranged that the gas performs the same function as in the other case, bringing, or helping to bring, oil to the surface; but in both cases, when the pressure under which the gas is pent up in the earth is relieved, a pump has to be used to pump up the oil.

Administration of trust property—Sec. 37 of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881).

One Raghunath Das died having previously obtained a declaration that he was the Mohunt of a certain akhra. He died leaving, it is alleged, a Will whereby he appointed a certain minor as his chela and made the Appellant executor to the said alleged Will. Madhusudan applied for Probate and Letters of Administration in the alternative before the District Judge of Murshidabad. The application was refused on the ground that the property being debutter property, the document is not a Will under the Probate and Administration Act. He relied on Mohunt Jib Lal Gir, 2 C. W. Petitioner appealed to the High Court:

PIKA BEWA v. THE EMPEROR.

to show that she went to visit Maguni and in the afternoon of the 16th Maguni came to her husband's house, and from the evidence of Dasu, witness No. 3 for the prosecution, it would appear that notwithstanding the known intrigue between Maguni and Pika, Maguni was on visiting terms with the whole family. We can have no doubt that whatever poison was administered to the deceased was administered through the instrumentality of Maguni and some Sonthal whom he got hold of to supply the poison. The woman's own statement is that she did not know that it was poison; she thought it was some charm to procure the love of her husband and her mother-in-law who had been treating her badly. This statement may not seem to be very credible, but it is all the evidence we have; and when the accused's own statement is to be relied upon it must be taken as a whole, and nothing can be read into it which is not found within the four walls of the statement. We must therefore as far as this woman's guilt is concerned accept her statement that she at the instigation of Maguni obtained some powder, the character of which she was ignorant of and mixed it with pumpkin curry which she knew would be eaten by her husband, her mother-in-law and her husband's brother Dasu with whom she also appears to have been on unfriendly terms. The fact that she herself only ate plain rice and gave her child only plain rice is a very suspicious circumstance against her. She must therefore at any rate have been aware that she was committing something dangerous in administering some drug which had been given to her by a man whose relations with her made him an enemy of her husband; and this we think is undoubtedly a rash and negligent act within the meaning of sec. 304A. If she had known that the substance she was administering was an unlawful substance, that is to say, poisonous substance, that would have made a specific offence, and in that case sec. 304A would not apply. If a man intentionally commits any offence and consequences beyond his immediate purposes result, the result is not to be attributed to mere rashness; if knowledge could not be imputed still the wilful offence does not take the character of rashness because its consequences have been unfortunate; but acts probably or possibly involving danger to others which in themselves are not offences may be offences within the meaning of sec. 304A and kindred sections, if done without due care to guard against dangerous consequences; and this was the view which was taken by the Madras High Court in In re Nidamurti Naga Bhushanam (1), which was approved by this Court in the case of Empress v. Ketabdi Mundal (2).

Now the mere administering of a love-potion or drug which a person thinks might be beneficial is not in itself an offence; but when it is supposed to have effect upon persons with whom the paramour of the accused had enmity, and when she administers it without due care and caution or any enquiry as to what it really is, her act certainly falls within sec. 304A.

We think that the conviction under sec. 302 cannot be allowed to stand as the accused is entitled to the benefit of the doubt which we have already adverted to. But we think that she is certainly guilty under sec. 304A. We think that it was shown that she is a woman of abandoned character and richly deserves a more severe punishment than we are able to give her under that section. We therefore direct that she be rigorously imprisoned for two years under sec. 304A, which is the maximum sentence which the law allows under that section. The conviction and sentence under sec. 302 are set aside.

SHRIMANT RAJE BAHADUR RAGHOJIRAOSAHEB, Appellant,
v.SHRIMANT RAJE
LAKSHMANRAO SAHEB,
Respondent.

Sanad, informal and ambiguous—Construction—Contemporanea expositio—Evidence of construction placed by Government since the date of grant if admissible—Jaghir, impartibility of, ground of—Custom of primogeniture v may attach to grant of jaghir—Inam and saranjam, distinction in meaning.

Contemporanea expositio as a guide to the interpretation of documents is often accompanied with danger and great care must be taken in its application.

Where the question was as to the extent of properties, granted as an appanage to the title of Raja conferred on the grantee by a Government sanad and described therein as "lands attached to Deur," a village in the District of Satara in the Bombay Presidency, and the literal construction confining the grant to the single village mentioned was adopted by neither party, but whilst one party sought to confine it to the properties within the Satara District which would be worth about Rs. 3,000* per annum, the other contended that it covered all the properties within the Bombay Presidency, which yielded a total revenue of Rs. 12,000 a year,

Held—That the sanad being a document of a general and informal character and admittedly capable of a variety of constructions, the ambiguity covering the geographical as well as the pecuniary extent of the grant, it was legitimate to consider what was the footing upon which the grantors viz, the Government and its successors and officials, from the date of the grant and for a long period of time proceeded.

Held—That the grant included all the properties in the Bombay Presidency, and the whole of those properties were impartible as an appanage to the title of Raja.

Grants of jaghir are personal and not heritable. Being personal and temporary they are necessarily impartible. A custom of succession by primogeniture alleged in respect of a jaghir would not be a subject for proof because such a custom would be radically inconsistent with the personal and non transmissive character of a grant in jaghir.

Held—That the distinction between saranjam and inam drawn by the High Court confining the term saranjam to lands of Satara, was not well-founded.

This was an Appeal from a Judgment and Decree of the High Court at Bombay, dated the 14th of November, 1907, which affirmed a Decree of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona, dated the 7th of December, 1904.

The main question for determination in the present Appeal was the partibility of certain property consisting of villages, lands, etc., in the districts of Poona, Ahmednagar and Sholapur in the Presidency of Bombay.

SHRIMANT RAJE BAHADUR RAGHOJIRAO SAHEB v. SHRIMANT RAJE LAKSHMANRAO SAHEB.

The circumstances out of which the Appeal arose may be stated as follows:—

The Respondent and the Appellant are half brothers, and the only surviving male representatives of the Nagpur Branch of the "Bhonsle" family.

It appears that in 1853, Raghoji III, the last ruling Prince of Nagpur died, leaving him surviving four widows. The title of Raja of Nagpur then became extinct. In 1858 proceedings were taken by the Inam Commissioner under the Inam Commissions Act of 1852, and the Government, acting upon his reports, declared the whole estate to have lapsed, except in so far as a portion of it, in the districts of Poona, Ahmednagar and Sholapur, which was continued as a matter of grace to the widows until the death of the last survivor of them.

In 1855 the surviving widows of Raja Raghoji III adopted Janoji Bhonsle, the father of the Appellant and the Respondent. Subsequently the Government of India, in consideration of the loyalty of the family and the services of a female member of it named Rani Bakabai, during the Indian Mutiny, recognised or admitted the succession of Janoji, the adopted son, to "certain Wattans, etc., held by the late ruler of Nagpur in the Collectorate of Poona, Ahmednagar and Sholapur and in the Satara Territory." This measure was confirmed by the Secretary of State for India in a despatch, dated the 7th of March, 1862.

In a letter, dated the 30th of March, 1860, the Government of India also agreed to the grant of the title of "Raja of Deur" to Janoji, and to the lands of Deur near Satara being attached to it, and directed that a Sanad to that effect should be prepared. It is dated the 10th of October, 1861, and is quoted in their Lordships' judgment.

On the 5th of March, 1864, the Under-Secretary to the Government of India wrote in reply to an enquiry from the Government of Bombay as follows:—

"I am directed, in reply to your letter No. 4408, dated 9th December last, to inform you that His Excellency the Governor in Council of Bombay is right in supposing that all the possessions specified in the list accompanying the memorandum from Revenue Commissioner S. D. No. 3726, dated 4th November last, are to be continued hereditarily to Janoji Bhonsale and his heirs without further enquiry."

It was not now disputed that the "list" mentioned in this letter was the list drawn up by the Inam Commissioner in 1858.

Raja Janoji died on the 5th of December, 1881, leaving him surviving three widows, three daughters and two sons, the present Appellant and the Respondent. The former, the elder son, was then only nine years old. In the year 1885, the management of the property was transferred to the Court of Wards. In 1893, when the Appellant attained his majority, the whole of the estate left by Raja Janoji was handed over to him. He managed it until the year 1895, when, in August, on his plea of inability to manage his affairs, it was again placed under the management of the Court of Wards.

The Respondent claimed a share in the property situate in the Bombay Presidency which led to the present suit for partition of the estate mentioned in the Schedules annexed to the Plaint.

Upon the pleadings of the parties, several issues were raised of which the following are material:—

"(3). Is the property or any part of it liable to the rule of primogeniture either by family usage or any other ground?

SHRIMANT RAJE BAHADUR RAGHOJIRAO SAHEB v. SHRIMANT RAJE LAKSEMANRAO SAHEB.

"(5). Is the property, or any part thereof, impartible? If so, is the Plaintiff entitled to share in the profits and management thereof by reason of his being a co-parcener?"

"(6). Has the property in dispute, or any part thereof, been held and continued on political tenure, and is it impartible on that ground?"

"(7). Is the property mentioned in Schedule "A" or any part thereof the private property of the parties, and as such liable to partition?"

"(8). Is the Plaintiff entitled to get the moiety of the property or any part thereof, and to obtain a moiety of the proceeds thereof?"

"(12). Does the Defendant enjoy the title of Raja of Deur, and does the property in the Bombay Presidency go with that title?"

Oral and documentary evidence was adduced on behalf of both parties. In addition to the documents filed by him, the Plaintiff endeavoured by a petition to the Bombay Government, to obtain copies of two important documents. He was informed, however, that his request could not be complied with. The Subordinate Judge then issued a summons calling for the documents, but was told by the Under-Secretary to Government that only an inspection of the records, on certain conditions, could be allowed. Upon this the Subordinate Judge recorded his opinion that he could make no use of the contents of the documents unless copies were put on the record.

In the High Court the Plaintiff presented a Petition, in which he explained the facts, and prayed that the High Court would send for the documents from the Government records, as they were absolutely necessary for a proper decision of the questions at issue in the Appeal before the High Court.

The Court considered that the reply of the Government to the Subordinate Judge did not indicate that they relied on sec. 123 of the Evidence Act as a reason for not producing the documents, and therefore directed that a letter should be written to the Government to ascertain whether they were willing to produce them. In reply, the Government considered it inadvisable to produce the documents.

On the 7th of December, 1904, the Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment. He recorded at the outset that the Plaintiff's Counsel did not press the claim in respect of the villages in the Satara District, as he admitted that it was not cognisable by the Civil Court without the Collector's Certificate under the Pensions Act 23 of 1871, and also because that estate was shown by the evidence in the case to have been treated for a long time as an appanage of the title of Raja of Deur, which was conferred on the Defendant alone.

The Subordinate Judge gave his findings separately on each of the issues, but of these findings it is now necessary to mention only the following. On the fifth and sixth issues he held that the property in the Satara District only was impartible, and that the Plaintiff had no right to a share in the profits and management of it. On the seventh issue he decided that the whole of the property in suit, save that in the Satara District and the moveables referred to in the Plaint, was private joint property, and was liable to partition. On the eighth issue he found that the Plaintiff was entitled to get a moiety of such property and to obtain a moiety of the proceeds thereof.

SERIMANT RAJE BAHADUR RAGHOJIRAO SAHAB V. SHRIMANT RAJE LAKSHMANRAO SAHAB.

The Defendant appealed to the High Court at Bombay, and on the 14th of November, 1907, two learned Judges of the High Court (Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., and Knight, J.), who heard the Appeal, delivered Judgment. In the course of their Judgment, they said :—

“ We may now turn to the crucial point of the case: what is the meaning of the phrase the Deur lands or the lands of or, attached to Deur? It is agreed on both sides that it is these lands that form the special appanage of the Rajaship, and that they must therefore be impartible; and the suit has been brought practically to ascertain whether the phrase comprises the whole of the several estates situate in the Bombay Presidency, or only that portion which lies within the Satara District. The Defendant contends for the former interpretation, the Plaintiff for the latter.

The point is virtually decided by the evidence that we have already discussed; for the Sanad read with the list Exhibit 437 shows that it was the Satara lands alone that were regranted as Saranjam, and the “Deur lands” can therefore mean nothing but the lands within that district. This indeed is the natural construction to put upon the phrase; and that it is the correct one is a matter on which the evidence to which we will now refer can leave no reasonable doubt.

The Saranjam detailed in the lists consists of the village of Deur, certain cash payments deriving from the village of Dahigaon and some lands lying in the village of Palsi; all in the Satara District. The phrase therefore comprises more than the actual lands of Deur village itself; but the list affords no warrant for extending it to properties lying in other districts. Whatever difficulty might be felt in defining or explaining its meaning is set at rest by the evidence of the Kamgar or steward of the estate, called as witness Exhibit 225 for the Plaintiff. Premising that he manages the properties in all the four Bombay Districts on behalf of the Raja, he proceeds: “The whole of the property is divided into two talukas called Devinimbgaon and Deur. The properties in the Ahmednagar, Poona and Sholapur Districts form the taluka of Devinimbgaon, and the property in the Satara district forms the Deur taluka.” From other passages in his evidence it appears that the estate accounts are separately kept for each taluka, and he mentions that he has two naibs or deputies, one living at Devinimbgaon and the other at Deur. He was himself Naib Kamgar at Devinimbgaon for some years. Now the credit and impartiality of this witness were not shaken—indeed, were not attacked—in cross-examination, and have not been impugned in argument before us; and we must regard his evidence as conclusive. We find no difficulty in accepting the explanation (though it does not appear explicitly on the evidence) that Deur was one of the old talukas of the district under Moglai or Maratha rule; and the steward's evidence shows that the name has persisted up to the present day as a general term for that portion of the Bhonsla estate lying within the Satara District. We are thus afforded an interpretation of the phrase no less adequate than natural, one which consists with the documentary evidence and which spares us the necessity of straining the expression Deur lands or lands of Deur so as to include properties lying in other districts, some at least of which could never have formed part of the ancient taluka. Although therefore the Plaintiff's own case involves the admission that the disputed phrase is not to be construed with rigidity, the lands of Deur admittedly meaning more than the lands of Deur itself, there is no real difficulty in ascertaining its exact signification; and that, we must conclude, is the signification for which Plaintiff has contended.

There is little left to add. We have been content to approach the case on its plain merits, and we have had no occasion to refer to the argument pressed upon us on behalf of the Plaintiff—an argument whose force cannot be gainsaid—that the onus of proving the impartibility of the estate rests heavily upon the Defendant, and that he has done little to discharge it. If the evidence were meagre or uncertain, it might have been necessary to have recourse to this proposition before a valid conclusion could be attained; but Plaintiff can afford to dispense with its assistance. For it is clearly established that the original grant was a personal grant in jaghir, that the regrant did not so much continue this grant as substitute for it a family hereditary grant partly in saranjam and partly in inam and watan; and that of the properties within the Bombay Presidency only those lying within the Satara District were regranted in saranjam.

We have not thought it necessary to allude to the official letters and other documents of recent date that have been put in evidence. Their evidentiary value, if they have any at all, is so exiguous as to be negligible, and we may content ourselves with the broad assertion that with one exception they harmonize with our conclusions. No separate argument was addressed to us on the subject of the watans, regarding which there seems to be little evidence available. It was agreed that they should follow the decision on the main question. The other points raised in the lower Court, including that of estoppel, were not pressed; and the Plaintiff abandoned his cross-objection.

The decree is confirmed with costs "

Hence this appeal.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown, Mr. Lowndes and Mr. Dick for the Appellant submitted that the estates in question were impartible by custom and by the nature of their tenure. They were not heritable up to 1853, when Raghoji III died and on the re-grant by the British Government they continued impartible. There was no evidence to show that the intention of the re-grant was that the estates should be partible. The descent on a re-grant will be regulated according to its original nature and the family usage unless the contrary is proved. A re-grant is presumed to be given on the old conditions and remains subject to the same incidents of descent. Baboo Beer Pertab v. Maharaja Rajender Pertab (1).

Further the said estates formed the appanage of the Raja of Deur. "Lands attached to Deur". in the grants have been wrongly construed by the Courts below as meaning the taluka of Deur. But there was no such taluk then in existence. The division of the lands into talukas is only for purposes of management. All of them were saranjam lands. If they have been sometimes described as inam that would not change their nature. Inam has several meanings (vide Wilson's Glossary, p. 217). In a popular sense it means a perpetual hereditary grant of land free from revenue. It is a generic word and does not necessarily exclude saranjam. Reference was also made to Shekh Sultan Sani v. Shekh Ajmodin (2), Col. Ethridge's Report of Inam Commission. Krishnarav v. Rangrav (3). The Inam lands were entered as saranjam in register prepared under Act V of 1879, (Bombay). Its original entries were conclusive in favour of the Appellant.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., Mr. Ross and Mr. Gadgil for the Respondent submitted that the Courts below were right in holding that the estates in dispute were partible. The words inam, saranjam, jaghir and vatan have definite meanings and are distinct tenures in Bombay. Inam is heritable grant of land. Saranjam is a grant of revenue and is neither heritable nor alienable. Mouzahs Devi and Jad-Devle were recognized as inam, and the inam village of Jalalpur was also recognised as forming a part of the general estate of the late Raja. Saranjam lands are resumable, but inam lands are not. In the Courts below the case was treated as a case involving the question of a family custom not as one involving a question of difference of tenures. Both Courts have rejected the plea of family usage raised by the Appellant. The sanad gives a title which is thereby made hereditary and as regards the lands it means that the land would not, according to the tenure as it existed before, have been hereditary. In 1874, the Government published a list of saranjams granted. In 1898, an order was issued that the Civil Courts had no power to deal with questions relating to saranjams. The entries on which the Appellant relies have been corrected and as they now stand they are. The lands are inam and the onus of proving impartibility lies upon the Appellant. Reliance was placed on Adrishappa v. Gurushidappa (4), Vinayak Waman v. Gopal Hari (5). A grant to a man and his heirs will descend under the ordinary rules of succession. It is a grant of absolute estate and is alienable. Mutta Vaduganadha v. Dorasinga Tevar (6), Gopal Hari v. Ramakant (7). The "lands of Deur" or "lands attached to Deur" do not include the lands in dispute. They could not cover lands outside the Satara District. The lands in the other districts of Poona, Sholapur and Ahmednagar do not form part of the appanage of the title "Raja of Deur." (Aitchison's Collections of Treaties, &c., Vol. 5, p. 78 and Vol. 3, pp. 93-4). The mutation proceedings also show that in 1882, the lands in Satara District were entered in the name of Appellant alone, and the rest in the names of the Appellant and the Respondent. As to the construction of sanads granting jaghir, reference was made to Gulabdas v. Collector of Surat (8), Ram Chandra v. Venkatrao (9). Baden-Powell's Land Revenue Systems of India, Vol. 3, p. 299.

Mr. Brown replied.

[Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., during the argument applied for leave to refer to certain Parliamentary papers published by order of the House of Commons in 1864. Their Lordships refused it, remarking that having been published in 1864, they were available to the parties if they contained anything bearing on the case.]

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by.

LORD SHAW.—This Appeal is made against a Decree of the High Court of Justice at Bombay, dated the 14th November 1907, which affirmed a Decree of the Subordinate Court of Poona, dated the 7th December 1904. The Plaintiff (Respondent) and the Defendant (Appellant) are brothers. The main object of the suit is contained in the first prayer of the Plaint, and is to have it declared that the whole of the immoveable and moveable estate mentioned in the schedule annexed to the Plaint belongs to these two brothers as equal owners thereof. The elder brother, the Defendant-Appellant, is Rajah of Deur. And the claim is resisted by him upon the ground that the various properties referred to had been succeeded to by him, under the law of primogeniture, as an appanage to the title of Rajah conferred upon him by a sanad issued under the hand of the Governor-General, Earl Canning, in the year 1862.

The properties are situated in the Districts of Poona, Ahmednagar, Satara, and Sholapur, all in the Presidency of Bombay. They include five mouzas or villages, together with various vatans, hakks, and cash allowances, set forth in the schedule. It was matter of agreement in the High Court that the main question in the case should be treated as one applicable to the villages or mouzas, and that when the question of impartibility or impartibility should be settled in regard to them, the remaining items in the schedule should follow that decision.

Of the mouzas mentioned, that of Deur is situated in Satara. In the course of the proceedings it has been admitted that the property in the Satara District is an appanage of the title of the Rajah of Deur, is impartible, and is succeeded to along with the title and position of Rajah accordingly, that is to say, by the rule of primogeniture. It is submitted by the Appellant that the same result should have followed with regard to the rest of the properties in dispute. The question in the case is whether that submission is correct.

The whole of the properties are, as stated, within the Bombay Presidency. This fact throws light upon the construction of many of the official minutes, despatches, entries and others, referred to in the case, and appears to be one of cogency. It can hardly be denied that the language used in all these official documents for a period of about fifty years is at least ex facie language applicable to the possessions of the Rajah in the Bombay Presidency as a whole.

Points of great historical interest are naturally suggested by a review of the pedigree put in by the parties. The records of the Bhonsle family—the Rajahs of Nagpur—are bound up during a long period of time with many stirring adventures and achievements in the course of the Maratha ascendancy and its decline. The position of the family was one of great note from the middle of the 17th, and during the whole course of the 18th, and the first half of the 19th, centuries. The possessions of these Rajahs were extensive, stretching throughout many portions of the Central Provinces, the North-West Provinces and Berar, as well as of the Bombay Presidency.

The last of the Rajahs of Nagpur, Raghoji III, held the title, estates, rights from the year 1817 till his death in 1853.

The forfeiture of 1818 followed by the treaty and free gift of 1826 need not be referred to, the facts of ownership and possession being substantially as stated. He died without issue. He himself was an adoptive son of one Pursoji Bhonsle, and with his death in these circumstances the Bhonsle dynasty of Nagpur came to an end. It is an admission of parties that in that year title of Rajah of Nagpur lapsed and that the estates and rights of the deceased Raghoji III fell to the British Government.

The widows of Raghoji, however, adopted Janoji in the year 1855. He survived till 1881, leaving behind him the two sons who are contestants in the present case.

During the Mutiny of 1857 a female member of the family, the Rani Baka Bai, appears to have powerfully and loyally assisted the British cause and to have rendered services worthy of official recognition. She was the widow of a former Rajah of Nagpur, namely, Raghoji II, and she was anxious for the continuance in the family of the title of Rajah and the attachment to it of such property as would mark and maintain its dignity. The Government of the day declined to restore the Nagpur title, but was willing to create—by sanad issuing from the Governor-General—a fresh Rajaship. The title pitched upon was derived from Deur, a small village in the Satara District of the Bombay Provinces. It is manifest from the official documents issued that it was one of the objects of the Government to make such a provision—in land and revenues accompanying the title—as, though small and unimportant if viewed relatively to the ancient Nagpur possessions, would still be sufficient to gratify, so far, the desire of Baka Bai, and to support in becoming dignity the newly created title.

SHRIMANT RAJE BAHADUR RAGHOJIRAO SAHEB v. SHRIMANT RAJE LAKSHMANRAO SAHEB.

. It is accordingly important to note what were the exact terms of the sanad under the hand of Earl Canning, Governor-General. It is dated the 10th October 1861. The Subordinate Judge of Poona has closely examined it and the translations. As stated by the learned Judge, it is written in Urdu, and its text is as follows, it being super-signed by Lord Canning and bearing the seal of the Government of India :—

"Sanad granted by His Excellency the Viceroy and the Governor General of India in Council to Raja Janoji Bhonsle Bahadur conferring upon him the title of Raja Bahadur of Deur.

Whereas it has been proved and verified that Maharani Baka Bai Saheb was loyal towards the noble British Government and the good behaviour and loyalty of that family during the Mutiny has been proved and verified; in recognition thereof the title of Raja Bahadur of Deur together with the lands attached to Deur has been conferred upon and given on this auspicious occasion, to that Meherban himself and his heirs in succession whether begotten or adopted in perpetuity and the sanad thereof has been executed. It must be deemed incumbent that in return of this gift and kindness you will always remain loyal to the noble British Government and you will look upon this sanad a perfect one."

The point of the case is : What meaning is to be given to the words "lands attached to Deur" ? Are these lands limited to the village of Deur itself ? Or do they extend to the possessions in the Satara District ? Or do they cover the possessions as a whole which lay within the Presidency of Bombay ?

Neither party to the case maintains that the grant should be confined to the lands in the village of Deur alone; and it is conceded by the Respondent, that other lands in the Satara District must be held to be included. This concession is perfectly reasonable, for otherwise the lands attached to Deur, if confined to the village of Deur itself, would reduce the maintenance of the dignity of the Rajah almost to a shadow.

But the mere inclusion of all the Satara lands also reaches a very inconsiderable total. These lands are worth over Rs. 3,000 per annum. The villages, lands, and others, in the whole of the Bombay Presidency, mentioned in the Plaint, yield a total revenue of over Rs. 12,000 and it would appear from this, that if all these lands were dealt with as lands which were attached to Deur by the sanad, they would form taken together a fund for the maintenance of the dignity of the Rajah which could not be said to be over ample. But if the lands attached to Deur are confined to those in the Satara District alone, then the result of such a construction of the sanad is to set up this Rajah with an appanage of about Rs. 3,000 per annum for the support of dignity and title. Their Lordships are not surprised to learn that during all the years since the sanad, in many of which the Court of Wards have had possession, and in all of which the Government have had cognizance of the facts, no one apparently until the institution of this suit ever thought of maintaining that the possessions attached to the position of Rajah were of the slender proportions described. Upon the contrary, they have throughout been dealt with as those within the Bombay Presidency at large.

As mentioned, the properties of the former Rajahs were situated not only in the Bombay Presidency, in which their extent was very limited, but in the Central Provinces and Berar. A large donation or stipend of Rs. 1,20,000 per annum was enjoyed by the late Rajah Janoji at the time of his death. After that event, in 1881, the Government of the day had to consider the question of the allowances to be made to his successors, namely, his two sons. A pension amounting to Rs. 90,000 was fixed, and in the despatch of the 10th February 1882, by the Assistant Secretary to the Chief Commissioner, the grounds are explained of the distribution of this pension. "The two sons," it is said, "will succeed to the landed property of the late Rajah in the Central Provinces and Berar, and to the personalty in equal shares. This is in accordance with the Hindu law and Maratha custom. The elder son will succeed to the title of 'Rajah of Deur and to the estate in the Bombay Presidency, which goes with that title. The value of this estate is, however, comparatively small, the bulk of the landed property of the late Rajah being situated in the Central Provinces and Berar. There will not, therefore, be much difference in the private income of the two sons should they hereafter separate." This passage is quoted as an indication of the view which is repeatedly exhibited in the documents with regard to the attitude of the Government, from whom the grant by way of sanad proceeded. This interpretation was undoubtedly that the Rajah of Deur should take the estates in the Bombay Presidency, which were comparatively small, as an appanage of the title; that these should accordingly follow the rule of primogeniture; whereas the larger and more important estates in the Central Provinces and Berar should be partible equally between the two sons.

Contemporanea expositio as a guide to the interpretation of documents is often accompanied with danger, and great care must be taken in its application. But in the present case their Lordships do not feel themselves able to reject the assistance which it affords. The sanad upon which these important rights are founded is a document of a general and informal character. It admittedly is capable of a variety of constructions. The extreme literal construction—its confinement to the single village of Deur—is adopted by neither party. And when the ambiguity covers the geographical and pecuniary extent of an admittedly ambiguous grant, their Lordships think it legitimate to observe what was the footing upon which the grantors, namely, the Government and its successors and officials, from the date of the grant and for a long period of time, proceeded.

It may be pointed out that since 1881, namely, since the death of Janoji, the question of partibility was, of course, practically and sharply raised, and the fact is that the whole of income derived from the estates in the Bombay Presidency, amounting to about Rs. 12,000 per annum, has been uniformly treated as the exclusive income of the elder son, namely, the present Appellant. This was done both while he and his brother were wards in the Court of Wards and at other times. That Court managed the possessions of the Appellant until he came of age in 1893. Again in 1895 the Court of Wards re-entered, by request of the Rajah, into possession and management for a time. In 1899 the younger brother came of age, the property in the Central Provinces and Berar was divided equally, and the Bombay estate was treated as impartible and continued with the Rajah as an appanage of the title. In the opinion of their Lordships, this throughout was a correct course; and the present suit, the object of which is to diverge from that course, is not in accordance with the rights of parties.

In one view, what has been said might appear to be sufficient for the disposal of this case. But in the judgments of the learned Judges of the Courts below, and in the arguments addressed to their Lordships, further considerations were urged as assisting towards a conclusion and falling to be dealt with. There can be little doubt that the whole of the lands in issue were originally Jaghir lands, and the legal position of such property quoad succession, and the competency or incompetency of assisting the construction of the sanad of 1862 by such considerations, were much discussed. There are three points with reference to the position of property such as that now in suit which stand logically clear of each other, and with regard to which there has been a certain element of confusion. These three points are, first, was the land impartible? Secondly, did the law of hereditary succession apply to it? And, thirdly, was it subject to the law of primogeniture?

The Subordinate Judge, after referring to the fact that some of the villages are referred to as Jaghirs in the old records, is of opinion that "that fact per se is not sufficient to make them impartible." If this be stated as a conclusion with regard to the Jaghir tenure in general, their Lordships cannot agree with it; but upon the contrary, they are of opinion that the following statement in the judgment of the High Court is correct, namely, "The grants were manifestly grants in Jaghir of the ordinary character, that is to say, they were personal and not hereditary, and were resumable at pleasure. Being personal and temporary, they were "necessarily impartible." This accurately distinguishes between partibility as such, and any consequence, whether in the direction of hereditary or primogenital succession, which may be supposed to flow from such a fact. The impartibility of Jaghir lands is in truth entirely separated from the idea of succession by the fact that the impartible lands were held together as a unit in the hands of one man who was rendering personal service to the Government of the day. It may be that upon his death a fresh grant, again to one man, and again in return for personal service, was made; and it may also be that the one man selected was in the ordinary case the eldest son; but these matters of practice were not consequences of law, and the impartibility and unity which attached to personal service was not related to, but, on the contrary, was distinct from, the idea of succession by force of law to the impartible lands.

It is at this point that the case appears to have been confused and encumbered by a plea put forward by the Appellant to the effect that the lands in question were not only impartible and hereditary, but were, by custom, subject to the law of primogeniture. Once grant that the lands were Jaghir and impartible as such, a custom of the kind alleged was not a subject for proof, because such a custom would have been radically inconsistent with the personal and non-transmissive character of a grant in Jaghir. Their Lordships agree in holding with the Courts below that this case accordingly cannot be decided on the custom alleged.

All that remains on this issue, consequently, is the fact that prior to the grant by Earl Canning the lands had been formerly Jaghir. But this term implied no grant of the soil, but a personal grant only of the revenue to the grantee. The Marathi equivalent to the term Jaghir, namely, saranjam, came in course of time to be applied to the lands; and no doubt it was also a fact in the history of the property that the senior living male of the family had in the ordinary case succeeded to it.

In those circumstances, it is interesting to observe what was the delivery order issued with reference to the lands which were the subject of the sanad. This forms a not unimportant item to that contemporanea expositio to which reference has been made. Much importance—and, in their Lordships' opinion, too much importance—has been attached in the judgments of the Courts below to the distinction between the term inam and saranjam. The importance has reached this point that the learned Judges treat the lands of Satara as referred to in one or two of the documents as saranjam, by way, as they apprehend, of distinction from the other lands which are treated as inam. In their Lordships' view, the terms are not mutually exclusive in the sense indicated. The latter term, namely, inam, is one of mere generic significance, applicable to a Government grant as a whole. But in the next place it is a very striking fact in this case that in the initial delivery order now being referred to (as indeed in many of the subsequent documents) the rights in the Bombay Presidency are dealt with comprehensively and as covered, not by one name, but by all, or at least many, of the names applicable to land and revenue rights. In the Mamlatdar's order, for instance, of the 19th March 1862, applicable to the village of Mouje Devi Nimbgay, one of the properties in Ahmednagar, the matter is treated of in this way. The village "is a jaghir to the Bhonsles and as a village was placed under japti (attachment); the revenue of the same was received for being credited in Government records." Then follows the definite statement:—"But the vatan, inam, saranjam, hakks, &c. . . . have been entered in the name of Janoji . . ." Therefore certain definite orders are given pursuant to the Government Resolution, "directing the said village, vatan, &c., to be delivered" into the charge of Janoji's managers. It would therefore accordingly appear that the term saranjam was not in point of fact confined to the lands of Satara. This ground of the judgments of the Courts below accordingly disappears.

A matter of much significance must now be dealt with. On the death of Janoji in 1881 the question of partibility or impartibility—there being two sons of that Rajah—became matter for definite consideration and regulation. What light is thrown upon the case by the conduct at and after this juncture of the Government, including the Court of Wards, which was charged with the correct distribution of these two sons' shares? Upon this head their Lordships do not conceal that they have viewed with some dissatisfaction the conduct of certain parts of the Plaintiff's case. On the 6th May 1882, an important letter was written by Mr. Lawrie, manager of the estates, to the Deputy Collector, "Satara, Sholapur, Ahmednagar, and Poona." That is to say, this letter was addressed to the persons acting as Collectors in reference to all the estates within the Bombay Presidency which were the subject of issue in this case. He forwards his appointment by the Deputy Commissioner of Nagpur as manager of the estate of the late Rajah's minor sons; and then there follows this passage, or what was supposed to have been this passage, as the document was produced in the suit: "I have the honour to request you to be so good as to cause mutation of names to be made for all villages held by the late Rajah in your collectorate in favour of his two sons,

SHRIMANT RAJE BAHADUR RAGHOJIRAO SAHEB v. SHRIMANT RAJE LAKSHMANRAO SAHEB.

Rajah Raghojeerao Bhonsle (only for Satara) and Laxmanrao in equal shares with my name as manager." So stated, this document would appear to suggest that all the properties except that of Satara were partible; and this would have been an important adminicle of evidence to that effect. The document, however, has a history. It is deponed to in the evidence of the Plaintiff's own witness Abaji Belaji. Interlineations and remarkable alterations occur in the document, and the witness confesses, "I cannot say why and by whose order the words 'only for Satara,' 'two,' the 's' added to the word 'son,' and the words 'and Laxmanrao in equal shares with my name as manager' were written." As the document stands it suits the Plaintiff's case; but it appears to be legitimate, and, indeed, proper and just, to read the document without the doubtful and unexplained interlineations and alterations. So read, the letter is as follows: "I have the honour to request you to be so good as to cause mutation of names to be made for all villages held by the late Rajah in your collectorate in favour of his son Rajah Raghojeerao Bhonsle." The letter is addressed to the Collector, not of Satara alone, but to the Collectors of Satara, Sholapur, Ahmednagar, and Poona, and it would, so read, accordingly appear to demonstrate that at the important time when the administration of the deceased Rajah Janoji's estate was taken up by Government, all the estates in the Bombay Presidency were treated, without exception, as an appanage to the title of Rajah.

It is right that a further reference should be made to a cognate topic. It would rather seem that the learned Judges of the Courts below have been induced to treat as authentic various entries in the Collector's books which were not the entries as originally made, but were entries subject to "correction"; a correction made upon an ex parte application on behalf of the Plaintiff. This application was preferred, and apparently granted, behind the back of the Defendant, and during the course of this present litigation. The date of the suit was the 22nd August 1900, and on the 5th August 1901 a memorial was presented to the Governor in Council at Bombay with the statement: "This is forwarded to the Chief Secretary by letter of the 13th August 1902." It is plain from a perusal of these documents that certain registers, including in particular the registers of the Collector of Ahmednagar, together with certain despatches, had been the subject of investigation on behalf of the Plaintiff, and that that investigation had revealed facts which were considered to be contrary to his interests. The application admits that in these documents the Collector of Ahmednagar had "been directed to treat the villages referred to in the petition as impartible saranjam." Then the letter proceeds: "The villages of Devi Nomgaon, Jat Deola, and Jalalpur, in the Ahmednagar District, were up to 1864 regarded as Inams and Saranjams, and the Deshmukhi and other Hacks as Wattans, as contradistinguished from Saranjams. There was and is no room for asserting that they were ever treated as impartible Saranjams held on political tenure." This remarkable document winds up thus: "In view of the facts and arguments above set forth, you will be pleased to issue orders to correct the Land Revenue Register by expunging that portion of it in which" the villages "are specified as political Saranjams." The facts and arguments here referred to are simply those which have been urged in the present litigation.* The one fact outstanding from the whole of these proceedings is that the argument now preferred, to the effect that the Satara property and that alone was treated as Saranjam, while the other properties were throughout treated as Inam, is contrary to what is admitted to have been the original entries in the books referred to. In these circumstances, it appears to their Lordships to be quite unsafe to place reliance upon a denomination of these lands dependent upon a "correction" which appears, or is alleged, to have been made while the case was sub judice, and upon an ex parte representation. Their Lordships think that the original state of the Records before the so-called corrections were made was that alone to which a Court of Law should have looked. This would at least be the safe and ordinary rule, and there do not appear to be any facts in the present case to ground an exception to it. It is not for their Lordships to pronounce upon the procedure by which such "corrections" of official documents and records can be possible in those districts in circumstances such as are here disclosed.

Various difficulties are presented by reason of expressions which appear in despatches from those in authority in the Central Provinces. In those despatches language is used which would appear to signify that the lands attached to Deur in the Bombay Presidency were the Satara lands alone. The language is not clear, and it had reference to a matter beyond the jurisdiction of the writs. Difficulties also arise with regard to terminology employed in some of the records in which Saranjam is applied to the other districts, Inam to the other districts, ment :—" 2 whereas in others there appears to be an application of both terms to the same lands and in various districts.

Their Lordships, upon the whole, have had little difficulty in coming to the conclusion that too restricted an application has been made by the Courts below of the term "the lands attached to Deur." They think the expression extends to the whole scheduled lands in the Presidency of Bombay. They will humbly advise His Majesty that the judgments of the Courts below should be reversed, that the lands referred to in this suit are impartible, that they are attached as an appanage to the title of the Rajah of Deur, and that the suit should be dismissed with costs here and below.

The Respondent will also pay the costs of a Petition for further documents which was before the Board on the 24th February 1911.

taluk which accrued due after the death of one of the co-shareers therein was brought against his widow and other co-shareers and the decree obtained in the suit was discharged by the other co-shareers :

Held—That a sale of the share of the taluk held by the widow in execution of a decree obtained by her co-shareers in a contribution suit against her did not affect the title of the reversionary heir.

The liability of the widow for the rent in question should be regarded as a personal liability which ought not to be held to attach to the reversion unless and until the landlord proceeded to bring the tenure to sale under the special provisions of the rent law.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Respondent in this Second Appeal sued, as being the reversionary heir of her father after the death in 1898 of her widowed mother Jagadishwari Debya, for a declaration of her title to, and the recovery of possession of, a share in a shikimi taluk. It appears that in 1873 a decree for rent of the taluk was obtained against Jagadishwari and her co-shareers. The latter satisfied the claim, brought a suit for contribution against Jagadishwari, and were given a decree, in execution of which a share of the taluk was sold and purchased on the 20th May 1876, by the Appellant, a Mahomedan. Both the Courts below have decreed the Plaintiff-Respondent's suit, and this appeal is preferred by the Defendant.

The first of the only two points raised on the Appellant's behalf is as to the refusal of the Court of first instance to grant the Appellant an adjournment and direct the issue of a commission for the examination of two ladies to prove that the Respondent's father had adopted a son and that she had consequently been excluded from inheritance.

As to this the facts are these. The issues were first framed on the 17th August 1907, but on the 10th June 1908, an additional issue expressly raising the question of the alleged adoption was added. Witnesses were from time to time summoned, and the case was heard from the 20th to the 26th November. Among the Appellant's witnesses were two members of the family, called to testify to the adoption, but one of these (Aredhan) would not do more than swear that there had been some talk of an adoption, while the other (Shyam Sundar) failed to appear and no steps were taken to enforce his attendance. But on the 26th November one Kali Kumar Chuckerbutty, a pleader connected with the family, who had already been examined by the Respondent as a witness in the case, was once more and at the last moment put into the witness-box by the Appellant to declare that he had heard his mother and the Respondent's sister Rashmoni say that a boy had been adopted; and no sooner was this hearsay statement extracted from him than the Appellant applied for an adjournment and the issue of a commission for the examination of the two ladies. In these circumstances the refusal to accede to the prayer might, we think, be supported on the merits, if this were a regular appeal, it is certainly not arbitrary and incapable of justification, and we are of opinion that it is not open to us, on second appeal, to interfere with the discretion exercised in the matter by the lower Court.

The second point relates to the finding that, in the suit for contribution brought against her, Jagadishwari did not represent her late husband's estate, and consequently the reversioners were not bound by the sale in execution of the decree in that suit. The argument with which we are pressed, is that, as the original liability was one for arrears of rent, to liquidate which the entire tenure might have been sold, the decree for contribution arising directly therefrom should be held to have had the same effect, the sale under it passing not the widow's interest merely, but the taluk. The point is not free from difficulty, but on the whole, we are disposed to think that the view taken by the Courts below is correct and should be affirmed. The authorities on the subject were discussed by this Court in Brojo Lal Sen v. Jiban Krishna Roy (1) and, on appeal to the Privy Council, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee [see Jiban Krishna Roy v. Brojo Lal Sen (2)] expressed concurrence with the view that, where a suit for rent against a Hindu daughter was brought in respect of arrears which had accrued due after her father's death and while she was in enjoyment of the property, the liability for rent should be regarded as her personal liability, and ought not to be held to attach to the reversion unless and until the landlord proceeded to bring the tenure itself to sale under the special provisions of the rent law. It comes to this, indeed, that it does not follow that, because a liability could be made a charge on the estate, it ipso facto ceases to be a personal liability; and thus in Baijun Doobey v. Brij Bhookun Lall (3), it was held by the Privy Council, that the liability of a Hindu widow to pay maintenance to her mother-in-law, though charged on the estate, was personal to her, so that a sale in execution of a decree therefor against her passed only her interest. Here, moreover, there are further difficulties in the Appellant's way: for neither the decree in the rent suit nor the decree in the action for contribution is in, and we are, therefore, in the dark, both as to whether the whole tenure could have been sold in satisfaction of the former, and as to the capacity in which the latter was obtained against Jagadishwari. All that we have to guide us in the matter is the Respondent's sale-certificate, and that refers to "the property of the judgment-debtor, Jagadishwari Debya, widow of Brojo Mohan Mohalnabis," a description which indicates the lady's interest as widow rather than the estate itself. And we cannot help observing in conclusion that the point now taken is really a new one, the nearest approach to it in the Court below being apparently the argument that the circumstances of Jagadishwari Debya were such that the sale in execution of the decree for contribution against her must be regarded as caused by legal necessity and, therefore, binding on the reversioners.

For all these reasons we hold that the contentions raised fail, and the Appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Babus Surendra Chandra Sen. and Lalit Mohan Banerjee for the Appellant.

Babus Upendra Nath Chatterji and Biraj Mohan Majumdar for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

In support of this Appeal, the only point which has been urged on behalf of the Appellant is that the lower Appellate Court erred in law in the view which it took that the suit of the Plaintiff was not barred by limitation. It appears that the property, the subject of the suit, was attached under sec. 146, C. Cr. P., on the 7th March 1899, in consequence of proceedings under sec. 145, Cr. P. C. The property remained under attachment and in charge of the Magistrate till the 26th February 1903. Then the present Appellant, the Defendant No. 18, applied to the Magistrate to be put in possession of the property on the ground that he had purchased the holding of the Defendant No. 1, who was the opponent of the Plaintiff in the proceedings under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., and had been put in symbolical possession by the Civil Court. The Magistrate passed an order in the following terms :—"The paddy having been grown before the Petitioner obtained symbolical possession through Civil Court, he cannot get the paddy this year. As regards the prayer for withdrawing the order under sec. 146, Cr. P. C., this is allowed in view of the report of Babu P. K. Karforma, Deputy Magistrate." The result of the order seems to have been that the Defendant No. 18 was afterwards in possession of the disputed land. The present suit was instituted on the 28th February 1906, and was contested by the Defendant No. 18 alone, who is the Appellant before this Court. He then set up the plea that the suit was barred by limitation under the provisions of Art. 47 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act, inasmuch as it had not been brought within three years from the 26th February 1903, when the order had been passed by the Magistrate. The Court of first instance held that the plea was not maintainable having regard to the decisions of the Madras High Court in the case of Rajah of Venkatagiri v. Isakupalli Subbiah (1), and of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Goswami Ranchor v. Sri Gridhariji (2). There was an appeal to the lower Appellate Court and, before that Court, another point of limitation was raised, namely, that the suit was barred under the provisions of Art. 3 of Sch. III, Part I, of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The lower Appellate Court held that this plea could not be sustained and confirmed the judgment and decree of the Court of first instance.

(1) I. L. R. 28 Mad. 410 (1902)

The Defendant No. 18 has appealed to this Court and, on his behalf, the only point raised is that the lower Courts should have held that the suit was barred by limitation, it not having been brought within six years from the 7th March 1899, the date when the property was attached by the Magistrate. The learned pleader for the Appellant argues that the provisions of Art. 120 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act would apply as held by the Madras High Court and that the limitation would not be governed by Art. 142 or 144 of the same Act. In our opinion, the contention advanced on behalf of the Appellant is not sound. The meaning of the decision of the learned Judges of the Madras High Court is not very clear to us and we are unable to agree in the view taken by them that Art. 120 had any application. In the present case, the Plaintiff brought the suit to recover possession not from his original adversary in the proceedings under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., but from a person who had been placed in possession by the Magistrate by an order passed apparently not in accordance with the provisions of sec. 146, C. Cr. P. At all events, the effect of that order was to deprive the Plaintiff of possession, and, from the date of that order, the Plaintiff had a cause of action to recover possession from the Defendant. The limitation applicable in such a case would be that provided by Art. 142 or Art. 144 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act; and this is the view which was taken by the Allahabad High Court in the case on which the learned Munsif relied. We must, therefore, hold that the lower Courts were right in the view which they took on the question of limitation. The result therefore is that the Appeal is dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing-fee at one gold mohur.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 1693 OF 1909.

BRETT, J.	}	DEBENDRA CHANDRA ROY,
SHARFUDDIN, J.		Defendant No. 1,
1912,		Appellant,
Heard, 27 and		v.

28, June.)		Respondents.

Attestation—Mortgage—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), secs. 59, 100—Executant if may attest so as to bind co-executants—Improperly attested mortgage bond, if operates as a charge.

A party to a document cannot under any circumstances be allowed to sign a document as an attesting witness and a person who has once signed as an executant of a mortgage bond and as one of the persons who were borrowing the money on the bond cannot be allowed to have his position altered from an executant of the bond to that of a witness for the purpose of rendering the document valid as a mortgage against the other executants.

A document which is inoperative as a mortgage by reason of its not being properly attested cannot take effect as creating a charge under sec. 100, Transfer of Property Act.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 12th of August 1909 against the decree of Babu Ram Charan Mallik, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Nadia, dated the 4th of May 1909, modifying the decree of Babu Atul Chandra Ghosh, Munsif, 1st Court at Krishnaghur, dated the 23rd of April 1908.

The facts of the case material to this report will appear from the judgment.

Babu Jatindra Mohan Sen for Babu Siva Prasanna Bhattacharjee for the Appellant.

Babu Girija Prasanna Roy Chowdhuri for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The present Appeal arises out of a suit brought by the Plaintiffs-Respondents to recover a sum of Rs. 522-8 on a registered mortgage bond. The bond in question purported to have been executed by the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2. In the Court of first instance, an objection was taken to the bond on the ground that it did not create a valid mortgage as there was only one attesting witness to the document. It appears that the Defendant No. 2 wrote the bond and that, after writing it, he signed his name as an executant of the bond and afterwards as the writer and as one of the attesting witnesses. The Court of first instance held that this objection was valid and that the document could not have effect as a mortgage. The Munsif, however, was of opinion that, under the provisions of sec. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, the bond could take effect as creating a charge on the property covered by it for the realization of the debt and he, therefore, gave a decree to the Plaintiffs for the recovery of the amount claimed by sale of the property on which he held a charge had been created.

The Defendants appealed to the lower Appellate Court but the Plaintiffs did not file a cross-appeal nor did they put in any cross-objection. On the hearing of the appeal before the lower Appellate Court, however, that Court, after first arriving at a conclusion that the Munsif was wrong in holding that any charge could be held to be created under the provisions of sec. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act and after setting aside the finding of the Munsif on that ground, took up the question which had in fact, been decided against the Plaintiffs and in respect of which there was no appeal to that Court and decided that, though the mortgage bond could not be taken to be valid and operative as against both the executants, still it could be taken as a mortgage bond binding, so far as one-half of the amount of the mortgage debt was concerned, against the Defendant No. 1 because it was possible to treat the Defendant No. 2 not as one of the executants of the bond but as the writer and one of the attesting witnesses to it. On that finding, the lower Appellate Court gave the Plaintiffs a decree in modification of the decree of the Court of first instance for the recovery of one-half of the mortgage-money by sale of one-half of the mortgaged property.

The Defendant No. 1 has appealed to this Court and, in support of the appeal, it has been argued, first, that the lower Appellate Court was not justified in re-opening, in appeal, the question as to the validity of the document as a mortgage, the Court of first instance having decided against its validity and there having been no appeal against that finding of the first Court; and, secondly, that the lower Appellate Court was entirely wrong in the view which it took with regard to that document and in holding that it could be treated as a valid mortgage against the Defendant No. 1 by regarding the Defendant No. 2, one of the executants, not as an executant but as the writer and one of the attesting witnesses to the document. In our opinion, both these grounds are sound. The Subordinate Judge certainly ought not to have re-opened the question which had been decided by the Court of first instance and in respect of which there was no appeal. We also hold that the view which the learned Judge has taken with regard to the document is incorrect. The authorities are clear that a party to a document cannot, under any circumstances, be allowed to sign a document as an attesting witness and a person who has once signed as an executant and—as in the present case—as one of the persons who were borrowing the money on the bond cannot be allowed to have his position altered from an executant of the bond to that of a witness for the purpose of rendering the document valid as a mortgage against the other executant. The authorities in support of this view are to be found in the cases of Seal v. Claridge (1), Pran Nath Sarkar v. Jadu Nath Shaha (2) and Rozguddi Shiekh v. Kali Nath Mukerjee (3). Disagreeing, therefore, with the finding of the lower Appellate Court, we hold that the document on which the suit was brought cannot be held to be valid as against the Defendant No. 1 as a mortgage. The lower Appellate Court held—and we think rightly—that the Court of first instance was wrong in holding that any charge on the property described in the document could be held to be created by the document. Sec. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act expressly states that where immoveable property of one person is by act of parties or by operation of law made security for the payment of money to another and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, the latter person is said to have a charge on the property; and, in this case, there can be no doubt that the document, if valid, amounted to a mortgage. In these circumstances, it is impossible to hold that any charge by it was created on the property. This is indeed the view which was taken by this Court in the case of Rozguddi Sheikh v. Kali Nath Mukerjee (3). The only benefit which the Plaintiffs could derive from the document would be to bring a suit against the persons who had executed it on the basis of the personal covenant contained in the bond. This is in accordance with the view taken by this Court in the case of Tofaluddi Peada v. Mahar Ali Saha (4). Such a suit, however, ought to have been brought within three years from the date when the money was borrowed and, as in the present case it appears that the present suit was not brought till more than five years after the execution of the documents and the date when the loan was taken, the Plaintiffs' claim to recover on the personal covenant is clearly barred. The result, therefore, is that we decree the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and direct that the Plaintiffs' suit be dismissed with costs in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Where the accused were charged and convicted by the Magistrate under sec. 147, I. P. C., and sec. 325 read with sec. 149, I. P. C., and the Sessions Judge in appeal set aside the conviction under sec. 147, I. P. C., and altered the conviction under sec. 325 read with sec. 149, I. P. C., to one under sec. 325, I. P. C.,

(4) I L R. 26 Cal. 78 (1898).

Held—When a person is charged by implication under sec. 149, I. P. C., he cannot be convicted of the substantive offence.

When a Court draws up a charge under sec. 325 read with sec. 149, I. P. C., it clearly intimates to the accused persons that they did not cause grievous hurt to anybody themselves but that they are guilty by implication of such offence inasmuch as somebody else in prosecution of the common object of the riot in which they were engaged did cause such grievous hurt. When these accused persons are acquitted of rioting obviously all the offences which they are said to have committed by implication disappear and the defence cannot be called upon to answer to the specific act of causing grievous hurt simply because it may have appeared in the evidence.

Sec. 34, I. P. C., can only come into operation when there is a substantive charge.

The considerations which govern sec. 34, I. P. C., are entirely different from and in many respects the opposite of those which govern sec. 149, I. P. C.

This was a Rule issued on the 27th of May 1912 against the order of Syed M. Chainuddin, Esq., Deputy Magistrate of Rungpur, dated the 12th of April 1912, which order was, on appeal, modified by Babu Raj Krishna Banerjee, Sessions Judge of that district, dated the 13th of May 1912.

The facts of the case will appear from the following portion of the judgment of the Sessions Judge—"The five Appellants who were in ambush attacked the complainant on a public road. The Appellant Reaz caught hold of the complainant's neck and threw him down on the ground. Reaz, Khoaz and the Appellant Tamiz beat him and Khoaz broke his 8th right rib with a kick. The other two Appellants were standing close by with lathis in their hands."

The accused were charged under secs. 147 and 325 read with 149, I. P. C., and the Deputy Magistrate convicted them under those sections and sentenced them each to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three months. On Appeal the Sessions Judge set aside the conviction under sec. 147, I. P. C., and altered the conviction under sec. 325 read with sec. 149, I. P. C.; to one under sec. 325, I. P. C. The accused moved the High Court and obtained a Rule.

Babu Monmatha Nath Mukherjee for the Petitioners.

Babu Brojendra Nath Chatterjee for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

We are clearly of opinion that this Rule must be made absolute and a retrial ordered upon the ground on which it was issued. When a Court draws up a charge under sec. 325 read with sec. 149 it clearly intimates to the accused persons that they did not cause grievous hurt to anybody themselves, but that they are guilty by implication of such offence, inasmuch as somebody else in prosecution of, the common object of the riot in which they were engaged did cause such grievous hurt. Now when these persons are acquitted of rioting obviously all the offences which they are said to have committed by implication disappear, and the defence cannot be called upon to answer to the specific act of causing grievous hurt merely because it may have appeared in the evidence; for the Court having already declared by its charge that they did not commit a specific act and not having given effect to the evidence for the prosecution by framing a fresh charge the defence would not be justified in wasting the time of the Court in defending themselves on a charge which had never been brought against them. This will be perfectly clear if the offence disclosed by the evidence was the heinous one of murder and the Court framed no charge of murder, but went on with the charge of rioting; obviously in that case the accused could not be called upon to defend themselves on the charge of murder; for it is only in the Sessions Court that the said charge can be tried. The Magistrate appeals to the provisions of sec. 34; but sec. 34 can only come into operation when there is a substantive charge of causing grievous hurt. The considerations which govern sec. 34 are entirely different and in many respects the opposite of those which govern sec. 149, and it is now settled law that when a person is charged by implication under sec. 149, he cannot be convicted of the substantive offence.

The present conviction therefore is bad and must be set aside and the accused must be retried on the substantive charge under sec. 325. They will remain on the same bail pending their retrial.

Rule made absolute.

power of, to order further enquiry after discharge
—House search by Police officer—General search —Search for specific article—Criminal trespass—Right of private defence—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), secs. 97, 99.

Every person has a right subject to the restrictions contained in sec. 99 of the Indian Penal Code to defend property, whether moveable or immoveable, of himself or of any other person against any act which is an offence falling within the definition of criminal trespass.

The law does not empower a police-officer to search an accused person's house for anything but the specific articles which have been or can be made the subject of summons or warrant to produce. A general search for stolen property is not authorised and the law cannot be got over by using such an expression as "stolen property relevant to the case" as the law requires the mention of specific things.

Where one of the accused in resisting such a search pushed the Sub-Inspector and the latter ordered two constables to climb on his roof and break into the house whereupon the villagers assumed a threatening attitude and threatened to cut them to pieces if they entered the house and this empty threat was sufficient to prevent the Police from committing the trespass:

Held—That the accused had not exceeded the right of private defence and were rightly discharged and there was no ground for further enquiry.

This was a Rule granted on the 18th of September 1911 against an order of further enquiry into the case passed by Mr. A. H. Bentinck, Deputy Commissioner of Dibrugarh, on the 30th of August 1911.

The facts of the case as stated below are taken from the judgment of the trying Magistrate. On 25th May last Sub-Inspector Abdul Hamid of Sudder Thana with another Sub-Inspector and a force of nine constables went to the Dehing Khamti village to search the house of certain Khamti in connection with a burglary case instituted by one Benuhunsahuan. On arrival at the village the Sub-Inspector called the Gaonbura and proceeded to search the house of accused Prankhang first. Prankhang was told through the Gaonbura that it was suspected that there were stolen property and an unlicensed gun in his house and so it would be searched. Prankhang refused to allow the search alleging that a child had been born in the house two days previously and he would not allow anybody in (as that would disturb his wife.) The Sub-Inspector insisted and expressed his determination to make the search but Prankhang did not yield. Some thirty-two Khamties assembled at the place by and by, of whom two of them were said to have had daos in their hands and they were all said to have threatened the Police officers that they would cut them to pieces if they entered their houses. Some 18 or 19 displayed a fighting attitude. The Sub-Inspector ordered two constables to get up to the chang house, they were pushed by Prankhang and the others, showed an attitude to attack and assault the constables and uttered threats also. So the Police retired and returning to the Thana the Sub-Inspector reported the matter to his superiors who taking action on it sent up the eight accused under secs. 143 and 353, I. P. C. The seven accused besides Prankhang were said to be those who took an active part in the obstruction to the search. The Sub-Inspector was not provided with any search warrant and evidently thought himself empowered to conduct the search under sec. 165, Cr. P. C. The trying Magistrate relying on Baij-rangi Gope v. The King-Emperor (1) discharged the accused. The Deputy Commissioner therefore relying on the opinion of the Legal Remembrancer E. B. and Assam ordered a further enquiry.

Mr. Bardalai for the Petitioners.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This was a Rule calling upon the Deputy Commissioner of Dibrugarh to shew cause why the order directing further enquiry into this case should not be set aside on the ground that the order of discharge was correct in law and could not be impugned in view of the ruling in Baij-rangi Gope v. The King-Emperor (1).

The learned Counsel who appears to show cause does not attempt to support the order on the ground taken by the learned Magistrate, that the point of law laid down in that Ruling should be reconsidered. He takes a new point that whatever right of private defence the Petitioner Prankhang may have had, his neighbours could have had no right to assemble and attack the Police, and he bases his contention on some remarks in this very judgment in the case of Baij-rangi Gope v. The King-Emperor (1). There we said :—"The search was therefore not a legal search and two at any rate of the Petitioners who were the part-owners and occupiers of the house had the right of private defence. The common object of the riot therefore failed and the conviction under sec. 147 was also bad. But we see no reason to disturb the conviction under sec. 323. There was no justification for calling on the neighbours to beat the Police after they had gone out of the hut, and we uphold that part of the conviction." These remarks are no warrant whatever for holding that the neighbours in this case had not a right of private defence as laid down in sec. 97. Every person has a right subject to the restrictions contained in sec. 99 to defend property, whether moveable or immoveable of himself or of any other person, against any act which is an offence falling within the definition of criminal trespass. Now what was found in the evidence here is that Prankhang in the exercise of his right of private defence pushed the Sub-Inspector, thereupon the Sub-Inspector ordered two constables to climb on his roof and break into the house; whereupon the villagers assumed a threatening attitude and threatened to cut them to pieces if they entered the house. They were therefore engaged in defending the property of another from an act which amounted to criminal trespass. Of course if they had executed their threat and had cut the constables to pieces they would not have been able to plead that they were not exceeding that right. But as a matter of fact the empty threat appears to have been quite sufficient and no further damage was done. We therefore think on the ground urged by the learned Counsel, which is of course a ground on the merits, that there is no case for further enquiry.

As regards the ground of law upon which further enquiry appears to have been ordered, we find that the learned Magistrate acted upon an erroneous opinion tendered to him by the Legal Remembrancer of the Eastern Province,

REPORTS (See Index.)

THE JUDGMENT OF MR. JUSTICE MOOKERJEE in the case of Rajendra Narain Singh is a very sound and well-balanced pronouncement which shows clearly how the requirements of the law had been overlooked by the District and the Sub-Divisional Magistrates in this case. We do not at all find fault with either the Sub-Divisional or the District Magistrate for their attempt to protect the tenantry against alleged acts of oppression of a zemindar. In fact it is part of their duty to protect the poor and weak against the rich and powerful. What we object to, however, is that even for such purposes the Police and the Magistrates in this country should not abuse the powers conferred on them by law or misuse the legal processes for even laudable purposes.

WE GATHER FROM THE FACTS SET OUT IN MR. Justice Mookerjee's judgment, that proceedings under sec. 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure were contemplated against Rajendra Narain Singh early in 1908, and with that view over 200 witnesses were examined. Since these proceedings were dropped in consequence of Rajendra Narain's appointing a European Manager, we are convinced that Mr. Justice Mookerjee is absolutely right in regarding the evidence then collected as irrelevant to the present proceedings which were started towards the end of 1911. His Lordship with great justice observes that when Rajendra Singh has been treated as a respectable gentleman for over three years since 1908, no proceedings under sec. 110 would be good unless they were based upon fresh and sufficient materials. It is settled law that even if Rajendra Narain had been bound down under sec. 110 in 1908 for three years, the maximum period provided under law, no fresh proceedings could be started against him or fresh order made on the old materials.

WHERE THE MAGISTRATES ERRED WAS IN HOLDING proceedings under sec. 110 in terrorem over Rajendra Singh for getting him to place his estate under approved European management. This points to a clear abuse of their executive and judicial powers as conferred on them by the Code of Criminal Procedure. That Rajendra Singh interfered with the management of a European manager who had been appointed with the approval of the District Magistrate or appointed another Manager whose appointment was not approved by the Magistrate, were surely not sufficient grounds for reviving proceedings against him under sec. 110. The fact that only three cases of no particular gravity, all of which had been compromised, were made the basis of fresh proceedings, goes also to strengthen the conclusion that the criminal law had been improperly set in motion against a proprietor for compelling him to accept official control over the management of his estate.

THE FACTS OF THIS CASE AS ALSO OF OTHERS noticed by us recently go to show that even Magistrates of considerable experience are prone to misuse their executive and judicial powers under the present system and strengthen our belief that the separation of the judicial and executive functions is urgently called for. We do not in this particular case question at all the good intentions of the Magistrates concerned. On the contrary we are disposed to think that they acted with consideration towards Rajendra Singh in dropping the proceedings under sec. 110 against him in 1908. What we object to is not their motives but their methods. If they were convinced that Rajendra Singh was a desperate and dangerous character, they should have proceeded with the sec. 110 proceedings initiated against him in 1908. If Rajendra Singh had been guilty of any grave offences, he ought to have been prosecuted for them. But to keep criminal proceedings hanging over a man for years surely amounts to harassment which has no sanction either in law or morality. In fact, in attempting to protect the tenants against alleged acts of oppression by zemindars, the acts of the officers concerned against the latter amounted to no better.

A VERY UGLY FEATURE OF THIS CASE IS THAT the officials concerned displayed a singular want of discretion and common wisdom in embodying or causing to be published in the Official Gazetteer and the Administration Reports remarks concerning individuals which are damaging alike to themselves and the persons concerned. For instance, it is stated in one of these Official Reports concerning Babu Rash Behari Mondal that "he was forced through the knowledge that he could not escape conviction for forgery to apply to be declared a disqualified proprietor." It passes our legal conception how admissions like these can be made by responsible officials without realizing their gravity and statements like these can find place in publications intended to be read by the public. There can be no more damaging confession of official coercion having being practised on individuals to force them to come to terms or act according to official wishes. In utter disregard of law or propriety it is equally foolishly stated that "Babu Rajendra Narain Singh of Koriaputti through fear of future similar cases against him voluntarily appointed a very able European Manager and cut himself off from all the management." We hope the Government will take steps not merely to put down such official methods but also to prevent such scandalous matters finding place in official reports and conveying the impression to the world at large that such practices have the sanction of Government.

THE APPARENTLY SMALL CHANGE WHICH has been introduced by the Indian Divorce Act Amendment Bill which has just been passed into law involves an important question of principle for which we cannot but regret that the matter was allowed to pass with a most inadequate discussion. The amendment extends the application of the Indian Divorce Act to all Christians provided they were Christians at the date of the occurrence on which the application is based. So that, no matter by what law the marriage might have been originally celebrated, it would now be capable of being dissolved provided the parties are Christians at the date of, say, the alleged adultery. The Statement of Objects and Reasons leaves one in no doubt as to the aim and object of this amendment. It seeks to remove all barriers to the dissolution of marriage of Christian converts who had been married according to Hindu rites.

WE HAVE EVERY DESIRE TO SYMPATHISE WITH Christian converts who desire to free themselves from the restrictions of a system of laws based on ideas and feelings which have ceased to influence them. But the question is whether it would be right on principle and workable in practice to permit them to introduce into their marriage relation incidents and obligations which were foreign to that relation when first contracted. On this point we have grave doubts, not from the point of view of Hindu law or Hindu society which has no manner of interest in the change, but from the point of view of the legal position of Christian converts of both sexes with reference to their marital relation.

A HINDU MARRIAGE IS INDISSOLUBLE AND THE Madras High Court has held that the marriage could not be dissolved even when the parties subsequently became Christians. [I. L. R. 17 Mad 235]. The Calcutta High Court has held the contrary view in Gobardhan v. Jasodamani, I. L. R. 18 Cal. 232. According to principles which ought to regulate the marital rights and which may now be taken to have been settled by the decision in De Nicols v. Curtler [(1900) A. C. 21], the matrimonial personal law of the parties ought to regulate all incidents of marriage. And where a husband or wife gets rights by marriage they cannot be altered by a subsequent change of the personal law either by change of domicile or change of religion. If this is a sound principle, the decision of the Calcutta High Court as well as the proposed amendment would seem to be against it.

IT MAY NO DOUBT BE SAID THAT De Nicols v. Curtler was not a case on divorce, but it is hardly possible that the House of Lords would have come to any different conclusion if the question had been about granting divorce to parties who by the law of matrimonial domicile were bound in an indissoluble marriage. [See per Eldon L. C. in Tovey v. Lindsay, 1 Dow 117, 131, 140]. The decisions in Niboyet v. Niboyet, 4 P. D. (C. A.) 1, 9 and Le Mesurier v. Le Mesurier do not really touch this question and the effect of these decisions taken along with De Nicols v. Curlier would seem to be that while the forum domicilii would undoubtedly have jurisdiction to grant divorce, the grant would be subject to limitations imposed by the law of the matrimonial domicil.

THE PRINCIPLE IN De Nicols v. Curlier is certainly applicable to the present question. For, by marriage a Hindu wife becomes, on a proper interpretation of Hindu law texts, a co-owner with the husband of all his properties although she may have no rights of disposal. Although this right of community has not been clearly recognised by British Indian Courts this much at least is clear that by marriage she gets an indefeasible right to maintenance from the husband which is not liable to be defeated according to recent Bombay decisions even by unchastity. The conversion of the parties to Christianity, which in India would have the same effect as a change of domicil, by changing the personal law, should not be allowed to affect the vested right of the wife. The husband too has got certain indefeasible rights arising out of Hindu marriage which are not identical with those of an Indian Christian husband. The extension of the provisions of the Indian Divorce Act to marriages contracted according to Hindu rites would make such rights terminable though they were indefeasible at the time of the marriage.

THEN AGAIN ONE CANNOT TAKE THE LAW OF divorce entirely by itself. It is a part of a whole body of rules relating to matrimonial relations which are based on the assumption that the marriage is "the voluntary union for life of one man with one woman to the exclusion of others." As Lord Penzance observed in Hyde v. Hyde, L. R. 1 P. & D. 130, the law of marriage and divorce in England—(and of Indian Christians too)—is adapted to the Christian marriage and is wholly inapplicable to polygamy." [See also Warrender v. Warrender, 2 Cl. & F. 531, per Lord Brougham]. It was on this ground that their Lordships refused to dissolve a Mormon marriage although in fact in that case there was no polygamy. Lord Penzance in his judgment points out the obvious inconveniences that would arise if the Matrimonial Court assumed jurisdiction over polygamous marriages.

THUS FOR INSTANCE A CONVERT MAY HAVE more than one wife married according to Hindu rites. What would be the position of the second wife if the matrimonial law of the Hindus is to be regarded as abrogated? Under the Indian Divorce Act under which the principles of the English law are to be applied there would be nothing to prevent the first wife from seeking a divorce from the husband on the ground that the husband was guilty of adultery coupled with bigamy. The idea of two legitimate wives is entirely obnoxious to the idea of Christian marriage and to the English Divorce law and Lord Penzance in Hyde v. Hyde had to cut the Gordian knot by refusing to regard the polygamous marriage as a marriage at all. The difficulties are aggravated when we come to consider the effects of the re-conversion of, say, a divorced Christian woman into Hinduism. She would certainly not be able to marry as a Hindu while her husband is alive. Yet she would be deprived of the right of maintenance from her former husband and, it may be, other property rights. And again what would be the legal position of the parties if both the husband and the wife happened to be reconverted.

WE ARE AFRAID THEREFORE THAT THE AMENDMENT made by the Indian Divorce Bill not only runs counter to recent English precedents but is erroneous in principle and likely to prove on occasions unworkable in practice. It is very much to be regretted that the matter was not more thoroughly gone into before the Bill was passed. A further discussion would at any rate have had the effect of providing adequate safeguards against the difficulties of the situation created by the Bill. In any case we feel that the position of the second wife of a non-monogamous marriage should not have been left a matter for discussion in law Courts.

THERE ARE ONE OR TWO OTHER MATTERS WHICH we should have liked to have seen placed beyond doubt in the Indian Divorce Act. Thus for instance the question of jurisdiction of Indian Courts to grant divorce under the Act is far from clear. Professor Dicey thinks and very properly that under the Act the Indian Courts would have jurisdiction if the parties resided in India. Le Mesurier v. Le Mesurier and Niboyet v. Niboyet, however shows that domicil and not residence alone would furnish the basis for jurisdiction under English law. This conflict may lead to obvious difficulties in the case of a divorce in India of persons domiciled in England though residing in India. The Indian Courts would possibly grant a divorce but, upon the authorities, that divorce cannot be recognised in England and the husband, if he marries again, may be prosecuted in England for bigamy. There is no reason why such contingencies should not be made impossible by a simple change bringing the Indian law on this matter on a line with the present English law. We hope the legislature will yet see their way to provide against these contingencies,

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Genn v. Winkil.
Before LORDS JUSTICES VAUGHAN WILLIAMS,
MOULTON AND BUCKLEY. 17th June 1912.

Sale of goods—Delivery on approval or return—Not returned within reasonable time—Passing of property.

This was an appeal from a decision of Scrutton, J. The Plaintiff's case was that the Defendant came to him and told him that he had a customer for some diamonds which the Plaintiff had for sale. So the Plaintiff gave the diamonds on sale or return. The Defendant subsequently reported that he had sold the diamonds—the Plaintiff made an entry in his books charging the Defendant with the price which he failed to pay. The Plaintiff pressed for payment when the Defendant said that he had entrusted the diamond to a man who lost them. The Plaintiff was insured against loss and so he sued the underwriters who paid him a little money and compromised the action. The Plaintiff now claimed the balance of the cost price from the Defendant who pleaded that the diamonds were given to him for sale on commission and that they were lost without any negligence on his part. The Court below held that the Defendant had adopted the transaction and property in the goods passed to him. Hence this appeal by the Defendant which was dismissed. LORD JUSTICE VAUGHAN WILLIAMS in the course of his judgment said:—

In Kirkham v. Attenborough, [1897] 1 Q. B. 201, Lord Esher has said:—"It is necessary to consider the principles adopted by the Courts and now, unhappily, as I think, codified in the Act, the language of which is unfortunately chosen." He had here to apply the Code and construe it. The particular passage was section 18, rule 4, of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, which ran thus:—"When goods are delivered to the buyer on approval or 'on sale or return' or other similar terms the property therein passes to the buyer: (a) when he signifies his approval or acceptance to the seller or does any other act adopting the transaction; (b) if he does not signify his approval or acceptance to the seller but retains the goods without giving notice of rejection, then, if a time has been fixed for the return of the goods on the expiration of such time, and, if no time has been fixed, on the expiration of a reasonable time. What is a reasonable time is a question of fact." In his judgment the Defendant had done an act adopting the transaction. The question of the intention of a person receiving goods on approval or 'on sale or return' was this, that if there was no time fixed for the return of the goods or if not, so long as a reasonable time for the return of such goods had not expired, his liability was only that of a bailee so that no action lay against him except for negligence, but where there was a fixed time and it had expired it was otherwise. Here there was no fixed time. What happened was this that the Defendant who had received the goods on sale or return transferred them on the same terms to Gutwirth, who had transferred them to a third person. Under those circumstances the Defendant was responsible for the conduct of those who subsequently had possession of the goods through his act.

In those circumstances the Plaintiff called upon the Defendant to return the goods. The Defendant then took up the position that he could not return them because he could not obtain them from the third person. The question therefore was this: Had this state of things resulted from any act of the Defendant? He thought it had, and that it was entirely the Defendant's act that he could not return the goods. That being so, the Defendant placed himself most clearly within the judgments of Lord Esher and Lord Justice Lopes in Kirkham v. Attenborough (supra). He did not read those judgments as limiting the liability of persons who took goods on sale or delivery to cases where there was an intention on their part in their action to adopt the transfer of the goods. It was quite sufficient here that the Defendant had knowingly done an act under which he transferred the goods to Gutwirth, who had then transferred them to a third person, and when called upon to return the goods the Defendant became liable because he did not in fact return them. A reasonable time had elapsed; the Defendant said he could not return them, and he explained it by saying simply that he was not in a position to return them.

Prima facie he was liable because he could not so return them. He had given no explanation and no reasonable excuse for his inability to return the goods.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Dare v. The Bognor Urban District Council. Before LORDS JUSTICES VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, MOULTON AND BUCKLEY. 19th June 1912.

Claim for breach of contract—Implied warranty.

This was an application by way of appeal in an action tried before Avory, J., and a Jury.

The Plaintiff's case was that he entered into a contract with the Defendant which provided that the Plaintiff would provide a band to play on the parade, and that the Defendant would let him 500 chairs for hire in the enclosure.

The Plaintiff complained among other things that the Defendant caused him loss by breaking an implied warranty, namely, that the Plaintiff had the sole right of placing chairs on hire inasmuch as the Defendant put a number of free seats on the parade. The Court below decreed the claim. Hence this Appeal which was allowed. In the course of his judgment LORD JUSTICE VAUGHAN WILLIAMS said:—

It was suggested that the case of Inchbald v. Western Neilgherry Company, 33 L. J., C. P., 15, was an authority for the proposition that, whenever something was done by a grantor which had the effect of preventing or reducing the profits which the grantee reasonably expected to get out of the grant, there was a good cause of action. In his opinion no such proposition could be rightly laid down universally applying to every contract. Each contract must be looked at and considered in itself. By his contract the Plaintiff was entitled to make collections from the public, but not to solicit contributions from any person who had paid for the use of a chair. That went some way to negative the suggested inference. Then they were told that there were a certain number of public seats at the time when the contract was entered into. He did not think that it was a proper inference to draw from the agreement that the parties contemplated that the total number of such seats should remain exactly what it was on that day.

It was true that the jury found that the presence of benches amounted to a substantial interference with the Plaintiff's receipts from the letting of the chairs, but it was consistent with that finding that the takings of the collections were quite as big as any loss arising from a number of the Plaintiff's chairs not being occupied because the public were supplied with seats on benches. He could not draw the inference that the intention of the parties was that not a single additional bench should be supplied for the use of the public free of charge. In his judgment therefore the Court could not imply the negative covenant which had been suggested.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—Houghton and anr. v. Pilkington. Before JUSTICES BRAY AND BANKS. 21st June 1912.

Master's liability for servant's act—Extent of a servant's duty to care for a fellow servant in an emergency.

This was an appeal from the decision of a County Court Judge.

The Defendant was the owner of a milk-round and he employed a man named Heaps to drive a milk-float, and also a boy to help to deliver the milk. During the course of the round, the boy fell out of the float on to the ground and was rendered unconscious. The Plaintiff seeing the accident, went to the boy's assistance. She said to Heaps, "Shall I help you to take him home?" He replied, "You can if you will. Get in." The Plaintiff got into the float and was bending down to put the boy's head to rest on her arm when the float set off and she fell out backwards and sustained injuries.

The County Court Judge held that in the circumstances there was an obligation on the Defendant's servant to secure assistance on behalf of his master; that the Plaintiff was entitled to care on the part of Heaps, and that, there having been a breach of the duty owed, the Defendant was liable. He gave judgment for the Plaintiff for £30.

Hence this Defendant's appeal which was allowed. In the course of his judgment, MR. JUSTICE BRAY said—

In order that the Plaintiff could establish that the Defendant had been negligent she must prove—(1) that he owed a duty to her; and (2) that there had been a breach of such duty. The main argument had been as to whether there was any duty which the Defendant owed to the Plaintiff that his servant should take care. The County Court Judge held that there was an obligation on the Defendant's servant in what constituted an emergency to secure assistance on behalf of his master. The question was whether that was right in law, and whether that duty arose from the circumstances of the present case.

In order to see whether such a duty existed it was necessary to see whether Heaps had authority to invite the Plaintiff to do what she did. Where was that authority, and how was it obtained? It clearly was not in the ordinary course of the servant's employment to ask anybody to ride in the float unless it could be that the law inferred an authority to do so from the emergency which arose. That question was considered in the case of Cox v. Midland Railway Company (3 Ex. 268) and was there decided in favour of the Defendants. In that case there had been an accident and several people were injured, and a servant of the company called in a surgeon and the surgeon brought an action to recover his fees. Whether he had a right of action for them depended on whether the Defendants were bound by the act of their servant in calling in the surgeon. It was said that they were so bound because an emergency had arisen, but the Court held that that was not the case.

The only distinction which could be drawn between that case and the present was that there the servant was apparently binding of seeking to bind his masters by a contract to pay for services, whilst in the present case he gave an invitation which involved the obligation to take care. In either case it was imposing upon the master an obligation, and if, in the case referred to, the Court held that there was no authority in the servant to create the obligation to pay, then he (Mr. Justice Bray) was of opinion that the servant could not create an obligation to take care.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—Lloyds Bank, Ltd. v. Swiss Bankverein and others. Before Mr. JUSTICE HAMILTON. 27th June 1912.

Bill broker's mercantile custom—Who is a bona fide holder for value?

These were two actions in which the Plaintiffs claimed from the Defendants delivery of bearer securities or their value.

On September 15, 1911, there fell due for payment by Edward Hellings & Co., to the Plaintiffs banks two large sums of short money lent against securities; and on the morning of that day Hellings gave to the two banks cheques for the amounts due—cheques which were subsequently dishonoured—and received back from the banks the securities which had been deposited to secure the loans when they were first made. Later in the same day the Defendant bank received from Hellings on two separate occasions, certain of these securities which that firm had received in the morning from the Plaintiffs—namely, at 2 o'clock, securities of the nominal value of £22,000 or thereabouts, and at 3 p.m. securities of the nominal value of about £15,000. The whole of the documents in question in the action were negotiable instruments. The question was, were the Plaintiffs or the Defendants entitled to those securities?

The Plaintiffs claimed that they were bona fide holders for value whose effective retention of the securities had never been determined. The Defendants, on the other hand, contended that from the time the securities passed into Hellings' custody the Plaintiffs had no legal title to them; the Defendants further said that in any case they were themselves bona fide holders for value without notice.

The learned Judge gave judgment for the Defendants which was to the following effect:—

The Plaintiffs said there was a practice of bankers which either had the effect of a custom, or to which the law attached the significance of a trust, under which Hellings, being still in possession of the securities, and his cheques not having been met, held the securities as custodians for the Plaintiffs, no doubt with an authority to negotiate them for value, which authority, however, had not been exercised. As against a bona fide holder for value the Plaintiffs conceded that their rights must go, but they said the practice they set up was universal and its meaning notorious to the Defendants, who had themselves acted upon it that day and must, therefore, have had knowledge of the infirmity of Hellings's title to the securities.

For the Plaintiffs to succeed they must say that the banks were secured up to the very end. That was sought to be made out by saying that the instruments in the hands of the broker were impressed with a trust—that he held them in a fiduciary capacity, and that there was a right to follow the fruits of the trust property. That was a view not taken up by any of the witnesses. They said that what they expected was that the broker should apply the securities in the proper way to meet his cheque, and that if he could not do that he should return the securities, or that he ought to return equivalent securities. That was a very intelligible and natural view. The other view presented by the Defendants' witnesses was that the securities when given up were really given up. . . . To suggest that the broker was invested with the unfamiliar character of a trustee in respect of negotiable instruments seemed a great deal to extract from the handing over of a bundle of documents from one clerk to another. His Lordship was loath to hold that negotiable instrument was impressed with a trust of such a kind unless it was absolutely necessary so to hold, and he could see no necessity for so holding.

There was another point which had not been got over to his satisfaction. A cheque for the full amount of the securities was given in such transactions. What was the cheque for? According to the Plaintiffs' contention, the security was still there, it was still the bank's security, the only change being that it became itinerant instead of stationary. As a matter of fact, the cheque never was negotiated, but still it was in form another negotiable security. It was conditional payment, no one supposed that the loan was paid off finally by handing over the cheque; but still it was a further negotiable instrument. What was it for? The Plaintiffs' theory made it entirely otiose. It was suggested that it was a receipt, but he could not so regard it. It did not in any way identify the instruments handed over.

His Lordship therefore came to the conclusion that it was not the natural or the necessary construction to put upon the transaction that these bonds were impressed with a trust in favour of the Plaintiffs with a right to follow their proceeds. That being so, it followed that as soon as the Plaintiffs parted with their securities they ceased to be able to make any claim to them in this action. The claim of the Plaintiffs therefore failed.

Mr. Astbury at the end of his argument suggested that such a decision would revolutionize the course of business and constrain the banks to borrow one another's money and eliminate the bill-brokers. His Lordship did not share those apprehensions, nor did he think there was any danger of a sudden flight of bill-brokers carrying negotiable securities impressed with a trust to a region where Hallet's Case (1 Ch. D., 696) was unknown. Personally he had no doubt that his judgment, even if affirmed, would produce no convulsions, and would soon be forgotten and forgiven.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Recent decisions not yet reported

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before CARNDUFF and IMAM, JJ. SUPERINTENDENT AND REMEMBRANCER OF LEGAL AFFAIRS v. MOTI LAL GHOSH, EDITOR AND MANAGER, AND T. K. BISWAS, PRINTER and PUBLISHER OF THE Amrita Bazar Patrika. 3rd and 5th September 1912.

Contempt of Court—Newspaper comment on a sub judice case—Comment published after decision of Court on the particular point was intimated to counsel but before passing of formal orders—Apology.

In this case a rule was issued on the application of the Local Government calling on the Respondents "to show cause why they should not be committed to prison or otherwise dealt with for contempt in respect of an article published in the A. B. Patrika in its issue of the 10th August regarding a petition of one Rajendra Narayan Sing."

The facts are these. Criminal revision case No. 865 of 1912: Rajendra Narayan Sing, Petitioner v. The Emperor was heard by Carnduff and Imam, JJ., on the 18th and 19th July 1912 when their Lordships reserved judgment. On the 6th August before judgment was delivered the Advocate-General made an application to the Court for leave to file two affidavits sworn to by Messrs. Lyall and Hammond who had previously been District Magistrates of Bhagalpur and against whom, it was stated, certain allegations had been made in the course of the argument in the aforesaid case. The object of the affidavits was to refute these allegations. The affidavits were filed and their Lordships fixed the 12th August to consider the matter. It was prayed on behalf of the said Rajendra Narayan Sing that the respondents to the said affidavits should be present in Court on that day for cross-examination. On the 9th August their Lordships intimated to counsel on both sides that the affidavits would not be received in evidence. On the 10th August the article in question appeared in the Patrika in which certain observations were made regarding the affidavits of Messrs. Lyall and Hammond and their cross-examination thereon.

On the 12th August the Court passed formal orders regarding the affidavits which were returned. In regard to the case of Rajendra Narayan Sing v. The Emperor, their Lordships differed in opinion and the case was referred to a third Judge.

On the rule coming on for hearing the Respondents through their counsel unreservedly apologised to the Court. The Court accepted the apology and made the Rule absolute, but passed no further orders.

Held by CARNDUFF, J.—The publication of the article constitutes contempt. The article seems to suggest the course that ought to be taken by this Court in dealing with a pending case and to that extent it tends to interfere with the free course of justice.

Held by IMAM, J.—The Respondents committed no contempt of Court inasmuch as a day before the article appeared in the A. B. Patrika in its issue of the 10th August the decision of the Court that the affidavits would not be received in evidence had been intimated to counsel on both sides.

The Rule was made absolute as the parties called upon to show cause did not contest the matter.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before RICHARDSON, J. REV. No. 197 OF 1912. SABARALI MUNSHI, Complainant, Petitioner v. KALI PROSHONYO BOSE, Accused, Opposite Party. 17th September 1912.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 250—Order directing complainant to pay compensation passed subsequent to the order of acquittal of the accused, if legal.

The complainant brought a case, under sec. 441, I. P. C., against the Opposite Party in the Court of the Deputy Magistrate of Munshigunj who by his order, dated the 28th June 1912, acquitted the Opposite Party finding that "it is a false and vexatious case instituted with a view to avoid civil litigation and gain the ends of such litigation by setting the criminal law in motion." In this order, dated the 28th June 1912, there was the following direction—"The complainant Sabarali to show cause why he should not pay compensation (under sec. 250, Cr. P. C.) Rs '50 to accused." Subsequently on the 1st July 1912, the Deputy Magistrate, after hearing the complainant, made an order directing him to pay Rs. 50 as compensation to the Opposite Party.

On the application of the complainant the Additional Sessions Judge of Dacca made a reference under sec. 438, Cr. P. C., to the High Court recommending that the order dated the 1st July should be set aside.

The objection taken by the complainant was that the order awarding compensation was not contained in the order of acquittal, as required by law.

Held—On the authority of Haru Tanti v. Satish Khanara Roy, I. L. R. 38 Cal. 302, that the order under sec. 250, Cr. P. C., was bad in law and it must be set aside.

Babu Norendra Kumar Basu for Babu Surendra Nath Guha with Babu Abani Bhusan Mukherjee for the Opposite Party.

No one appeared in support of the reference.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before STEPHEN and RICHARDSON, JJ. APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES NOS. 2312 AND 3152 OF 1909. GOPI MOHAN SEN AND OTHERS, Defendants, Appellants v. JAMINI KANTA SEN AND OTHERS, Plaintiffs, Respondents. Heard, 10th and 18th April. Judgment, 18th April 1912.

Rent suit—Co-sharer landlord if may bring suit with other co-sharers as Defendants—Refusal of Defendant co-sharers to join if must be positively proved.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 15th of November 1909 against the decree of Babu Nikunja Behari Roy, Additional Subordinate Judge of Zillah Chittagong, dated the 12th of July 1909, modifying the decree of Babu Kumud Bandhu Gupta, Munsif of North Raojan, dated the 14th of December 1908.

These Appeals arose out of two rent suits brought by the same Plaintiff against different Defendants.

The Plaintiff originally based his claim on a title derived from one Munsur Ali. The Defendants contended that the land in dispute was not included within the dar-taluk of Munsur Ali but in that of one Duli Mian. It was found by the lower Appellate Court that these two men held the dar-taluk jointly and that the Plaintiff is accordingly entitled to recover rent on the basis of being an eight annas co-sharer.

Held—That the fact that the Plaintiff had claimed a 16-annas title was no bar to his recovery on the title to the extent to which it was proved without any amendment of the plaint.

On the contention that the Plaintiff ought to have shown by some definite proof that the pro forma Defendants being the co-sharers of the Plaintiff had refused to join him in the plaint and that he could not, without such proof, recover by merely joining the co-sharers as pro forma Defendants (Dwarka Nath Mitter v. Tara Prosanna Roy, I. L. R. 17 Cal. 160), their Lordships observed: "In this case, however, although it does not appear on the findings that there is any specific refusal of the pro forma Defendants to join the Plaintiff, it is pretty plain that they have throughout acted prejudicially to the Plaintiff, having denied the Plaintiff's title. The authority cited does not cover the arguments which is attempted to derive from it."

Babu Monmotha Nath Roy for the Appellants.

Babu D. L. Khastgi for the Respondents.

Appeal dismissed.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before BRETT and C. RNDUFF, JJ. RULE No. 6411 OF 1911. KHANTA RANI DAS, Plaintiff, Petitioner v. JNAN CHANDRA CHATTERJEE, Defendant, Opposite Party. 15th March 1912.

Purdanashin woman—Right to be examined on commission, if forfeited by previous appearance in Court.

In this case the lower Court refused the application of the Petitioner to be examined on commission on the ground that the Plaintiff who claimed to be a purdanashin woman had, on one or two other occasions, appeared in Court. Their Lordships observed: "This point came before the Court for consideration in the cases of Chamatkar Mohini v. Mohesh Chandra, C. W. N. 750, Mohesh Chandra v. Mani Lal, 3 C. W. N. 751, and Probhat Kumari v. Apurba Krishna, 3 C. W. N. 753. In all those cases, it was held that a purdanashin woman did not lose the right given to her under sec. 132 of the Code of Civil Procedure to be examined on commission by reason of the fact that on one or two occasions she had of her own will or from necessity, broken the rule of the purdah."

Their Lordships therefore directed the examination of the Petitioner on commission.

Rule made absolute.

FRANKHANG v. KING-EMPEROR.

That was the sole ground for ordering further proceedings except that he also claims absolute right to order further proceedings in any case under sec. 437, Cr. P. C. The learned Legal Remembrancer apparently was of opinion that the ruling in Baijragi Gope v. The King-Emperor (1), if it intended to lay down that a Police officer is not empowered to search an accused's house for stolen property relevant to the case, is not a correct statement of the law and the learned Magistrate in his explanation refers to the ruling in the well-known case of The Nizam of Hyderabad v. Jacob (2), as supporting this contention. We need hardly point out, as the learned Counsel for the Crown has frankly admitted, that that case has nothing whatever to do with the question now before us, and we desire again to point out that the law does not empower a Police officer to search an accused's house for anything but the specific article which has been or can be made the subject of summons or warrant to produce. A general search for stolen property is not authorized and the law cannot be got over by using such an expression as "stolen property relevant to the case." Such expressions are vague and misleading and the terms of the law are extremely specific. As long as that law is not amended the Police cannot be said to be empowered to make any search not authorized by that law.

We further wish to point out with reference to the Magistrate's opinion that it is open to him to order further proceedings in any case under sec. 437, that that section is limited by the words "on examining any record under sec. 435" and that sec. 435 lays down that a Court may call for and examine any record for the purpose of satisfying itself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed and as to the regularity of any proceedings of such inferior Court. It cannot therefore be said that if a Magistrate finds no illegality, or impropriety or irregularity and nothing incorrect in the proceeding that he is empowered to set aside an order of discharge upon other grounds, or upon no ground at all.

The Rule is made absolute. The order of the lower Court must be discharged and further proceedings against the Petitioners dropped.

Rule made absolute.

IN THE MATTER OF
G. KRISHNASAMI
Appellant.

Professional misconduct—Pleader and client—Vakil's duty in relation to orderly and pure administration of justice—Personal fraud, absence of, if sufficient to acquit Vakil of responsibility—Printing charges paid by client not put in owing to fraud of Vakil's clerk—Dismissal of case for non-payment of printing charges—Vakil's duty to explain circumstances in Court as soon as he had knowledge of them—Permitting dishonest clerk to continue correspondence with client—Professional impropriety—Suspension from practice.

Vakils have the general function, applicable not only to the Bar in general but to solicitors at large, that they must in the conduct of all suits entrusted to them co-operate with the Court in the orderly and pure administration of justice.

(1) 15 C. W. N. 143: I. L. R. 38 Cal. 904:
13 C. L. J. 659 (1910).

(2) I. L. R. 19 Cal. 52 (1891).

IN THE MATTER OF G. KRISHNASAMI AIYAR.

Where certain printing charges which an Appellant in a second appeal was called upon to pay, was paid by him to a clerk of his Vakil, but the amount was not paid in Court, and on the other hand the clerk falsely informed the Appellant that his case was being proceeded with, and when later on the case was listed for dismissal for non-payment of the printing charges, it was dismissed in the Vakil's absence, and the Vakil in an affidavit sworn by him in support of an application made 18 days later for restoration of the appeal admitted that on the day the case was disposed of he had become aware of the fact that the money required to be paid had been paid by the client but had not been applied to the purpose for which it had been paid ;

Held—That in honour and in duty to his client, to himself and to the Court, the Vakil who had already become aware of the circumstances in which the money had not been paid in Court should have attended when the case was called and publicly explained those circumstances and apologised to the Court and expressed his regret.

That the excuse offered by him, viz., that he was engaged elsewhere and could not therefore attend in order to discharge this duty of honour, was insufficient.

That it was his duty, even after this, to have waited until an interval in any procedure of the Court or till the Court was about to adjourn, and to have instantly made his honourable explanation.

That in any case he was honourably bound to inform his client of what had occurred on that day and he was guilty of regrettable conduct in permitting his clerk who was plainly guilty of fraudulent and improper conduct to continue in correspondence with the client in the course of which the latter was falsely informed that the appeal had come on for hearing and been dismissed.

That although the Vakil was not found guilty of direct and personal fraud he could not be acquitted of conduct in the management of the appeal and, of his client's affairs which caused the procedure of the Court to be the very opposite of what all such procedure should be, viz., responsible, orderly, and pure.

That this violation of the proprieties which attach to legal procedure constituted a reasonable cause for his suspension from practice, and an interim suspension for six months as ordered by the High Court was in extent appropriate.

This was an Appeal against an order of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, dated 28th February, 1912, whereby the Appellant was suspended from practice for six months.

The Appellant was a Vakil of the High Court, and had a considerable practice in Madras. The Manager of his office was Luchmiah, whose duties included those of book-keeper and cash keeper. He had also a clerk, Bhashyam, who ordinarily wrote the Tamil letters.

In 1907, the present Appellant was engaged to file a Second Appeal in the High Court against a decree of the District Court of South Arcot. He appears to have accepted the engagement to file and conduct the Second Appeal without a fee for his services in order to oblige certain friends of his family, who were interested in the case. The case was admitted and numbered Second Appeal No. 1045 of 1907, and applications were made in due course for the printing of the pleadings and judgments and certain other papers wanted for the purposes of the Second Appeal.

IN THE MATTER OF G. KRISHNASAMI AIYAR.

On the 13th November, 1907, Lutchmiah received a demand from the Court for payment of Rs. 48, the probable cost of printing the pleadings, &c., in the case, and on the 5th May, 1908, a further demand for Rs. 60 for the other printing charges. Letters were thereupon written to Visvanatha Chetti asking him to remit the monies within the time limited by the Court's demands. Ultimately on or about the 6th January, 1909, he sent by post Rs. 40 on account. The Appellant handed over the Rs. 40 to Lutchmiah, and on the 8th January Bhashyam duly wrote to Visvanatha Chetti acknowledging its receipt. It was alleged that by a mistake on the part of the gomasta the said Rs. 40 was credited in the accounts to another Second Appeal from the same district, viz., South Arcot.

Subsequently Visvanatha Chetti, having been told that the amount was insufficient was sent for and came to Madras, and a Petition supported by an affidavit was put in asking for an extension of the time for payment.

On the 5th March, the case was posted for dismissal for non-payment of the printing charges; the said Petition was then brought before the Court and an order was made whereby the amount demanded for the printing was reduced to Rs. 68, and a fortnight's time was given within which the money was to be paid. On the next day, Visvanatha Chetti at Madras paid Rs. 28 direct to Lutchmiah, who credited him with this payment in the account. Lutchmiah had accordingly in fact received the full amount required to meet the charges in question, but he omitted to pay the amount into Court. And in consequence of the default in payment of the charges the prints were not prepared for the Second Appeal.

On the 26th January, 1910, the Second Appeal was placed in the cause list under Rule 100 of the Rules of the High Court, Appellate Side, for disposal without the printing of the papers in respect of which default had been made in paying the charges. The case was reached a few minutes after the Court sat, and the Appellant not being present it was dismissed for default. On the 28th January Bhashyam wrote to the client a letter stating that the case had been dismissed.

On the 14th February the present Appellant together with another pleader who had been engaged by Visvanatha Chetti to appear with him put in the necessary Petition (Civ. Mis. Pet. No. 498 of 1910) for the restoration of the Second Appeal under Order XLI, Rule 19 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Petition was supported by two affidavits explanatory of the circumstances, one made by the Appellant and the other by Visvanatha Chetti.

The petition came on for hearing in November and December, 1911, and at the hearing some fresh affidavits (including one by the Appellant) and certain other documentary evidence were put in; and on the 3rd January, 1912, judgment was delivered directing that the present Appellant pay all costs of the hearing and the costs of the 26th January, 1910, and that the Second Appeal be thereupon restored to the file.

In the course of the said judgment the learned Judges animadverted on the Appellant's omission to take the earliest opportunity the same day to state to the Bench before whom the case was posted the circumstances which prevented his being present when it came on. They expressed suspicions as to Lutchmiah's accounts, and said that the conduct of both the clerks in writing the letters of July, 1909, and 28th January, 1910, above-mentioned, must be regarded as fraudulent; and referring to the extent to which the Appellant admittedly left the correspondence in the hands of his clerks, they added: "In the eye of the law at least, he is responsible for the fraud perpetrated on his client. No pleader can be permitted to completely abandon to clerks the discharge of his duties to his clients, and, in any event, he must bear the full responsibility for the acts and defaults of his clerks." And later on they observed: "The negligence in the present case is so gross as to amount to fraud, the evidence showing a design on the part of either the Vakil or his clerks to do nothing for the client and to appropriate his money."

After the said judgment had been pronounced the High Court ordered by certain proceedings, dated 3rd January, 1912, that a notice returnable in fourteen days be issued under Letters Patent, sec. 10, to the present Appellant "to show cause why he should not be removed or suspended from practice as a Vakil of the High Court or be otherwise dealt with for his unprofessional conduct in the said Second Appeal," and that a copy of the said judgment should be sent with the notice. This was done. The Advocate-General was requested by the High Court to appear in support of the notice. The case was heard by Sir C. White, C. J., and S. Nair and Ayling, JJ., who delivered their judgment on the 28th February, 1912. In the course of their judgment, they said:—

"According to the Vakil's own case, by a mistake of his clerk moneys paid by the Appellant in S. A. No. 1045 of 1907 were credited to another client and as a result of this mistake the appeal was dismissed for default. The case was posted not on account of any default of the client but on account of a mistake, or something worse than mistake, in the office of the Vakil. In this state of things, the onus was heavy on the Vakil to explain the true state of affairs to the Court and to his client. So far as the Court is concerned he does nothing. His failure to be in Court when the case was called on may have been accidental. But one would have thought in a case where a grave injustice had been done to his client by a mistake in his office of which the Vakil was personally aware, he would have been specially careful to attend and explain how things stood. It was a duty which he owed to the Court. It was a duty which he owed to his client, who had suffered a serious injustice. It was a duty which he owed to himself since the mistake might well give rise to questions involving the personal honesty of the Vakil or his clerks. There may be an explanation of the Vakil's failure to appear. It seems to us there can be no satisfactory explanation of his conduct in not bringing the matter before the Court at the very earliest opportunity. In our opinion, the gravamen of the charge is not that the Vakil failed to appear when the case was called on (this, as we have said, may have been an accident) but that having failed to appear, and the appeal having been dismissed, he did not give a full explanation to the Court at the earliest opportunity. His excuse that he was under the impression that he could not mention the facts till the same Bench sat again seems to us to be idle.

"As regards the client, whatever may have been the practice of the Vakil's office as to allowing his clerks to write letters which did not come before him, the Vakil seems to have entirely misconceived the nature of his duty and responsibilities in not taking steps to see that the real circumstances in which the appeal had been dismissed were brought to the knowledge of his client. He did nothing until the client appeared upon the scene. To make matters worse, the letter of January 28th to which we have referred was written by the clerk Bhashyam. This letter is a deliberate lie. The object with which it was written was obviously to deceive the client and make him think there was nothing more to be done. We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that if this letter had accomplished the object with which it was written, the clerk or the Vakil might have got the benefit of the client's money and nothing more would have been heard of the case. The suggestion that the object of the clerk in writing the letter was to 'gain time' is not worth serious consideration.

"The letters of March 15th, 1909 and January 28th, 1910, were written by Lutchmiah and Bhashyam respectively on paper headed with the Vakil's name and address. The Vakil tells us, in effect, that these letters were written without his knowledge or approval. It was suggested that there was nothing unusual in this. If a practice of Vakils' clerks being allowed to write letters on behalf of their masters without their masters' knowledge really exists, it seems to us that the practice is altogether unbusiness-like. The letter of January 28th, 1910, contains a false statement, a false statement—as it seems to us—made deliberately with a definite object in view. The Vakil cannot protect himself from responsibility by saying he knew nothing about this letter. We must hold him responsible for it. If this letter was in fact written with the Vakil's knowledge and approval the case would be an extremely bad one. We assume, in his favour, that the letter was written without his knowledge. We also assume, in his favour, that what appear to be the obvious alterations in the books made, as it seems to us, with the object of supporting the very doubtful story as to the Rs. 40 having been credited to the wrong Second Appeal by mistake, were made without the knowledge of the Vakil. Then remains the fact that when the appeal was dismissed for default in circumstances which made it the duty of the Vakil to offer a prompt and full explanation to the Court and to his client he did nothing till his client appeared on the scene. He did not write to the client himself. He gave no instructions to his clerk to write. The matter was one of special delicacy and importance and in our opinion it was the duty of the Vakil either to give express instructions to his clerk in the matter or to satisfy himself that any communication which his clerk sent to the client was a true statement. As we have said, the clerk's statement was untrue and we must hold the Vakil responsible for it."

The High Court accordingly made the order of suspension.

Hence this Appeal. *

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Brown for the Appellant submitted that the Appellant was not guilty of any professional or other misconduct. It was not proved that the Appellant's clerks desired to deceive or to cheat the client. At the most there was negligence on the part of the clerks which did not come to the Appellant's knowledge till very late, and the Appellant could not do more under the circumstances to put matters right. It was unfortunate that the Appellant was a little late on the 26th January 1910, to explain the matter to the Court, but the Appellant's affidavits truly explained everything. There was no culpable negligence on the part of the Appellant. The charge was made under sec. 19 of the Letters Patent. No "reasonable cause" for suspension within the meaning of the said section has been made out. The Letters Patent did not provide the procedure which should be adopted in such cases. It was provided by Act XVIII of 1879, (Legal Practitioners Act). Sec. 13 enumerates a number of "reasonable causes" for which a pleader may be suspended. In the absence of fraud or grossly improper conduct there could be no "reasonable cause." Reference was made to In re Southekal Krishna Rao (1). The Appellant had been amply punished by loss of practice and the circumstances of the case were deserving of a lenient consideration.

IN THE MATTER OF G. KRISHNASAMI AIYAR.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SHAW.—This is an Appeal against an order of the High Court of Judicature at Madras. The order is dated the 28th February 1912. Under that order the Appellant who was a Vakil of the Court was suspended from practice for six months on the ground of professional misconduct.

The circumstances of the case have been resumed in a very careful judgment by the learned Judges of the Court below. Their Lordships only review them further for the purpose of illustrating the one point which appears to them to be conclusive of the present Appeal.

In the year 1907 the present Appellant, the Vakil, was employed to file a Second Appeal in the High Court against a decree of the District Court of South Arcot. The conditions of matters with regard to a Vakil, and his relation to the procedure of the Court which bears upon this case, are set out in sec. 95 of the Appellate Side Rules of Madras. By that section pleaders "are responsible to the Registrar for all translation and printing charges incurred by him on their behalf" under those Rules. To that extent the Vakil must co-operate in the conduct of the suit with the Registrar and with the Court, under these regulations. And they have the other general function, applicable not only to the Bar in general, but to solicitors at large, that they must, in the conduct of all suits entrusted to them, co-operate with the Court in the orderly and pure administration of justice.

In the present case a certain advance was made, or required to be made, in order to enable printing to be done as Court printing. A correspondence accordingly ensued between this Vakil, and his client; and it is a well-founded observation made in the anxious argument presented to their Lordships from the Bar that that correspondence was mainly conducted by a manager and a clerk of the Vakil and not by the Vakil personally. That, however, is not completely true because one of these letters, an important one, of the 8th September 1908, was written by the Vakil himself. Further, the Vakil in the present case, the present Appellant, was, of course, charged with the knowledge that it was necessary, not only that the moneys should be received from his client, but that in common honesty that money should be paid to the Registrar for the discharge of the printing dues. This was not done. Statement after statement is made by the manager and clerk in the course of this correspondence containing a false narrative of what had been proceeding, and constituting a fraudulent deception of the client.

Matters, however, culminated in a visit paid by the client on the 5th March 1909, when a payment of Rs. 28—making up the full amount to which the printing charges had accumulated at that date—was made by the client to one of the clerks in the Vakil's office. The full sum amounted to Rs. 68, that is to say, a payment of Rs. 28 on the spot, added to a previous payment of Rs. 40.

That being done, what followed? The client naturally expected that his case would be proceeded with. He was falsely informed on the 15th July, by a letter written by the clerk, that certain progress was being made. Nothing, however, had been done, on account of the initial withholding from the Registrar of the Court of the whole of the money received from the client.

On the 25th of January matters were in this position: that the case was listed for the following day, the 26th, and, as is admitted in a most fatal document for the Appellant in this case, namely his own affidavit, the Appellant then personally knew of the transactions, in the interim. His knowledge must have included the knowledge that the moneys received for a specific purpose from the client had not been so applied. When the Vakil arrived at the Court on the morning of the 26th January 1910 he was aware that he was accordingly bound, as a responsible Vakil, in honour and in duty to his client, to himself, and to the Court, to explain that the cause, which would in the natural course be dismissed for want of payment of the printing dues, was exposed to this peril by reason of a circumstance for which he apologised publicly to the Court, and expressed his regret. His affidavit, however, is to this effect: "When I reached the doors of this Court it was about a few minutes after this case had been called on and dismissed for default." In short, he makes to the Court below, and at this Bar, an excuse that, being engaged elsewhere, he did not appear to discharge that duty of honour, which on all sides plainly rested upon him. Having made that mistake a further course was open to him, and that was to wait until an interval in any procedure of that Court, or till the Court was about to adjourn, and instantly to make his honourable explanation. He did not do so. He allowed matters to drift for about 18 days, as after mentioned; and the Court below, having considered the excuses put forward for not sooner making application to notify what had occurred, think these excuses to be idle.

He apparently returned to his office, and what did he then do with his staff? His staff by that time had been convicted of most fraudulent and improper conduct in keeping of the client's money, in sending lying letters to a client, and in giving, in the interval, an untrue account of the proceedings in the appeal. This Vakil, who has been acquitted of personal fraud by the Court below, an acquittance with which their Lordships do not in any degree interfere, was guilty of the regrettable conduct of permitting a staff, who had previously been guilty of such deception, to continue in correspondence with his client. It was for him to say whether he should retain such persons in his service, but at all events he was honourably bound to disclose to his client the mishap that had occurred on the morning of the 26th January. Instead of that the staff was continued as before, and on the 28th January the client was written to by Bhashyam in these terms: "Your Second Appeal aforesaid came on for hearing on the 26th instant, and was decided against us, that is the Appeal was dismissed." That implies two falsehoods. The case did not come on for hearing. It was never heard. It was not decided against them in the sense of a decision having been pronounced in foro contentioso. It was dismissed simply in consequence of the improper non-payment of moneys due. Accordingly, so far as the client was concerned, nothing was done to wipe out the mistake which had been made by the Vakil. So far as the Court was concerned nothing was done for a period of about 18 days.

In the interval the client had appeared in Madras, and, no doubt, made his determination plain to have the matter brought before the Court as one at least of mischance. Accordingly an application had to be made, and it was not made until the 14th of the following month of February—an application for restoration of the case to the Roll. Then, the Court apprehending the gravity of the situation, instituted this enquiry. Every conceivable point has been taken against the regularity of that enquiry in the Court below; but at the Bar, where the case was anxiously and ably argued, these points have not been insisted upon. For they were without substance.

The main issue in this case is, what was the conduct, relative to the Court, relative to the client, and relative to his own professional position, which this Vakil perpetrated on or about the 26th January? Their Lordships while not interfering, as stated, with his acquittance of direct and personal fraud, do not see their way to acquit him of conduct in the management of the appeal and of his client's affairs which caused the procedure of the Court to be the very opposite of what all such procedure should be, namely, first responsible, secondly orderly, and thirdly pure. In all these respects there has been a violation of the proprieties which attach to legal procedure.

That being so, the Court made this enquiry. Its powers seem to be those contained in sec. 10 of the Letters Patent creating the Court and containing, in gremio thereof, the rules with regard to Advocates, Vakils, and Attorneys-at-law. Amongst the Rules is r. 10, which empowers the Court in these terms: "to remove or to suspend from practice on reasonable cause the said Advocates, Vakils or Attorneys-at-law."

The sole question which their Lordships have to consider in the present case is: the Court being apprised of the procedure which has been briefly described, can it be said to have acted without reasonable cause in making an interim suspension of the Appellant from practice as a Vakil for a period of six months? Their Lordships think that there was reasonable cause in the present case, and they further think the Court below was justified both in the pronouncement and the extent of the suspension.

With regard to the appeal very properly made by Mr Kenworthy Brown as to his client, their Lordships can only express the hope that in the management by those under him of affairs committed to his charge, he will, in future, see to it, that such improprieties as those referred to do not recur; and, if that is done, there seems no reason to doubt that, after this discipline, he will be able to resume an honourable professional career.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this Appeal should be dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 114, Ors. XLV, XLVII—Review, if competent, of an order refusing leave to appeal—Privy Council Appeal—Value of suit and value of subject-matter of appeal—Interest subsequent to the decree if may be added.

An order refusing leave to appeal to the Privy Council is open to review by the Court which made it.

Where it was found that the subject-matter of the mortgage suit as stated in the plaint even when the interest of six months allowed for redemption was added did not come up to Rs. 10,000 though the amount was above Rs. 10,000 when interest subsequent to that date accrued due at the date of application was added :

Held—That in refusing leave no error apparent on the face of the record was committed, nor was there any sufficient reason for granting a review.

This was an application for reconsideration of an order refusing leave to appeal to the Privy Council in a Privy Council Appeal preferred against the judgment and decree of the Judges Mr. Woodroffe and Mr. Carnduff of this Court, dated the 10th of December 1911, allowing the appeal in Appeal from Original Decree No. 531 of 1908, which had been preferred against a decree of Babu Rajendra Nath Dutt, Sub Judge of Bhagalpur, dated the 31st of August 1908.

The facts of the case material to the report will appear from the judgment.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an application to review an order made by us under Or. XLV of the Code of Civil Procedure. By that order we rejected an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council and we did so upon this ground. The learned Vakil for the applicant, one of the most experienced and eminent Vakils of this Court immediately told us that though the value of the subject-matter on appeal to His Majesty in Council was upwards of Rs. 10,000, still the value of the subject-matter of the suit was not Rs. 10,000 and consequently he could not support the application. The result was, it was rejected.

It is now sought to obtain a review of this order under sec. 114 of the Code and Or. XLVII. It is objected on the part of the Respondent that no such application can be made and for the purposes of supporting that contention our attention has been drawn to a number of decisions in which it has been held that no appeal lies under the Letters Patent from the orders of a single Judge, rejecting an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. Mr. Justice Wilson in a case of Lutf Ali Khan v. Asgur Reza (1) bases this conclusion on the view that the order was not a judgment within the meaning of the Letters Patent. If that be the reason why an appeal does not lie from an order of a single Judge it affords no answer to an application for review.

Sec. 114 of the Code provides, that a party who is aggrieved by an order from which no appeal has been preferred or from which no appeal is allowed by the Code, may apply for a review of the judgment to the Court which made the order, and the Court may make such order thereon as it thinks fit. The order of rejection comes within this description and the application for review is therefore within the terms of sec. 114. I fail to see how it can be said the order of rejection was not an order of a Civil Court; it was under Or. XLV of the Code which is an Act to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the procedure of the Courts of Civil Judicature.

Moreover I would point out in support of this view, that when an application for review is rejected by a Court, other than a High Court, then under Or. XLIII, Rule 1, an appeal lies from such order. I therefore can see in the Code itself nothing to support the view that the order of the High Court under Or. XLV is not subject to review.

The next question is whether the applicant has made out a case for review.

It is now contended that the value of the subject-matter of the suit in fact was Rs. 10,000 or upwards, and that there is an error apparent on the face of the record. But when the facts come to be investigated, it is conceded that even if interest he calculated not only up to the decree, but even up to the end of the six months allowed for redemption the sum of Rs. 10,000 is not reached. In this connection I would refer to the case in Gooroo Persad v. Juggut Chunder (2), where it was stated that "their Lordships must not, of course, be understood to intimate that the Sudder Courts are to give leave to appeal in cases in which the specified amount of Rs. 10,000 can only be reached by the addition of interest subsequent to the decree. Such cases must, in their Lordships' opinion, rest in their discretion:" that is, in the discretion of the Judicial Committee. There were therefore grounds for the conclusion at which the learned Vakil arrived as to the insufficiency of the value of the subject-matter of the suit and it is not made out that there is an error apparent on the face of the record or any sufficient reason for granting the review. If leave to appeal is to be obtained, it must, in the circumstances, be obtained from their Lordships of the Privy Council and not from us.

The application must, therefore, be dismissed with costs, three gold mohurs.

Application dismissed.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The question of law raised in this appeal depends for its solution upon the true construction of sub-secs. (2) and (3) of sec. 178 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908. Sub-sec. (2) provides that "in all cases of suits for the ejectment of a non-occupancy raiyat for non-payment of arrears of rent or for the cancelment of a lease for non-payment of arrears of rent, the decree shall specify the amount of the arrear and if such amount together with interest and costs of the suit be paid into Court within thirty days from the date of the final decree, the decree shall not be executed. Sub-sec. (3) provides that the Deputy Commissioner may for special reasons to be recorded in writing, extend the period of thirty days mentioned in sub-sec. (2). The Appellants, who were the Plaintiffs landlords in the Court below, obtained a decree against the Respondents on the 14th May 1909, which was drawn up in accordance with the provisions of sub-sec. (2) of sec. 178. The tenants made default in the payment of the decretal amount and the result was that on the 29th June 1909, the decree-holders applied for execution by way of ejectment. On the 3rd August following, the judgment-debtors applied for extension of time under sub-sec. (3). That application was granted and the decretal amount as directed by the Court was deposited. The amount was subsequently received by the decree-holders under pro-est. On behalf of the Appellants the validity of the order has been challenged on three grounds, namely, first, that the application for extension of time could not be entertained by the Court executing the decree; secondly, that it could not be entertained after the expiry of the time prescribed by the decree for payment of the arrears; in any event it could not be entertained after the application for execution had been made by the decree-holder; and, thirdly, that time was extended by the Court for reasons not sufficient in law.

With reference to the first ground, it has been urged that a Court executing a decree is bound to execute it as it stands and can in no way alter or interfere with its terms. In support of this proposition, reliance has been placed upon the cases of Mohant Ishwargar v. Chudasama (1), Patloji v. Ganu (2), Bhugwandas v. Haji Abu Ahmed (3) and Mahaprasad Singh v. Surendra Mohan Singh (4). This contention is clearly well-founded, and the proposition admits of no dispute that a Court of execution cannot alter the terms of the decree. In fact, this view was adopted by this Court in the case of Sunkur Singh v. Huree Mohan (5), which turned upon the construction of sec. 52 of Act VIII of 1869 (B. C.), corresponding to sec. 178 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908. But although the argument is well-founded, it is, in our opinion, wholly unsubstantial. The Court executing the decree was the Court which had tried the suit and made the decree. It has not been disputed, and in view of the provisions of sub-sec. (3) of sec. 178 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908, it cannot be disputed that the application could have been entertained by this very judicial officer if it had been described as an application in the suit. It would therefore serve no useful purpose to hold that the application was improperly entertained and it would be an idle formality to send back the case for considerations by the same officer in the course of the suit he had tried. The decision in Thakur Madan Mohan v. Bhikar Sahu (6) is distinguishable, as there the decree was altered in execution by a Court of Appeal by consent of some of the parties and in the absence of other parties prejudiced by the variation. No doubt, as pointed out by this Court in the cases of Rao Baneeram v. Prannath Shaha (7) and Purush Nath v. Krishto Lal (8), a matter of this description ought to be considered by the Court which has tried the suit, because whether or not the order for extension of time should be made in favour of the tenant, depends upon the circumstances of the litigation, that is, upon the circumstances disclosed at the original trial and the events subsequent. It is thus fairly obvious that the order can be made only by the trial Court. But as a matter of fact, in the case before us, the order has been made by that Court; only, it has been recorded in the order-sheet not of the original suit but of the execution case. We are therefore of opinion that effect ought not to be given to the first contention of the Appellants.

With reference to the second ground it has been argued that an application for extension of time under sub sec. (3) of sec. 178 must be made before the time has expired, and in any event, before an application for execution has been presented. The learned Vakil for the Appellants, who has addressed to the Court a very able and forcible argument on this part of the case, has contended that upon the expiry of the time prescribed by the decree, the tenancy is forfeited, and a valuable right accrues to the landlord to re-enter upon the premises: that right, it has been suggested, ought not to be taken away for the benefit of the Defendant who has failed to carry out the order of the Court and has not been diligent enough to make an application for extension before expiry of the prescribed time. But we are of opinion that a narrow construction ought not to be placed upon the terms of sub-sec. (3) of sec. 178. It may be observed that the sub-section does not specifically prescribe the limit of time within which an application for extension of time may be made: in fact, the sub-section authorises the Deputy Commissioner to extend the time even without an application. As was explained by Mr. Justice Banerjee in the case of Bodh Narain v. Mahomed Mossa (9), where a question arose as to the interpretation of sec. 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which corresponds to sec. 178 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908, as ejection for non-payment of rent is in the nature of a penalty of forfeiture, the provision for extension of time for payment to avoid the penalty of forfeiture is a remedial provision and should be construed liberally so as not to restrict the remedy and make it inapplicable to cases to which it ought obviously to extend. It was further pointed out by the same learned Judge that the section authorises the Court for special reasons to extend the period and there is no reason why we should interpolate words so as to limit the power of the Court to make an order for enlargement of time. It is, indeed, conceivable that needless hardship may be caused to litigants if the contention of the Appellant were to prevail. For instance, if the Defendant, by reason of accidental circumstances over which he has no control, finds it impossible in spite of his diligence to deposit the decretal amount on the last day of the prescribed period, he may be driven to make an application for extension of time on the day following by reason of adverse events which he had not foreseen and which made it impossible for him to carry out the direction of the Court. There is no good reason why the section should be narrowly interpreted so as to exclude relief in such a case. We are not prepared to accept the contention of the Appellants, and in the view we take we are supported by the principle which underlies the decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Rajah Ali v. Amir Hossein (10) and Badri Narain v. Sheo Koor (11), which were applied by this Court in the case of Golab Chand v. Bahuria Rammurat Koor (12). We hold, therefore, that it was competent to the Court to entertain an application for enlargement of time under sub-sec. (3) of sec. 178, after the expiry of the period prescribed in the decree in conformity with sub-sec. (2) and even after the decree-holder had applied for execution. The second contention of the Appellants must consequently be overruled.

With regard to the third contention, we are unable to hold that the Court of first instance exercised its judicial discretion improperly. The Court pointed out that the Defendant was a permanent tenure-holder and had offered to the pleader for the decree-holder to pay the money on the 23rd June 1909, some days before the application for execution was made. In view of this circumstance, the Court held that an order for extension might properly be made under sub-sec. (3) and that view has been affirmed by the Judicial Commissioner on appeal. It is impossible for us to hold that there has been such a flagrant abuse of judicial discretion as to justify the interference of this Court, as a Court of Appeal.

The result is that the order of the Court below is affirmed and this Appeal dismissed.

Hindu Law—Stridhan, succession to—Step-sister's son as heir.

A step-sister's son is a preferential heir to a woman's stridhan to the daughter's son of the great-grandson of the great-grandfather of the woman's husband.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 22nd of April 1909 against the decree of Mr. H. E. Ransom, District Judge of Zillah Nuddea, dated the 6th of February 1909.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. B. K. Lahiri and Babus Narendra Kumar Bose, Upendra Nath Bagchi and Hira Lal Sanyal for the Appellant.

Babus Golap Chandra Sarkar and Sachindra Prosad Ghosh for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—This Appeal arises out of an application for probate of the Will of one Adya Sundari Debi who bequeathed her properties to the three Respondents who were her paternal relations and appointed them executors, one of them Charu Chandra being related to her as her half-sister's son. The Appellant, Sasi Bhusan Lahiri, was the daughter's son of the great-grandson of the great-grandfather of Adya Sundari's husband, Ram Kanai Moitra. The Appellant had applied for letters of administration to the estate left by Adya Sundari before the application for probate of her Will was made by the Respondents.

Therefore in the proceedings on the application for probate citation was issued upon the Appellant and he put in a petition of objections contesting the genuineness and validity of the will and also alleging that the estate belonged to Adya Sundari's husband which she had no power to dispose of by will. The learned District Judge held that he was not entitled to oppose the grant of probate and after taking formal evidence of the execution of the will, granted probate to the Respondents. Sasi Bhusan has appealed to this Court.

Before Sasi Bhusan can contest the will he must show that he has an interest in the estate of Adya Sundari. If the estate dealt with by the will belonged to her husband, the grant of probate of the will executed by her, cannot affect the rights of the heir of her husband, and the Court of probate of course has no power to go into the question whether the estate belonged to Adya Sundari or her husband.

It has accordingly been contended on behalf of the Appellant, Sasi Bhusan, in this appeal, first, that assuming that the estate belonged to Adya Sundari over which she had a disposing power, the Respondent Charu Chandra, as the half-sister's son of the deceased, was not her heir in preference to him and, secondly, that citation having been issued upon him, the Court below is wrong in holding that he had no locus standi to oppose the grant of probate.

The question, therefore, arises whether Charu Chandra, as the half-sister's son of the testator, is the heir to the stridhan of Adya Sundari. If he is, then the Appellant Sasi Bhusan has no locus standi to contest the will.

The parties are governed by the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law. The Dayabhaga, in dealing with the succession to the separate property of a childless woman after enumerating certain heirs down to the husband, says as follows:—"On failure of heirs down to the husband, this rule is again provided which Vrihaspati thus delivers, "The mother's sister, the maternal uncle's wife, the paternal uncle's wife, the father's sister, the mother-in-law and the wife of an elder brother are pronounced similar to mothers. If they leave no issue of their bodies nor son [of a rival wife] nor daughter's son, nor son of those persons, the sister's son and the rest shall take their property." (See Dayabhaga, Chap. IV, sec. III, verse 31).

The sister's son is expressly named as an heir in the above text of Vrihaspati and the only question is whether a half-sister's son is included in the expression "sister's son." This question was raised in the case of Dasarathi Kundu v. Bepin

Behary Kundu (1), and it was held in that case that "sister's son" includes a half-sister's son and that under the Dayabhaga a step-sister's son is entitled to succeed to a woman's stridhan in preference to her husband's elder brother. That is a direct authority against the Appellant's contention. In that case the learned Judges, with reference to the translation of the expression 'sister's son' in Vyavastha Darpana as own sister's son pointed out that the author probably used the words 'own sister's son' as contradistinguished from the woman's husband's sister's son, who is the next in order in the table of succession. In the case of Bhola Nath Roy v. Rakhal Das Mukerjee (2), it was held that under the Bengal School of Hindu Law sons of sisters of the half-blood are entitled to succeed equally with sons of sisters of the whole blood to the property of a deceased brother. That case, no doubt, related to the question of succession to a male owner but it is an authority for the proposition that the expression 'sister's son' includes a half-sister's son, and that there is no difference between the son of a sister of the whole blood and the son of a sister of half-blood.

It is pointed out, however, on behalf of the Appellant that the rival wife's son is expressly mentioned as a son in the Dayabhaga (Chap. IV, sec. III, verse 32), and that if it had been meant to include the son of a sister of the half-blood in the expression 'sister's son,' it would have been expressly so stated. But no argument can be based upon this ground. The word 'brother' in the well-known text of Yajnavalkya relating to the succession of a male owner dying without male issue is applicable to a brother of the whole blood as well as to a brother of the half-blood. The fact of being a male offspring of one common parent makes one a brother, (see Srikrishna's Commentary on the Dayabhaga, Chap. XI, sec. V, para. 7—12.) There is, no doubt, a distinction between brothers of the whole blood and those of the half-blood, but the former confers a greater amount of spiritual benefit.

In the case of a sister's son, according to some authorities (see Colebrook's Digest, Book V, Chap. 8, sec. 1), there is no difference in the amount of spiritual benefit conferred by a full sister and a half-sister respectively and therefore they inherit together and although a different view is taken by some other authorities, the above view is "respected and followed." (See Shyama Charan Sarkar's Vyavastha Darpana, 2nd Edition, p. 265). In the Dayakrama Sangraha, Chap. I, sec. X, verse 1, in dealing with the question of succession to a male owner, Srikrishna Tarkalankar says: "According to Acharja Chudamani, the son of the proprietor's own sister and the son of his half-sister have an equal right of inheritance." Srikrishna's recapitulation of the line of inheritance in which a different view is alleged to have been taken and the difference in the copies of the recapitulation were discussed in the case of Bhola Nath Roy (2) cited above and it was there held that Srikrishna's opinion was the same as that of Acharja Chudamani.

As already pointed out, it was held in the case of Dasarathi Kundu v. Bepin Behary Kundu (1); that the half-sister's son is entitled to succeed in preference to the husband's elder brother. Even if the half-sister's son does not stand in the same position as the full sister's son, he is entitled to succeed in preference to the Appellant who is the daughter's son of the great-grandson of the great-great-grandfather of the deceased. The latter, accordingly, is not the heir of Adya Sundari and has no locus standi to oppose the grant of probate. This disposes of the first contention.

The second contention also has no force. The mere fact that it was stated in the application for probate that the Appellant had applied for letters of administration to the estate of the testatrix, and that the Court had issued a citation upon him would not entitle him to come in and oppose the grant of probate if it is found that he has no interest in the estate of the deceased. The case of Chetoo Kurmi v. Rafaram Tewari (3) relied on by the Appellant has no application to the facts of the present case. There the relationship of the caveator with the testatrix was admitted, and the caveator would have succeeded if it had been proved that the testatrix was not a degraded woman. He wanted to cross-examine the witnesses for the Petitioner for probate to show that the deceased was not degraded; his title to succeed depended upon the question whether the woman was degraded or not, he was a party to the proceeding and he had certainly a right to cross-examine the witnesses. In the present case Charu Chander being the heir of Adya Sundari had she died intestate, the Appellant had no interest in her estate and had no locus standi to contest the Will.

The Appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs, three gold mohurs.

APPEAL FROM ORDER NO. 299 OF 1911.

BRETT, J. SHARFUDDIN, J. 1912, 11, April.	}	GANESH CHANDRA ADAK, Judgment-debtor, Appellant, v. BANWARI LAL RAY, Decree-holder, Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 38, r. 6; Or. 21, r. 57—Attachment before judgment—Application for execution dismissed—Attachment if ceases—Second application for execution—Attachment if must be asked for.

An order for attachment before judgment obtained at the instance of the decree-holder subsists after the decree for the purpose not merely of the original application for execution but for purposes of subsequent applications for execution as well.

Where in such a case the original application for execution was dismissed, Held—That the decree-holder might apply for sale of the properties without taking out fresh attachment.

The attachment referred to in the concluding portion of Or. XXI, r. 57 is an attachment made under the provisions of Or. XXI and not an attachment under the provisions of Or. XXXVIII.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 20th of June 1911 against an order of Mr. T. S. Macpherson, District Judge of Zillah Hughly, dated the 30th of May 1911, affirming that of Babu S. Chuckerbutty, Munsif at Howrah, dated the 8th of November 1910.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Provas Chunder Mitter and Monmotha Nath Roy for the Appellant.

Babus Asitaranjan Chatterjee and Jogesh Chandra Ghosh for the Respondent.

The point which has been raised for our determination in this appeal is whether a decree-holder, who has prior to the decree obtained an order for attachment before judgment and after decree has made one application for execution which has been dismissed, can afterwards in execution of the decree sell the property of the judgment-debtor in respect of which the order of attachment had issued without obtaining a fresh order for attachment under Or. XXI, r. 57 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In this case, the decree-holder had applied under the provisions of r. 5 of Or. XXXVIII, C. P. C., and had obtained an order of attachment before judgment. Afterwards, he was granted a decree and put in an application for execution. Subsequently, in consequence of his default, that application was dismissed and another application was made for execution of the decree by sale of the property and this is now the subject of the present appeal.

Both the lower Courts held that the order of attachment before judgment subsisted after judgment had been given and that the order of attachment relieved the decree-holder from the necessity of attaching the property in execution under Or. XXI, r. 57 of the Code not only in the case of the fresh application but also in the case of any subsequent application for execution. The learned pleader who appears on behalf of the Appellant in this appeal has contended that the view taken by the lower Courts is wrong. He has urged that the attachment before judgment can only be taken to enure to the benefit of the decree-holder for the purposes of the fresh application for execution and that, when such an application for execution has been made and has been dismissed for default, the decree-holder is bound to proceed under the provisions of Or. XXI of the Code. He contends that, in such circumstances, r. 57 of that Order would apply and that, after the dismissal of the application, it would be necessary for the decree-holder to take out a fresh attachment as the original attachment would have been brought to an end by the order of dismissal. In support of his contention, the learned pleader has relied on the decision of this Court in the case of Sewdut Roy v. Sree Cantq Maity (1) and the decision of the Bombay High Court in the case of Pallonji Shapurji Mistry v. Jordan (2). The learned pleader contends that because the learned Judge in both those cases held that the attachment before judgment enured and became an attachment in execution, they meant that such attachment enured only for the purposes of the fresh application for execution and for no other. There is, however, no such finding in either of the judgments and we are unable to agree with the learned pleader that that conclusion necessarily follows from the expressions used by the learned Judges who decided those two cases. The learned pleader has also referred us to the decision of this Court in the case of Namuna Bibi v. Roshan Mia (3), and has used as part of his argument, the remarks made by one of the learned Judges who decided that case (at p. 432) with reference to the necessity of closely adhering to the provisions of r. 57 of Or. XXI. We fully agree with the remarks made by the learned Judge in that case, but we do not think that they can be taken to have any application to the present case. The real point is whether an order for attachment before judgment subsists only for the purposes of the fresh application for execution or whether it should be taken to subsist for the benefit of subsequent applications as well. In our opinion, such an order for attachment before judgment must be taken to subsist for the benefit not only of the fresh application for execution, but also for subsequent applications; for otherwise, the whole object for which Or. XXXVIII, r. 5, C. P. C., has been passed would be defeated. If the attachment were to cease after the dismissal of the fresh application for execution, the judgment-debtor would be at liberty to adopt any of the measures to obstruct or delay the execution of the decree which r. 5 of Or. XXXVIII was framed to defeat. In our opinion, the provisions of r. 57 of Or. XXI have no application to a case in which an order for attachment before judgment has been obtained. The attachment referred to in the concluding passage in that Rule is, in our opinion, an attachment made under the provisions of Or. XXI and not an attachment under the provisions of Or. XXXVIII.

GANESH CHANDRA ADAK vs. BANWARI LAL RAY

The result, therefore, is that the judgment and order of the lower Appellate Court are confirmed and the Appeal is dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing-fee at 2 gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

SHIEKH AZIM v. CHANDRA NATH NAM-DAS (1), ABHIRAM DAS v. GOPAL DAS (2) referred to.

These Appeals were preferred against the judgment and decree of G. Gordon, Esq., District Judge of Zillah 24-Per-gunnahs, dated the 14th of December 1909.

The Appeals arose out of applications under sec. 50 of Act V of 1881 made by the several Respondents for the revocation of a grant of letters of administration with a copy annexed of an alleged Will of one Behari Lal Shaha, granted on 22nd June 1909, to his son, the Appellant, Lakshmi Narain Shaha. Behari Lal Shaha had died on 4th Chaitra 1307 leaving him surviving a widow, two daughters and three sons of whom the eldest Sakhi Lal continued to carry on his father's arathdari business in the course of which he became heavily involved in debt. The Respondent Multan in his petition for revocation alleged that he had lent money to Sakhi Lal for the arathdari karbar, that the Will was a forgery and had been propounded by Sakhi Lal in the name of his minor brother, Lakhi Narayan, with the object of saving most of the properties left by Behari from his creditors. The applications for revocation by the other creditors were of a similar nature. The Will in terms purported to give Sakhi considerably less than what he would have inherited if there was intestacy.

The Appellant, Lakhi Narain, objected in each case inter alia that the Petitioner had no locus standi to apply for revocation. The District Judge upon this objection held that although the creditors would not be entitled to special citation, they "undoubtedly came under the head of persons claiming an interest in the estate of the deceased." They would therefore be entitled to oppose a grant and consequently also to apply for revocation upon proper grounds.

Against this order the present Appeals were preferred.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Appeal (No. 16 of 1910) arises out of an application by the Respondents for the revocation of the grant of letters of administration, with a copy of the Will annexed, to the estate of Behari Lal Shaha. Behari Lal Shaha died on 17th March 1901, leaving three sons Sakhi Lal, Lakshmi Narain and Hari Narain, a widow and two daughters. Sakhi Lal had attained majority at the date of his father's death, while the other two sons were minors. Hari Narain died a minor and unmarried. Sakhi Lal carried on his father's business and became very heavily involved in debts. The Respondents, whose firm name is Multan Chand Daga, obtained a decree against him on the Original Side of this Court for Rs. 5,270 and costs, and applied for execution. It does not appear that any property has been actually attached. On 27th March 1909, the Appellant, Lakshmi Narain, alleging that he had recently come of age, applied for letters of administration to the estate of his deceased father, and propounded a Will said to have been executed by Behari

Lal Shaha on 15th March 1901, two days before he died. That Will if genuine would have the effect of depriving Sakhi Lal of a very large share of his inheritance. A grant of letters of administration with a copy of the Will annexed was made to the Appellant on 26th June 1909, and on 20th September 1909 the Respondents applied for a revocation of that grant on the ground that the Appellant was still a minor when it was made, and that the Will was a forgery, put forward solely to defraud the creditors of Sakhi Lal. On 14th December 1909, the District Judge held that the Respondents had a locus standi to contest the Will, and against that order this appeal is preferred. A preliminary objection was taken that no appeal lies against such an order, which is merely interlocutory. We are inclined to think that that objection is well-founded. Sec. 86 of the Probate and Administration Act V of 1881 provides that "every order made by a District Judge or District Delegate by virtue of the powers hereby conferred upon him shall be subject to appeal to the High Court under the Rules contained in the Code of Civil Procedure applicable to appeals." Had the decision been the other way, it would have amounted to a dismissal of the Respondents' petition and would have been equivalent to a decree, in which case an appeal would lie. [See Shiekh Azim v. Chandra Nath Namdas (1)]. In Abhiram Das v. Gopal Das (2), it was held that an appeal would lie under sec. 588 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, against an order admitting a person as caveator under sec. 69 of the Probate and Administration Act. But sec. 588 (2) has not been reproduced in the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, and we cannot find any provision for an appeal which would meet this case. It is however unnecessary to discuss the question further as we are of opinion that the appeal must fail on other grounds. In Nilmoni Singh Deo v. Umanath Mookherjee (3), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee after commenting on the earlier cases remarked, at p. 27, "Assuming that a purchaser (from the heir) can oppose the grant of probate or apply to have it revoked (which their Lordships do not decide) they entertain grave doubts whether an attaching creditor can do so, at least in a case which is not founded on the ground that the probate has been obtained in fraud of creditors." That is precisely the ground on which the Respondents base their present application, as it was in the cases of Shiekh Azim v. Chandra Nath Namdas (1) above cited, and Kishen Dai v. Satyendra Nath Dutt (4). This last case was very similar in its facts to the one before us, but here we have the additional circumstance that the alleged Will was not put forward until 8 years after the death of the Appellant's father. It is only right that the creditors of Sakhi Lal should be heard in the matter of this grant, as their interests are so largely affected by it. We accordingly dismiss this appeal. The Respondents must have their costs. We assess the hearing-fee at 5 gold mohurs. The record should be sent down at once, in order that the proceedings before the District Judge should be continued without further delay.

This Judgment will govern appeals 3, 14 and 15 of 1910, which are also dismissed but as the Respondents in these appeals have not appeared it is unnecessary to make any order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Rule is directed against a decree by which the suit of the Petitioner for value of crops grown on his land by the second Defendant has been dismissed. The Petitioner alleges that in execution of a decree for rent against the second Defendant, he purchased the holding on the 19th May 1911, that he obtained delivery of possession through Court on the 19th August, and that the crops grown thereon by the second Defendant were unlawfully cut and taken away by the first Defendant on the 25th December. His contention is that as the crops were grown after his purchase by the second Defendant on land the title whereof had vested in him, the crops became his property, and he is consequently entitled to the value thereof. The learned Small Cause Court Judge has negatived this claim and dismissed the suit ; in our opinion, the view taken by him is correct and his decree must be affirmed.

It was pointed out by this Court in the case of Mofiz Sheikh v. Rasik Lal (1), that the English law of fixtures cannot be applied in this country as based on equitable grounds. No doubt, under the mediæval English law as laid down in Bracton, whatever is planted, sown or built on belongs to the soil if root has struck ; or as Britton and Fleta put it, if trees are planted or seeds sown in the land of another, the owner of the soil becomes owner, also of the tree, the plant or the seed, as soon as it has taken root. But that has never been the law in this country. On behalf of the Petitioner, however, reliance was placed upon the text of Narada quoted in the case of Mofiz Sheikh v. Rasik Lal (1), where it is stated that if a man has been residing on the ground of a stranger without paying rent and against that man's wish, he shall by no means take with him, on leaving it, the thatch and timber. It will be observed at the outset, that this does not specifically apply to growing crops. It must further be remembered that, in the case before us, the second Defendant must have continued in occupation of the land with the acquiescence of the Plaintiff after his purchase. As already stated, the sale took place on the 19th May ; possession was delivered to the Plaintiff on the 19th August ; the crops were then grown by the second Defendant and remained on the land till the 25th December. During this period extending over many weeks, the second Defendant must have been in actual occupation of the land, although, in the eye of law, possession might have been with the Plaintiff. Neither authority nor principle can be invoked in support of the proposition that merely because the Plaintiff became the owner of the land on the 19th May, and the crops were grown thereon by the second Defendant after that date, the crops as soon as they were grown became the property of the Plaintiff. The view we take is supported by the case of Lep Singh v. Nimar Khasia (2), where, in a suit for recovery of damages for value of the fruit crops taken away by the Defendant from a garden alleged to be in the possession of the Plaintiff, it was held that the fact that the Plaintiff was in possession sufficient to support his title to the damages claimed. In other words, if in the present case, the second Defendant had brought a suit against the Plaintiff, assuming that the latter had by force removed the crops, his claim would have been successful. Consequently, a suit by the Plaintiff against the second Defendant for the value of the crops grown by the latter cannot be sustained. The Plaintiff may possibly be entitled to mesne profits against the second Defendant if she continues in occupation of the land after her title had been extinguished by the execution sale. But there was no claim for mesne profits made in the Court below and nothing in this judgment will affect the title of the Plaintiff to recover mesne profits from any person who may be found hereafter to have kept him out of possession of the land.

The result is that this Rule is discharged with costs. We assess the hearing-fee at four gold mohurs.

TUKARAM BHAT v. GUNGARAM (1), THE MAHARAJAH OF BENARES v. RAM KUMAR (2) referred to.

This was a Rule granted on the 22nd of January 1912, against the judgment and decree of Babu Ram Lal Das, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Purneah, exercising the powers of a Small Cause Court Judge, dated the 22nd of December 1911.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The facts of the case, as laid before us, are as follows:—One Majlis Sahay brought a suit for recovery of certain land over which the Plaintiff had a mortgage. In the end it was agreed that Rs. 300 should be paid by Majlis to the Plaintiff apparently by way of redemption of this mortgage and the Defendant's father agreed to pay that sum in the event of Majlis's default. The Plaintiff, thereupon, gave up the land. The Defendant's father died and the Plaintiff then brought this suit against the Defendant for the recovery of the money. It was decreed by the Court below and the Defendant obtained from this Court a Rule on the Opposite Party to show cause why the decision should not be set aside on the grounds, firstly, that the debt was incurred by the Defendant's father in respect of a suretyship and, secondly, on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to award more than six per cent. interest.

As regards the first point, we see no reason why the Plaintiff should not be entitled to the relief that he has obtained. We have been referred to Yajnavalkya Sanhita translated by Babu Monmotha Nath Dutt, Chap. II, p. 71. It is there stated that "surety is sanctioned in daršana (presentation), pratyaya (creating confidence) and dana (giving). The first two sureties, if their statements be false, must be compelled to repay the money. As regards the other, that is one who undertakes to repay the money himself, if it is not realised from the party, even his sons are to repay the money after his demise." We can see no reason why the suretyship of the Defendant's father should not be regarded as coming within the term "dana." In the foot-note to this section, the word "dana" is thus defined:—"The third form of surety is when a person undertakes to repay the money himself if the party for whom he stands surety fails to do so." It has been argued that the obligation created by this form of surety is not binding on the sons unless the money covenanted to be repaid, was a loan. It is difficult for us to see why the obligation of the Defendant's father in the circumstances we have described above, should be any less than the obligation would have been if the money had actually been lent to Majlis. In Tukaram Bhat v. Gungaram (1), it is stated that Brihaspati recognised four different classes of sureties (1) sureties for appearance, (2) sureties for honesty, (3) sureties for payment of money-lent, and (4) sureties for delivery of goods: and stress is laid on the description of the third class as being sureties only for payment of money lent. Further on however the Judges say: "The texts of Narada and Yajnavalkya recognise three classes of surety obligation only—those for appearance, those for honesty and those for payment," and it is not said that the money to be repaid should be a loan. As we have said, we see no reason why this class of surety should be restricted only to cases in which money has actually been advanced and no case has been shown where this distinction is clearly laid down. The case of The Maharajah of Benares v. Ram Kumar (2) is clear authority for holding that a surety obligation of this nature is binding on the son even when no money has been advanced. We think, therefore, that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge in this respect is right.

As regards the question of interest, it is conceded that six per cent. interest is sufficient.

The Rule will accordingly be made absolute to this extent that the interest is reduced to the rate of six per cent.

We make no order for costs in this Court. Costs of the Court below will stand.

REPORTS (See Index.)

A MISCHIEVOUS AGITATION IS BEING ENGINEERED by some designing people both in this country and in England against the Calcutta High Court. The object of it is not certainly to strengthen the judiciary and to secure equal justice between man and man but on the contrary to deprive it of its independence and to make it in spirit though not in outward form subservient to the executive. This suicidal attack on the High Court is being made for no other reason than that some of the judges of the Calcutta High Court happened to find that certain executive officers had rendered themselves liable in damages because they were of the opinion that the officers had improperly exercised their right of house-search and arrest of private individuals. Their findings have been set aside by the superior Courts and the officers in question have been exculpated. The result of these decisions has made little difference to them but it has put the personal liberty of the Indian subjects and the sanctity of their homes at stake.

THERE IS CONSIDERABLE DIFFERENCE OF OPINION yet, both in legal circles and amongst the general public, as to whether the opinion of the Court of first instance or that of the Court of Appeal is the correct one. But, be that as it may, even blind partisans will have to admit that the judgments of the first Court in both cases were more judicial and temperate in their tone and language than the pronouncements of the superior Courts. Judges, like doctors, often differ and because they do so it would be just as sensible to agitate for all lawyer judges being removed from the law Courts as to cry out for the replacement of qualified physicians and surgeons by quacks in the hospitals. Yet this is the sort of remedy that is being suggested by some designing men and their dupes for the so-called reform of the High Court. It is remarkable that the general public in this country who have very serious grievances in respect of these judgments, though they have criticised the opinions of the Judges concerned, have not said one unkind word about the High Court itself. But the champions of executive irresponsibility have been levelling most malevolent attacks on the High Court because there are to be found on its Benches judges who are not swayed by racial, political or executive bias in dispensing justice.

WHEN REUTER PURPORTING TO WIRE OUT TO India the substance of Sir Henry Prinsep's recent article on the High Court gave undue prominence to his rather inconsequential remarks regarding the Vakil Raj, it gave rise to a general impression in this country that even this veteran ex-judge had joined the group of reactionaries who would, if they could, put an end to the rule of law in India and restore absolutism of the primitive type. Having regard to Sir Henry Prinsep's long and meritorious connection with the Calcutta High Court during which he seldom failed as a judge to do justice or to put right the younger members of the Indian Civil Service of which he was himself a member, we could never persuade ourselves to believe that a judge of such sound common sense and wide experience, and a thorough English gentleman of the good old type, would make any unfair attack on the most popular English institution in India with which he had been intimately connected for the best part of his life.

WE ARE SINCERELY GLAD THEREFORE TO FIND that Sir Henry Prinsep's article is altogether free from the sinister suggestions that have been made from some Anglo-Indian quarters for the reconstitution of the High Court on such lines that the people of this country may never expect to obtain from it any relief against any breakers of the law of that community, be he an official or a non-official. It costs these busy-bodies nothing to give the Government such gratuitous advice, but it would surely cost the Government no end of trouble if this advice were acted upon. The Government is, however, well aware that in the impartial administration of justice lies the greatest security of British rule in India. While the object of these enemies of peace and order, law and justice is to set up racial antipathy in our law Courts, that of Sir Henry is genuine reform and the strengthening of the High Court in its truest sense.

SIR HENRY PRINSEP TRULY POINTS-OUT IN THE first place that the quality of the barrister judges has considerably gone down in recent years. We seldom get in these days men of the type of Sir William Markby, Sir John Budd Phear, Sir Arthur Wilson, Mr. Justice Pigot and many others we can name amongst the barrister judges of the Calcutta High Court. Sir Henry attributes this to the depreciation of the value of the rupee. Formerly 10 rupees were equivalent to £1 sterling, but now 15 rupees go to make £1. No doubt we admit that an Indian judgeship was more attractive to the members of the English Bar in those days than it is now. But all the same we fully believe that the present deterioration in the quality of barrister judges is greatly due to the careless selections that are made for Indian judgeships both by the Government of India and the Secretary of State. We know of instances where much better qualified men of the English Bar have accepted judgeships in the Colonies which carry less pay, prestige and prospects. We are therefore of opinion that if the Government both in this country and in England would discontinue patronage and be in right earnest to give these judicial appointments always to trained lawyers and the best equipped men available, the body of barrister judges on the Benches of the High Courts would before long be as strong and efficient as it once used to be.

SIR HENRY IS, HOWEVER, ON SURER GROUNDS when he says that the pension rules relating to Judges which were introduced about 15 years ago form the most serious impediment to any one of position or standing at the Bar accepting an Indian judgeship. We fully endorse the following remarks of Sir Henry Prinsep in this connection :—

By their short-sighted policy the governing bodies have added another serious impediment to the acceptance of such an office by a barrister in England. They have declared that he shall be superannuated on attaining the age of sixty years, and thus vacate his appointment. This makes it impossible for anyone to accept a Judgeship in India who may be forty-eight years of age unless he deliberately foregoes all prospect of obtaining a retiring pension, for under the existing rules a full pension can be earned only after twelve years of service, of which six months may be on leave. To produce the present situation in its complete aspect the Government has allowed the value of a Judge's salary to be diminished by the shrinkage of its silver currency in which that salary is payable, thus making that office less attractive, and at the same time it has diminished the area of selection from the Bar in England by declaring that sixty years of age shall be the limit of retention of office. Neglect to remedy the first condition may be due to apathy; the second is a deliberate act.

WE HOPE THAT GOVERNMENT WILL TAKE AN early opportunity of removing this serious impediment against men of standing either in India or England accepting judgeships on the Benches of the Indian High Courts. Sir Henry, though himself a veteran member of the Indian Civil Service, with his characteristic frankness, admits that neither the depreciation of the rupee nor the superannuation rules affect very materially the members of the Civil Service who may attain the position of High Court Judges. It is only in special cases where in consequence of compulsory superannuation at the age of 60, service on the High Court Bench falls short of 12 years by a few months, that the hardship is felt since it deprives a Civilian Judge of the special judicial pension of £1,200 a year. But Civilian Judges in any event are entitled to the ordinary service pension of £1,000. Thus it is not any question of pay or pension but one of judicial and legal training that most seriously affects their competency as judges.

THE GREAT PROBLEM OF STRENGTHENING THE HIGH Courts as the final Courts of Appeal in India is most intimately connected with the question of efficiency amongst the Civilian Judges. Sir Henry Prinsep candidly admits that this is the most difficult problem that has awaited solution for many years now and that no reform in this direction is still in sight. The question of securing efficiency amongst barrister Judges is much simpler as it might be attained by more careful selection and by the relaxation of pay and pension rules. Sir Henry very justly describes the disadvantages under which the Civilian Judges have to labour in the High Court in the following terms :—

But it is notorious that the judicial branch of the Civil Service, which supplies not less than one-third of the Judges to the High Courts, labours under great disadvantages from deficient legal education and knowledge of the law of the land in its letter and in its interpretation expressed through the Law Reports, and that on his first appointment to a District Judgeship a member of the Civil Service finds himself now-a-days in this respect embarrassed in his relations with a local Bar which has had advantages beyond his reach. During his previous service as a Magistrate he may have acquired the necessary knowledge and experience of criminal law and practice, and as a subordinate revenue officer he may not be without some experience and knowledge of the complicated revenue system; but in regard to civil law and the practice of his Court he has everything to learn. This has long attracted the attention of the Government of India.

THE LEARNED EX-JUDGE NEXT ALLUDES TO Sir James Fitz James Stephen's minute on this question and regrets that nothing has been done by the Government of India, since 1872, to improve matters in any way. The only change made, namely, that of giving the members of the Indian Civil Service a choice in the early part of their career of selecting either the Executive or the Judicial branch of the Service has, in the opinion of Sir Henry, made matters drift from bad to worse. With considerable justice he remarks :—

His (Sir James Stephen's) recommendations were not accepted, and the only result was the separation of the Civil Service into two separate departments—judicial and executive—under which the prospects of official advancement were so clearly in favour of the latter that candidates for judicial service were few, and as a rule represented the least capable in the Civil Service. And in Bengal at least a long series of local rulers did not hesitate to show their contempt for judicial office, some going so far as to attempt to foist into it men who had been declared incapable as executive officers and who had no other recommendation for entering on a new profession.

WE BEG, HOWEVER, TO DIFFER FROM THE LEARNED writer that the fact that a Judge of the Calcutta High Court may not look forward to any future preferments at the hands of the executive should in any sense be regarded as a grievance. Public opinion in Bengal is strongly opposed to the idea of High Court Judgeships being regarded as a stepping-stone to any executive preferments. The Judges of the Calcutta High Court, true to their Bengal traditions, have been credited to be more independent of the executive than the Judges of other High Courts in India. This certainly accounts for the fact which Sir Henry notices in his article that while Judges from the Madras, Bombay or the Allahabad High Court have from time to time been appointed members of the Council of the Secretary of State for India, it is seldom that a Judge of the Calcutta High Court has been similarly favoured. We consider it a matter of congratulation rather than one of regret that this has been so and we sincerely hope that the practice which obtains in Bengal would before long be adopted in the other Provinces as well.

BY WAY OF CONTRAST TO THE LEGAL ATTAINMENTS of the members of the Civil Service, Sir Henry pays a very just tribute to the Vakil and the District Bar in India. We must however say in justice to the Indian Barristers practising in the Calcutta High Court that they too now claim amongst them a very large number of men of high education and culture acquired not only at the local Universities, but also at some of the leading Universities in England. With but this qualification we fully endorse the following observations of Sir Henry Prinsep :—

All this time there has been a gradually increasing improvement of the capacity of the indigenous local Bar throughout India, attributable generally to the system of education in law in the Indian Universities. As a rule the Indian pleader holding the University degree of Bachelor of Law who has never been out of India has, in the opinion of those competent to judge, higher professional attainments than his fellow-countryman who has become a barrister of one of the Inns of Court in England, and he is certainly a man of better general education and knowledge. Those amongst them who have succeeded to seats in the High Courts have earned reputations which will endure, and men of promise in the future are abundant. Such improvement in the local Bar necessarily demands a corresponding improvement in the attainments of those destined to preside over the superior local Courts—to fill the office of District Judge—and to form the body from which a large proportion of the Judges of the High Courts is drawn.

A VERY SIMPLE REMEDY FOR THIS STATE OF things is obviously to recruit from the Bar a good number of the District Judges. The only means that suggests to us for improving the legal training of the members of the Indian Civil Service is the complete separation of the executive and judicial administration of the country. If this be done, members of the Civil Service may also be usefully employed to try civil cases transferred to them, according to their standing in the Service, either from the file of the Munsifs or from that of Subordinate Judges, whose files are always very heavy and who are a great deal sweated. If an Assistant District Judge is required to do such duties in addition to his Sessions work, when later on he attains the position of District Judge, he is sure to prove an efficient Civil Judge. And a District Judge of such training, when he comes to the High Court, will surely not feel out of his element there. But should District Judges be partly recruited from the legal profession, selections for judgeships of the High Court should also be made from amongst them. Unless such prospect is held out to them it would be difficult to get desirable men from the Bar to take up District Judgeships.

HIGH COURT DECISIONS OF INDIAN RAILWAY CASES. By Mr. M. Tern-venkatachari, 2nd Edition. Lawrence Asylum Press, Madras.

We welcome a new and up-to-date edition of this already well-known and useful work. It gives not only the High Court decisions but also an appendix giving select decisions of some subordinate Courts. The inclusion of the various Railway Acts and other Acts connected therewith such as the Carriers Act, the Fatal Accidents Act, the Provident Funds Act with the latest amendments greatly enhances the usefulness of the work. A work of this kind will not only be found useful by the Railway Administration and by the Railway people but also by the much larger circle of the mercantile public. The cases are well-selected and very appropriately classified. We would however point out to the author that he might have omitted from the title the expression "High Court Decisions" for decisions of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council as well have very appropriately been incorporated in it

For instance E. I. R. v. Kalidas Mukerjee. We would also suggest that references, to this and other cases which are more fully reported in our reports might with advantage have been given. The binding and get-up of the book are also worthy of praise.

With a few notable exceptions, Indian lawyers contributed very little during the last century towards the elucidation of Hindu and Mahomedan legal texts. The task had been left as a rule to English savants, who from their imperfect acquaintance with Sanskrit and Arabic cannot naturally be always taken to be faithful interpreters of those texts. It is satisfactory to note, however, that Indian lawyers are coming forward in increasing numbers to participate in this task. It is also characteristic of the times that Indian readers now-a-days are not content to take any translation on trust, and translators are finding themselves under the necessity of vouching the correctness of their work by publishing the texts along with the translations. The present work is such a combination of original texts and translations. The texts translated deal with the following subjects, viz., Nikah, Guardianship in Marriage, Equality in Marriage, Dower, Marriage of Infidels and Fosterage. A second part is, we are assured, in preparation, and judging from the inscription on the title page, the present publication is the first of a series which is to bear the title "The Mahomedan Law Translation Series." We sincerely hope that the plan contemplated will meet with success, the present need and utility of such publications being beyond question.

SANJIVA ROW'S INDIAN REGISTRATION ACT
(XVI of 1908). By P. Hari Rao, B. A., B. L.,
First grade Pleader, Trichinopoly. Published by

T. A. Venkasawmy Row and T. S. Krishnasawmy
Row. Lawyer's Companion Office, Trichinopoly and Madras. 1912.

This is a fairly complete and up-to-date commentary on the Indian Registration Act. There are besides an instructive historical introduction summarising the progress of the law of Registration in India, and appendices embodying provisions relating to registration contained in other enactments including the Bengal Tenancy Act, but without notes. The portions of the Act as applied to Burma are reproduced in another appendix. The Statements of Objects and Reasons of the Registration Bill of 1908, reproduced in another appendix, a subject-index and tables of cases arranged both according to names and the volumes and pages of the reports add to its utility as a book of reference. The book is handy and handsomely got up.

The publishers of the two volumes of the Acts of the Governor-General in Council issued under the title "All India Civil Court Manual" which were noticed in these columns have followed them up by the present volume in which are collected the Acts and Regulations dealing with civil matters applying to Bengal. Brief notes embodying legal changes effected by amending legislation and giving references to leading cases add to the value of a compilation which from the point of view of mechanical execution is as nearly perfect as a compilation of this kind, intended for general use, can well be. It should be noticed, however, that the Eastern Bengal Council amendments of the Bengal Tenancy Act have not been incorporated in the present volume and indeed none of the very few Acts of the short-lived E. B. & Assam Legislature has been so included. In the absence of an explanatory preface we assume that the volume under notice is intended for Bengal only and that a supplementary collection of Eastern Bengal Council Acts and Amendments would have to be issued to complete it.
